GENERAL CONFERENCE YOUNG PEOPLE ENTER VS

Eight young people from the General Conference Mennonite Church attended the Nov. 29—Dec. 17 orientation school in preparation for entering MCC Voluntary Service.

With the assignment of the 26 volunteers attending this 31st orientation school, there are now approximately 150 young people making Christ known through 21 year-round service projects sponsored by MCC. The large enrollment in this school evidences an increasing interest in Voluntary Service as an outreach of the Church.

The names, addresses, and assignments of the eight General Conference volunteers: James H. Clymer of Blooming Glen, Penn., Maine General Hospital, Portland; Leslie Dyck of Moundridge, Kan., National Institutes of Health, Bethesda, Md.; DuWayne Falk of Mountain Lake, Minn., National Institutes of Health; Merlin L. Krehbiel of Pretty Prairie, Kan., Maine General Hospital; Allan John Niessen of Mountain Lake, Boys Village, Smithville, Ohio; Lavina Ruth Penner of Inman, Kan., Kings View Homes, Reedley, Calif.; Darrel Thieszen of Henderson, Neb., Prairie View Hospital, Newton, Kan.; and Wilmer Wedel of Burns, Kan., National Institutes of Health.

Everything has that mysterious "something" nowadays, whether washing powder or gasoline or vitamin pills or shaving cream or toothpaste — everything has that new added element that no other brand has. This magic X has a wonderful unpronounceable name not yet in any dictionary. We smile, but thousands of gullible mortals will buy truck loads of the hokum and find it no better than something else they fell for months ago.

But there is a secret ingredient that makes one rank of people different from all others. It is not some new religious fad or ism, although these too shout their magic formulas today. There are among us here and there those who have a deep inner peace and joy, "who ply their daily task with busier feet because their secret souls a holier strain repeat."

No double-jointed theological jawbreaker is needed to name that secret ingredient. It is simply the grace of God, peace with God, and the peace of God in the trustful and obedient heart. "His secret is with the righteous" (Prov. 3:32).

The new minister preached the same sermon three Sundays in succession. After the third the church board called on the minister and brought the matter of repetition forcefully to his attention. TO OUR CONGREGATIONS IN USA AND CANADA

Dear Co-workers in our Lord:

With this we would like to call the attention of our congregations to the fact that blind Brother John J. Esau is traveling under the auspices of our Board of Missions. Brother Esau is glad to serve with gospel messages in any church where his services for the deepening of the spiritual life are desired. He prefers to be in one congregation several days, or a week at one time.

Please write us when you wish Brother Esau's services.

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

1. To work for a Conference unified in Christ.
2. To teach the gospel of Christ effectively.
3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

The Board of Associate Editors, with the approval of the Board of Education and Publication, has adopted a set of objectives for the new year as found at the head of this column. This does not mean that other items are unimportant, but rather that here are special needs on which we can think and work together.

We give special attention this week to the first of these objectives, that of working for a unified Conference in Christ. We all realize the importance of this need and we hope that this year we may be brought closer together in our work for Christ and His Kingdom.

A unified Conference does not mean a dictatorship by a small group. It simply means that, under God, we try to find our proper place and work and then unitedly strive toward that end. We have assumed certain tasks which God has given us. For instance, we have made ourselves responsible for six million souls in the mission field in areas which have been delegated to us alone. To meet this heavy responsibility we must work together and unite our efforts to do the best possible work.

There are many other avenues of work to which we have become obligated, such as education, publication, relief, and various types of Christian service. To have a united Conference means that we are unified, not by compulsion or organizations, but in heart and mind by our common tie in Christ in the work He has called us to do.

OF THINGS TO COME

We are glad to offer some special features to our readers in the coming issues of "The Mennonite." As formerly announced, the "Flashes of Thought" column is back. We know many will appreciate this helpful column with its timely and clearly-stated message.

In addition there is also to be a column by Erland Waltner dealing with various matters of special interest which should be especially helpful to young people. Rev. Waltner, as former pastor and now college Bible teacher, is well qualified to share his insights with us.

Beginning next week, and continuing for six months in the second issue of each month, Rev Frank R. Mitchell returns to our pages with his articles on prayer. This time the study will be on the Lord's Prayer. Brother Mitchell has made a long and careful study of the prayers of the Bible and will bring us helpful suggestions in this great power.

At present several of our well-known Conference people are abroad and have promised to share some of their experiences: Rev. and Mrs. Andrew R. Shelly in their world mission tour, and Rev. and Mrs. Walter H. Dyck in their special ministry to South America. Their articles will appear frequently in these pages.

We also hope to continue regularly the "Film Review" feature in each issue to help churches in selecting the better films. Also, under consideration, is a "Counselors Column" where advice may be given on practical problems of life. We hope our readers will profit by these special features.

A CALL TO PRAYER

For many years, the first full week of January of each year has been designated as the "Week of Prayer." In many churches appropriate services are held during this week. This year our thoughts are to be centered on the Person and Work of the Holy Spirit.

With a week's special concentration on this theme and a more careful study of the Spirit's relation to the World, the Savior, the Church, the Christian, the Word, and Revival, we should become more fully acquainted with this Third Person of the Trinity.

Starting a year with a concerted emphasis on prayer is a good way to begin a year, filled with many uncertainties.

A CHANGE IN MISSIONS

The article on building a native church states clearly the trend in our foreign mission work. It is definitely shifting in a number of ways and this trend must be recognized or we "miss our venture." Everywhere around the world there is a growing feeling of nationalism and independence and a desire to be self-sufficient.

The Christian religion must not be thought of as a foreign religion to any country. It is not a white man's religion, nor a western religion, but a universal religion that fits equally well into every race and nation.

Now comes the clear need of planting it deeply into the heart of each nation and allow it to be a real part of that nation and not an imported foreign belief.

We should rejoice that we may gradually turn over more and more of the responsibilities to the nationals in the various countries.

Billy Graham Shares His Experiences With Portland Pastors

HARRY ALBRECHT*

At a special meeting on November 22, 1954, one hundred and fifty Portland pastors listened with rapt attention while Billy Graham explained, step by step, some of the things he has learned in the past four years of his ministry. Listed below are 14 items, greatly condensed, on which he spoke:

1. PRAYER. All the mechanical features of our church program may be without flaw—our preparation, organization, advertising, etc., but unless all of this is thoroughly bathed in prayer, all our work will fall flat spiritually. Dr. Graham pointed out again and again that the success of his meetings was in direct answer to the prayers of literally millions of people around the world. He is completely convinced that if, and when, people pray, God will respond, but only in the same proportion as people pray.

2. Preach the PURE WORD. Underneath their shell of cynicism and suspicions, Dr. Graham discovered that the British people were hungry for the plain PURE WORD of God.

3. Preach the WORD with AUTHORITY. When we preach or teach the Word of God it is not necessary to say, "I think" or "I suppose" or "I hope so." Multitudes are no longer satisfied with what men think, they want to know what GOD has said, and they want to hear it spoken with authority.

4. Preach the WORD with SIMPLICITY. On our way home from hearing Billy Graham in the large Multnomah Stadium in Portland, our children said, "We didn't see anything so spectacular about his message." True. On the following Monday morning Dr. Graham told the ministers of Portland why his messages were plain and simple. He said that the average vocabulary of the man on the street is that of a twelve-year-old in matters pertaining to spiritual and scriptural truths.

5. Preach the WORD with an URGENCY. "Come NOW, and let us reason together." "NOW is the day of salvation."

6. A day by day dependence upon the power and working of the HOLY SPIRIT. To ignore or attempt to bypass the Holy Spirit is fatal to the Christian worker.

7. The importance of our vertical and horizontal RELATIONSHIPS. There must be nothing between "my soul and the Savior," (vertical), but it is also true that if God is going to use us there must be nothing between "my soul and the soul of my fellow man," (horizontal relationships).

8. The Lord's work is a work of FAITH. For two years, the committee that was responsible for bringing Billy Graham and his team to England, worked against great odds. Seemingly all of England was against the committee as well as against the American evangelist. The committee was criticized, ridiculed, and scoffed at unmercifully, yet they believed God for great miracles. God honored their faith.

9. A great CHANGE is taking place. The skeptics are becoming less skeptical. Many of our rank modernists are doing some backtracking. Many are rethinking and re-evaluating some of the fundamental principles of the Christian faith. Many of our colleges and universities, who a few years ago tobooed all religion, are beginning to talk about God and religion. Denominations, who five or ten years ago had no place in their program for evangelism, are today going all out for this type of program. There is a definite trend back to God. Dr. Graham pointed out that, naturally, it has not reached the proportions nor the DEPTH which we would like to see. "What this change or movement should be called, I do not know; I will leave that up to the theologians," Dr. Graham commented.

10. The CHURCH is a divinely established institution. She may have many faults and shortcomings, but no Christian movement should try to work independently of the church.

11. It is important for Christians of all faiths to LOVE one another. In cities where the churches were united, God has worked in a wonderful way.

12. The HARVEST is ripe. In the city of Portland, with its more than 250 churches, a man in overalls gripped Billy's hand as Billy was leaving the hotel and said, "Pray for me, Billy. I was at your meeting yesterday afternoon, but I didn't find God." (Hundreds of others, however, did.) A waitress left a note beside Billy's breakfast plate saying, "Pray for me Billy, I need help. I'm not saved."

13. WORLD CONDITIONS are far worse than the press has told us. Dr. Graham has met with many world leaders in private consultation. Our world political leaders are afraid. Man is able to make a bomb that is capable of destroying one whole continent. Dr. Graham did not elaborate on this point lest he betray the confidence which these leaders have placed in him. He stated that the clouds are very black and they are hanging very low.

14. The importance of HUMILITY. Dr. Graham pointed out that God will bless only as long as we give Him all the glory. "God will not share His glory with anyone," Graham said. The greatest sin that any servant of God can commit is to take credit for something which God Himself brought about. There is no question in Billy's mind where the honor and glory for his success belongs. Only God could do these miracles.

By day, by night, at home, abroad,
  Still we are guided by our God;
By His incessant bounty fed,
  By His unerring counsel led.

With grateful hearts the past we own;
  The future, all to us unknown,
We to Thy guardian care commit,
  And peaceful leave before Thy feet.

Christmas Brings Happiness

WALTER and MARTHA DYCK

"She looks as if she is about to cry," explained the black-robed priest as he held a lighted match toward the face of a statue of Mary, the mother of Jesus. The bats were darting in and out among the relics of former centuries. The dimly lighted museum was in an upper story and toward the rear in the ancient Franciscan church building erected in the 1570's. Pausing before one statue after another, the aging monk related, in what was to us in an unknown tongue, meanings and influences that had come to play upon these pieces of art.

The S. S. Argentina had docked for several hours in San Salvador, Brazil. We had been on deck since 6 o'clock watching through binoculars for the first glimpses of the old city of Bahia, as the city is commonly called. Many passengers flocked ashore to find themselves surrounded by sellers of trinkets, woven baskets, and shoe horns. A fellow passenger always seemed to show up when we needed a guide or an interpreter. Neither the mosaic designs in the sidewalks nor the smells of the crowded beef, fish, and fruit market made the most lasting impressions. It was the expression, "She looks as if she is about to cry" that stuck with us. Mary "about to cry" is true to history, but not the lasting impression we have of her. She looked toward Christmas with "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior" (Luke 1:46-47). She was not only at the cross but also at the empty tomb. We were happy to be a part of the Protestant movement away from crying. There is joy in a victorious faith. Our guide handed a coin to the beggar as we left the front door. We looked back at the gold plated interior before we continued our way. How we would like to have said, as Peter once did, "What I have I give unto thee."

A few days later in Rio de Janeiro we were walking up the Rio Branca Avenue when we were arrested by the strains of "O Come All Ye Faithful" and "Silent Night." A Santa Claus dressed in a bright red shirt and wearing a white beard and hair, stood high on a truck as he waved gaily. A milling mass of humanity in the heart of this city reminded one of larger cities in North America. By noon we had ascended Corcovado Peak where, 2,000 feet above the city, the statue of Christ the Redeemer stands with outstretched arms looking over the city and harbor, pleading, as it were, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." Visible from miles around, unless shrouded in the clouds, Christ is admired but little heeded by the shoppers in the streets, the bathers on the miles of beaches nor the sailors on the docks. Quietly pleading stands the Christ of Corcovado!

By 6 o'clock, we were aboard a two-motor plane for Sao Paulo. Rising above the beautiful harbor, around Sugar Loaf Mountain, we were soon above the clouds, watching the sun as it put itself to sleep on the fluffy pink blankets spread out for it. Turning in from the big coffee port of Santos we soon sighted Sao Paulo and were greeted by a sea of lights from a city of nearly three million. The lights of the great International Exposition, now in progress, were especially clear. Brother A. J. Dick met us at the airport and took us to the MCC home, where we were guests for two days. The Dicks have no children of their own, but the Lord has given them up to fifty girls who come in and out of this haven of rest.

The fathers and mothers of these girls live in Curityba, Witmarsum, or as far away as Paraguay, and other Mennonite settlements. Once a week, on Thursday afternoon and evening, (most girls have their half-day off on that day) they gather at MCC home to relax, sew, wrap Christmas packages, write letters and cards, ask father to get tickets for their next trip home, or confide in mother about the trying experiences of being laid off or misunderstood. These girls work in scattered locations throughout the city. Wages are low but much better than at home. So they come—as young as seventeen years—to face a hard world of competition. They work long hours and often under trying conditions. Thank God for these understanding "Haus Eltern" who take them into their heart and home!

It was a joy to see them come and go on shopping trips to the nearby Villa Marianna shopping district. Happy to "be at home" for a few hours. In the evening Brother Peter Klassen, who had just returned from Germany with his wife, shared in an evening service with us. He told of his experiences during the past six months. We showed pictures of farm, home, and church life in the States, also a missionary challenge illustrated with pictures from Hopiland in Arizona and our new field in Japan. I spoke on 1 John 3:1, "That we should be called children of God." There was joy at MCC home in Sao Paulo that night. Many a lonely father or mother hundreds of miles away was happy, too, that their girl can meet with others of like faith to rejoice in Christ the Savior.

Not "She is about to cry" but "She is happy in her Christian faith." Pray for our girls working in large cities of the world. You can share in this blessed ministry!

God willing, we shall write you again after we have visited Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Let us be diligent in Thy service, O Lord, day by day. Let all labour be our delight, which is for Thee; and all rest weary us which is not in Thee; and may every undertaking be begun, continued, and ended in Thee; to the glory of Thy holy Name. Amen.

Church Music Conferences

RUTH BIXEL*

Music and religion are inseparable. The steady, syncopated beat of the drums in pagan religions meets its desired intent. The music becomes intoxicating and the players as well as the listeners finally lose control over their minds and bodies. The sublime music of the church on the other hand, motivated by the greatest of all forces, attains its purpose, too: a devotion to a living God, and a dedication to that which is honorable and noble.

In the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries the attitude of theologians toward the arts was that their function was to serve in the worship of God. The wealth of sacred music from composers such as J. S. Bach was the result of this thinking. During the Protestant reform movement, with its emphasis upon a more personal and evangelical religion, the arts were almost totally removed from the church and so very little religious music was written during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Happily there has been a return to religious music, both vocal and instrumental. There is a wealth of good choir and organ music being written today as people realize again that music is an integral part of the church. Realizing the import of music in the church, music leaders, and clergy as well, have become increasingly aware of its possibilities but are also conscious of the limitations due to inadequately trained personnel in their congregations.

The purpose of this article is to encourage and offer suggestions for the developing of a music program so that it can be of the greatest possible use in the church. Various Mennonite churches and communities have sponsored music conferences for choir directors, clergy, and laymen. The following paragraphs are mere suggestions but I trust they shall lead to some thinking and perhaps you will want to sponsor a music institute in your church this winter or next summer. Five different classes are being suggested.

1. Song leaders. Not only choir directors but choir members, directors of youth organizations, and progressive Sunday school leaders would give a ready response to such classes. I have found a course in techniques of directing, study in tone production, and hints on choir decorum to be of great value to the choir member.

2. Choral directors. Choral directors are always in search of service materials, and need to be encouraged in their choice of music which will meet their own particular choir needs and interests. One such conference committee selected nine voices to prepare material and sing the numbers for the group. If a number of churches would participate in such a program, one or two singers might, to best advantage, be chosen from the various churches represented. Another conference had a panel discussion on Standards for the Selection of Church Music.

3. Youth choir leaders. A study of the techniques and procedures used in the organization of youth choirs, selecting music, and conducting rehearsals are of great help to inexperienced choral directors and music committees. If feasible, I would like to recommend a workshop in this connection or at least one demonstration of a rehearsal by a competent director.

4. Organists. An organist must play hymns sympathetically and know how to support the congregation. A student may have been well trained in playing of recital music but feels his inability to lead the congregation in singing. A freshman student in seeking words to express her appreciation for a certain organist said, "I can understand her playing." The tendency among inadequately trained accompanists, especially players of electronic instruments, is to slur over notes, blurring the individual parts of a hymn instead of giving the moving parts clarity and distinction. Precision in playing inspires a congregation to sing enthusiastically.

5. Laymen. This group is in the majority and is the most essential body in any worship service. The choir may sing without the aid of a director, and the church can get along without an organist but of what value is a planned ministry with no one in the pews to listen and to take part in the service? We must provide several sessions of the church music institute for this most important group of people. Music and religion go hand in hand so a study of the changes in music in the history of the Christian Church would be of great worth. People are always interested in the backgrounds of hymns. References to hymn writers make a song much more significant. Panel discussions on topics submitted by members of the church might prove to be of interest and also be informative. This would be a good place to learn new hymns and sing the old ones with more meaning.

Some churches and schools have found three-day conferences desirable; others prefer two evenings a week over a longer period of time. A six-weeks' program with several evenings a week has its advantages not only in the number of hours spent, but also in the time involved for preparation. A combined choir program, of the participating churches, would make an effective culminating activity for a music conference.

I feel that a music program such as suggested above would contribute a lot to the morning worship service and would help promote a better relationship between all peoples concerned, if conducted by personnel who are musically prepared and who also have a warm understanding of the function of music in the church.

The writer would be interested in hearing from churches which have sponsored music conferences or study groups.

For the Sake of Clarification

Quite a few in our General Conference constituency ask us for clearance on the situation of leprosy organizations. As a Conference we have four areas of leprosy work in the world. These four are: Champa, India; Kamayala, Belgian Congo; Cachipay, Colombia (with children of leprous parents); and the new venture not far from Asuncion, Paraguay, which is mainly with the MCC. In our leper colony in India, Rev. Aaron Jantzen is the superintendent, and Dr. Arthur Thiessen is heading the medical department in this asylum. In Kamayala leper home, Miss Erma Birky is at present the superintendent. In Cachipay, Colombia, Rev. Gerald Stucky is superintendent and Miss Janet Soldner, nurse in charge of medical work. In Asuncion, (Barrio Grande) Dr. John Schmidt is in charge.

These four areas are listed as recipients of aid from the American Leprosy Mission, Inc. We are responsible for supplying personnel as well as all finances which do not come within the exact scope of the work of the American Leprosy Mission. We as General Conference have cooperated with the American Leprosy Mission, Inc., since 1904, when our senior brother, P. A. Penner, started leper work in India. This means that we have carried on this cooperative work with the American Leprosy Mission, Inc., for 50 years, and we still work together with this organization in the care and treatment of those suffering with leprosy.

Of late years another leprosy mission has been organized, called: International Christian Leprosy Mission, of which Mr. Etter of Portland, Oregon, is the secretary and Rev. Peter Peters, a member of one of our General Conference congregations, one of the intinerating secretaries. We have nothing against this new organization; but as a Conference, we have our duty toward the four leprosy areas entrusted to us, which are mentioned above.

David and Saul, 16 mm. Color, 12 min. Producer: Moody Bible Institute, 820 N. LaSalle St., Chicago 10, Illinois. Rental, $6.00.

This is the first in a series of Bible films which are being produced by Moody Bible Institute. The film sets up a pattern which is being followed in the succeeding films. A group of junior boys get into trouble, and one of them comes into the shop of Andy Fixit who specializes in fixing broken things. The particular problem of the moment becomes the setting for the telling of a Bible story in which the Bible characters are in a similar situation.

In this film Timmy comes into Andy Fixit's shop and threatens that he will get even with each member of his gang. Andy then tells the story of David

Flashes of Thought

Just an Old Annual

WALTER GERING

There it was, black on white; a word which stood out where all could read it as they passed from one exhibit to another. It was written in fun, to be sure. No one had ever intended that it should be taken seriously; certainly not that it should be accepted as the final verdict upon her life. Nevertheless, there it was—a character sketch to be read on down through the years.

We were absorbed in the books, letters, and numerous awards which were on display in the museum Since we had only a short time at our disposal we could not take the time to read all the descriptive notes beneath the items. But this one had attracted our attention; it was a page from an old high school annual. Somewhat faded with age and worn from frequent use, yet its pictures stood out amidst the pages under the glass of the case. There is something about an old high school annual which fascinates all of us. Those little character sketches, summarized in a few sentences, made good reading. So it was that almost instinctively we paused to read the open page of this annual.

I could not get over the words underneath the photo. Surely the editors would never have written those words had they known that they would be read by thousands of visitors as they paused at the glass case. But there they stood in bold outline: "———— must be heard and she must always have her own way." What a reputation to bring down through the years.

Years have passed since that high school annual made its first appearance. What happened to this one who was thus characterized as a senior in high school? Did she ever live down that reputation? Was her life in years to come a testimony to the fact that she was wrongfully portrayed? I do not know; no further word appeared in the papers of the museum. Evidently she quietly lived her life on down through the years.

Strange as it may seem, on the same page of the old annual was the photo of another senior. Underneath his photo was another character sketch. They called him "the little Ike." While the one remained unknown, the other—the "little Ike"—became the President of the United States, acclaimed by all the world as one of the great men of his day.

As we enter a new year we might well ponder the words of the old high school annual: "———— must be heard and she must always have her own way." Could this perchance be said of our own lives as we close the old year and begin the new?

On Building a NA

LUBI

Some of India's leaders have said that Christianity is foreign to India. The Church is not Indian. Therefore it has no place in New India. Are they right? The essence of the problem of "indigenization" therefore resolves itself to this: How may Christian witness begun and carried on by churches of the West, now be made native and take root to continue effectively in India, without aid from the West, in the shortest possible time? This pressing problem faces us today. Much of the future—either progress or destruction—of all our past labors, depends upon our solution to this problem.

To make a church indigenous consists of much more than a shift of personnel from foreign to national. It involves much more than the question of who supplies the funds. It requires a church in India which has a deep experience with Christ, and a consequent transformation of life and character. It demands strong spiritual life and a clear Christian vision. It rests on utter faithfulness in ethics and morals, and a deep consecration of self and substance to the Savior and Head of the Church. And besides this, a clear understanding of each other and a binding together by a bond of Christian love between the church in the West and her sister church in India is indispensable. And all this is now being asked—almost required by world conditions—of us and the church in India, within an undefined but pressing time limit. Can it be done?

To think that this can be easily accomplished is a sheer illusion. Yet our faith is not ready to permit us to say that it cannot be done. Has not Christ said: "I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it" (Matt. 16:18)? Is not the exhortation of Paul (Col. 2:6, 7) to those who have received Christ Jesus the Lord, that they shall "walk in him" and be "rooted and built up in Him, and established in the faith"? We believe that by His power and His guidance much can be done.

Much heart searching has been done, especially in the past four or five years, to know the Lord's will in how we shall proceed. Our thinking in India has been led to consider this in two general spheres—the spiritual and the organizational or material aspects. They are closely inter-related, but for purposes of action are thus classed.

Spiritual Aspects.

For the spiritual strengthening of the church we have continued and intensified all efforts at Bible teaching. Our annual six-weeks Bible course in all our churches has been important in this, and is increasingly so now. In 1953 an intense campaign was carried on to get a Bible into every Christian home. Within one year almost 200 Bibles were sold to people of our church. This year the emphasis is on daily devotional use of the Word of God in every home.

Helps and literature for use of pastors and teachers in their own life and preparation of messages are receiving much attention. A Christian Book-Club by which these leaders may receive a new Christian book every quarter for their own library, has been begun, and is being increasingly utilized. For the production of more Christian literature, a young man has been sent for a year of special training at Hislop College, Nagpur. Let us pray much for the production and use of all types of Christian literature. We have hardly touched the fringes of its possibilities.

In parts of India, the conditions of 1954 have been those of stress and testing, even persecution in cases, for many Christians. Is the Lord sending this to help to strengthen the faith of His own, and thus help them in being rooted and grounded in Him? Testimonies of many converts before high officials in the Investigating Committee of the Government give evidence of a vital Christian experience, and a deep faith.

There comes a call from our sister churches in India, saying, "Brethren, pray for us." They are beginning to realize what is before them, and to know their inadequacy to meet the need, in themselves. We can still help them in many ways, but certainly one of the really important avenues is by fervent, definite, and continual intercession. There is power through prayer. Let us rededicate ourselves to it.

Organizational and material aspects.

We may be prone to succumb to the fallacy that real indigenization lies here. I think we might better consider these aspects as the result or outgrowth of the spiritual. To put organization and finances first may prove fatal, if thought of alone, without an even stronger spiritual counterpart. But they must also follow, lest there be stifling of real growth.

One of the important factors which in India needs changing is that of leadership. Historically, the leadership and initiative in our Christian work in India has come largely from the sending churches. In an indigenous church, this needs to be drastically changed. Those who heretofore followed or acquiesced, now need to be privileged and encouraged to lead out, to plan, and to envision. Similarly, those who formerly led need graciously to take a second place, of a companion, helper, and even follower.

Since 1942, changes have been made to develop and utilize national leadership in three important phases of Christian work, namely, the shepherding of the local congregation, the evangelistic outreach, and the primary schooling of children. Whereas in 1942 we had only one or two nationals as ordained pastors, we now have Indian pastors in each of our eleven congregations. Nationals had a large part in planning and carrying on the evangelistic work, as well as the primary schools.

Now, in 1954, it is proposed to remove the one main control which the mission had in these areas, namely the appointment of missionaries as supervisors of the work. The proposal is twofold: First, that the Church Conference in India shall hereafter make all such appointments, and Second, that either nationals or missionaries may be appointed.

Furthermore, the sending of missionaries to date was mainly agreed upon by the Mission Conference in India, and the Board of Missions. Now, it is proposed that a great part of the initiative for overseas personnel shall rest with the Indian Church, to call and to recall them. Thereby the relationship between the church in India and the Board in America will change. In turn, the position of the missionary will also change, especially as to how far he may be held responsible for the work, and the funds for it. This change will require much patience and wisdom, especially in the transition period.

Another important factor needing change is that of property and finances. To date the mission has purchased and holds possession of practically all real estate, buildings and equipment for churches, schools, hospitals, and housing of the majority of staffs, both national and foreign. The present economic status of the church precludes any thought of purchase, at even nominal prices, of any of these properties. Yet there has been continual and insistent urging on the part of government and Indian Christian leaders that these properties, or at least the major part of them, should be held in India, and not in America. Therefore, in 1953 the mission proposed to transfer all church buildings, primary school buildings, and cemeteries to the India Church Conference. The church has accepted this proposal, but two difficulties have arisen to delay its accomplishment. The first is the high rate of tax duty in such transfers. The second is a growing reluctance on the part of the Church Conference to receive many valuable properties for such a small body, lest they become a cause of dissension. A cooperative holding body or Trust is desired to help avoid any such losses. Formation of such a trust is not yet complete, though some endeavors have been made.

The problem of finances for an indigenous church is a difficult one. In 1953, for instance, less than 10 per cent of the total outlay for the entire work represented by church and mission was supplied by funds raised in India, including the fees charged for medical services in our hospitals. If our Indian brethren should be suddenly asked to assume the remaining 90 per cent they would obviously throw up their hands in despair. The economic status of the majority of the church members is still only a bare subsistence level.

The aim adopted to date, therefore, has been only at supporting a part of the work, such as support of the local church and its pastor, and some share in the evangelistic and primary school costs. Partly because of finances, the present program of shifting to unpaid lay evangelism has been introduced, but it is also bolstered by the hope that this may be more effective in reaching out, in the long run, than the paid evangelism plan was, and avoid some of its evils as well. Efforts at teaching and practicing real Christian stewardship and giving have been intensified, and are going on constantly. Its difficulties in accomplishment are well known to all of us.

The most acceptable alternative to entire indigenous support, to my knowledge, is continued, long-term aid through funds from the older churches in the West, as long as that is possible. Should that be forcibly cut off in the future, a serious reduction in the work of schools and hospitals will almost undoubtedly result, with a strong likelihood that some of these would sooner or later be operated by others, such as governments, or those of other religious groups.

Clearly, then, we have not arrived at an indigenous church, or native church, in India by any means. But I think we can say honestly, that we have begun, and on sound principles. Perhaps the most critical time, for us in America in fostering missions, as well as for the younger churches in becoming indigenous, is still ahead. Let us dedicate ourselves to the task anew, unreservedly, and go on by His grace and strength, for Christ's glory to serve Him in building His Church.

Report of Eastern District Conference

The first annual Eastern District Missionary Conference was held from Nov. 19 to 21, at the Zion Mennonite Church, Souderton, Penn. Challenging messages were brought by all the missionaries who participated. A heavy fog hampered attendance at the Friday and Saturday sessions, but Sunday was clear and cold and the sessions were well attended. Rev. Ward Shelly, president of the Eastern District Conference Home Mission Board, stated the aims of the first annual affair: "If because of this conference, one young man or woman dedicates his or her life to God and the mission field, then the conference will be more than successful." The theme of the conference was "Christ for the World" and many souls were stirred as the missionaries unburdened their hearts in telling of the needs of the field. Musical selections were brought by churches of the district. Because of this convention and the mission conferences to come, there will be an increase in prayer and giving and also in going for the cause of Christ and missions.

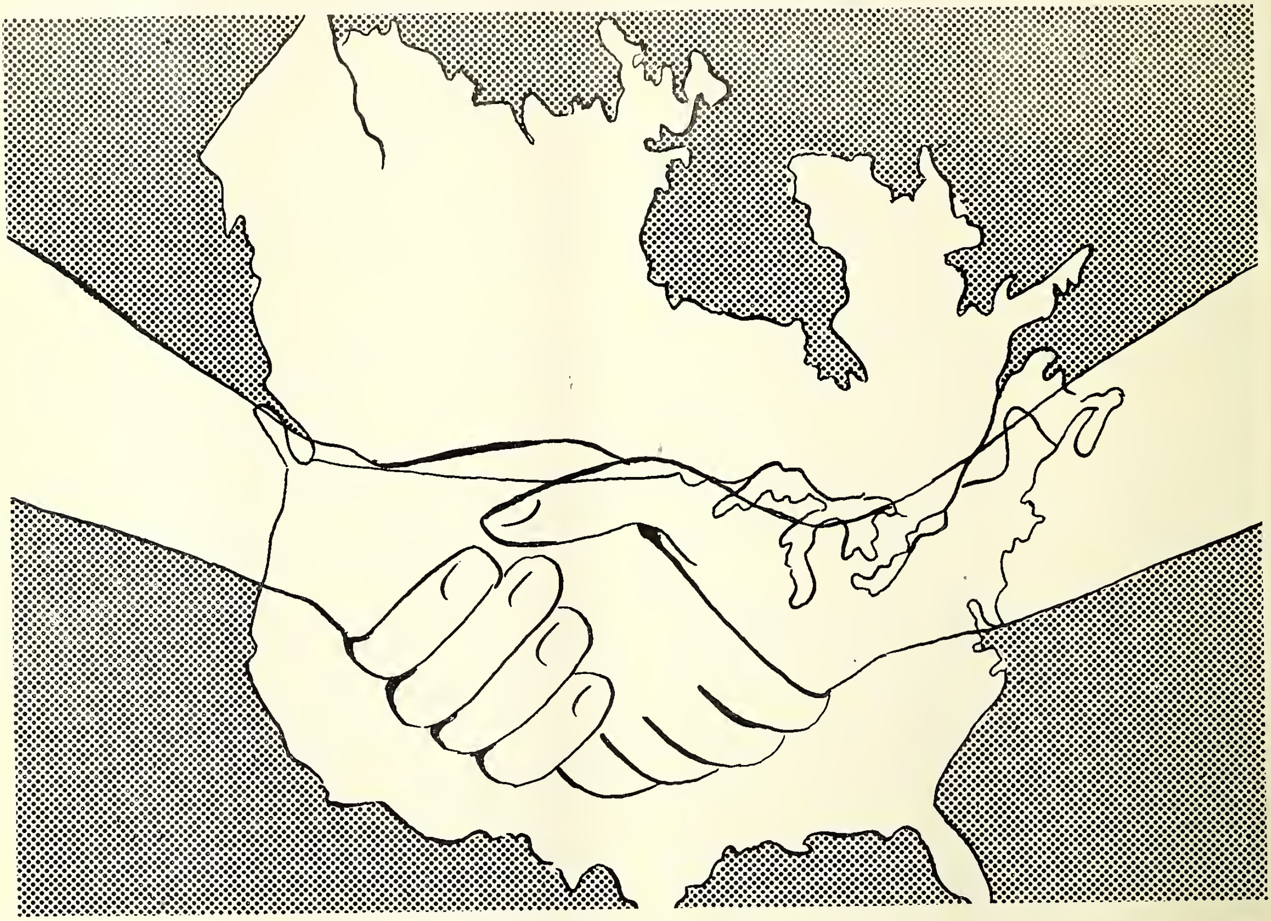
Mennonite Youth

Sponsored by the Young People's Union of the General Conference, Editor, Lois Duerksen, North Newton, Kansas



A Word from the President

The pioneer missionary, William Carey, lived with this motto in mind: "Attempt great things for God; expect great things from God." That's a good motto for youth.

The spirit of our recent council meeting in Newton reminds me of that thought. We faced some hard decisions. "Is this the time to call a full time youth worker? We need his services but can we also support him? At the same time can we complete our M.E.F. project and see Jakob Duerksen through college and back to Paraguay?" Those are some of the questions we wrestled with. In the spirit of prayer and faith the council sought the guidance of God. We felt led to call Bill Gering as our youth worker, to press on toward the completion of the M.E.F. project, and to continue our publications. We moved to "attempt great things for God" and also to "expect great things from Him."

In this coming year we need each other. I invite you to join hands with the other young people of our Conference for a new attempt—a new attempt to pray more faithfully, to give more enthusiastically, and to witness and serve the risen Christ more energetically.

"Attempt great things for God; Expect great things from God."

YPU Council Meeting in Newton

The annual council meeting of the Young People's Union met in North Newton, Kansas, on Monday and Tuesday, Nov. 29, 30. Every District Conference youth organization was represented. Representatives were also present from the following schools: Bethel, Bluffton, Canadian Mennonite Bible College, Freeman Junior College, and Rosthern Junior College.

Several major decisions were made at this year's council meeting. The YPU moved this year to call William "Bill" Gering as a full time youth worker, beginning May, 1955. Bill Gering has served as part time youth worker during this past year, while also attending Mennonite Biblical Seminary. During this year he has made extensive youth contacts throughout the Conference at retreats, workshops, and local meetings. He will continue on a part time basis until May, 1955, when he graduates from seminary.

The YPU also committed itself to complete the present Missionary Education Project, namely, the support of Jakob Duerksen at Bluffton College. Jakob graduated from the Canadian Mennonite Bible College (Winnipeg) and will complete his A.B. degree at Bluffton in the summer of 1955. After that, he and family will return to Paraguay where he will teach.

YPU council members

The YPU also made plans to continue the preparation and distribution of Prayer Calendars. The calendar for 1955 is being prepared in Canada by Mr. and Mrs. Peter Koehler. It will be in the form of a small folder which can be conveniently kept in the Bible. For the coming year the Program Helps, which have previously been printed separately in quarterly editions, will be included in the Youth Section of "The Mennonite." Each month one edition of the Youth Section will be devoted to program suggestions. This will be an experiment for one year. The reason for the change this year is in part due to reasons of economy.

YPU council at work

Work has also been begun toward the preparation of separate manuals for leaders of the Christian Faith and Life, Christian Fellowship, and Christian Service Areas. The YPU area chairmen have already prepared initial manuscripts for such manuals. Gordon Dyck, whose term expired this year, was reappointed as chairman of the Christian Fellowship area.

The YPU also moved to express its concern over impending UMT legislation.

A new budget of $7,400 was adopted for the coming year. The treasurer reported that as of October 31, 1954, the YPU had received a total of $5023.04 toward this year's budget. The new budget for 1955 is as follows:

Eden Workshop

On Saturday and Sunday, November 27 and 28, the Eden young people were hosts to a Youth Fellowship Workshop. This workshop was held at the Eden Mennonite Church at Moundridge, Kansas, for youth leaders of the local church and the surrounding churches, as well as representatives of the YPU council.

The theme of the workshop was "Youth in Action for Christ." The purpose of the workshop was: (1) To inspire personal faith in Jesus Christ, to promote the desire to witness and serve others "in the name of Christ," and to cultivate Christian fellowship. (2) To demonstrate how a local youth fellowship can operate—provide actual experiences in areas of Christian Faith, Fellowship, and Service. (3) To discuss common youth problems with the attempt to find real answers. (4) To orient youth with the program of District and General Conference YPU.

The workshop was under the leadership of Bill Gering. Area discussion leaders were Frank Epp, Faith and Life; Leola Schultz, Service; and Gordon Dyck, Fellowship. Ernest Lichti, minister of music at the Eden Church was responsible for the choir. Other resource leaders were Rosemary Linscheid, YPU Secretary-Treasurer, Lois Duerksen, Henry Funk, YPU Vice President, Harris Waltner, and the speaker for Sunday evening, Leo Miller, pastor of the Goessel Mennonite Church, Goessel, Kansas.

Registration was begun at 8:45 on Saturday morning. Following the devotional opening there was an introduction of the workshop by Bill Gering. After this there were the usual discussion periods followed by group sharing, singing, and lunch.

The afternoon was devoted to group planning for such things as the service projects, recreation, and the Saturday evening devotional service. The afternoon assembly consisted of a radio interview type of thing, a program entitled, "It's Time You Knew." Master of Ceremonies, Bill Gering, interviewed members of the YPU cabinet and some of the local young people. The purpose of the interview was to help the listeners get acquainted with the work of the YPU.

Saturday evening was given to recreation planned by the Fellowship group and a devotional period planned by the Faith and Life group.

Impressions of Workshop

Having attended the workshop held at the Eden Church I feel that it is definitely a progressive step toward more extensive Christian Service and Christian Witnesses among our Mennonite youth. I was greatly impressed by the number of our young people who are really interested in the spiritual aspect of life. Young people who are really concerned about the extension of Christian Service, Christian Witness, as well as Christian Unity among the youth of our General Conference to further God's Kingdom here on earth.

We had very interesting discussion groups on the threefold emphasis program of the YPU. After lively discussion we experimented on each of the phases of our program. I feel that a workshop such as this is what we need to stimulate Christian activity among our youth. If everyone who attended this workshop will, after having returned to their respective churches, put to practice what we have learned everyone in the church as well as others will be greatly blessed and greatly benefited by such a Christian youth program.

—Leonard Goering

This being the first workshop I ever attended, I can truthfully say I learned a great deal. Some of the things I learned at this workshop I plan to take back to our youth fellowship. I sincerely enjoyed the workshop, especially the helpful information that I learned. I think the General Conference is carrying on an excellent program for youth, and they are to be complimented.

—Dorothy Galle

Sunday afternoon was the time when the young people went out for their service projects which consisted mostly of visitation work. Following this they returned to make an evaluation of their projects.

The theme of the evening service was "Ye Are a Chosen Generation." It was at this service that the workshop choir showed what a few hours of good practice can accomplish. Several of the workshoppers gave their impressions of the workshop. Rev. Leo Miller concluded the service with a message to the young people.

Our Schools

BETHEL COLLEGE

The college faculty and staff played host to the students at the annual Christmas banquet held Friday evening, Dec. 10. It was an evening of festive informality featuring orchestral dinner music and the impromptu singing of Christmas carols. Miss Honora Becker served as toastmistress and Pres. D. C. Wedel spoke briefly on "The Meaning of Christmas." At 7:30 the group retired to the college chapel for the Christmas concert by the vocal ensemble under the direction of Elvera Voth. The program featured by this popular group included Christmas carols from a number of different lands.

On Sunday evening, Dec. 12, the Newton Community Chorus and Orchestra presented its 27th annual rendition of Handel's "Messiah." Dr. Walter H. Hohmann, head of the college music department, has been conducting this traditional event since its inception. Soloists for this year's presentation were Ruthabel Rickman, soprano; Virginia McClelland Ehwa, alto; Leon Wagner, tenor; and James Fudge, bass.

Harry Martens chaired the morning meeting of the Missouri-Kansas Business Officers Meeting in Kansas City, on Dec. 9.

The college vocal ensemble has fulfilled a busy schedule of concerts for the month of December, meeting engagements as follows: Dec. 2, Halstead Mennonite Church; 3, Arlington Mennonite Church; 5, Goessel High School; 6, Jaycees Janes Banquet; 8, Canton Study Club; 9, Junior Reading Circle, Senior Reading Circle; 10, Home Concert, Bethel College Chapel; 12, West Zion Church, Moundridge; 14, A. A.U.W. Banquet; 14, Men's Brotherhood, Evangelical Church; 14, Rotary Club Banquet; 17, Methodist Church, Newton, and 19, Topeka 1-W unit.

John Thiessen, secretary of the Board of Missions of the General Conference Mennonite Church, conducted the chapel service Friday, Dec. 10, speaking on the value of a good name. He outlined ways in which college students can help in promoting the good name of their school.

The Madrigalians, a vocal group under the direction of David H. Suderman, has made several appearances in the month of December. The group has appeared at the high school assembly, Goessel, the Men's Brotherhood of the First Mennonite Church of Christian, the college fine arts chapel, and the Kiwanis Christmas banquet.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

At an inspiring candlelight service on Tuesday, December 14, the Women's Gospel Team Trio and the Men's Gospel Team Quartet, together with the speakers for each group, were dedicated to the service of Christ in preparation for their deputation trips during the Christmas holidays from Dec. 26 to Jan. 3.

The Women's Trio, composed of Shirley Shelmadine, Lima, Ohio; Carolyn Schnell, Belgian Congo; and Joanne Mill of Perkasie, Pennsylvania, will give programs in Pennsylvania. Romaine Clemens, Souderton, Penn., will be the accompanist. Jane Nyce of Hatfield, Penn., will be the speaker.

The men's quartet including Ronald Ropp, Normal, Ill.; Wilmer Sprunger, Belgian Congo; Bill Schantz, Ada, Ohio; and Robert Coon, Dayton, Ohio, presented programs in Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri. Bill Simmons of Dayton, Ohio, delivered the message.

Opera, oratorio, traditional ballads, spirituals, art, contemporary and buffo songs will be heard when The Davies of Canada appear as the third Bluffton Concert Series program of the season in Ramseyer Chapel on Tuesday, Jan. 11, at 8:00 p.m.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Governor Sigurd Anderson has appointed President Ronald von Riesen as a member of the Governor's Advisory Committee for the Refugee Relief Program as it affects South Dakota. Pres. von Riesen left for Pierre, where the committee met with the governor in his Reception Room in the capitol building on December 9.

It might be of interest to know that Governor Anderson is a member of the Freeman Junior College Corporation. He holds two and one-half shares in the College Corporation and is entitled to that number of votes at all business meetings. At the annual Corporation meeting last fall he cast his vote by proxy.

Dr. J. D. Unruh met with the General Conference Historical Committee at North Newton, Kansas, on December first. The group met in connection with the Council of Boards meeting.

Rosemary Linscheid attended the session of the Young People's Union Council meeting of the General Conference at North Newton. She is the secretary-treasurer of the group.

Dr. Harold Gross was elected to membership in the American Theological Society at its fall meeting in Chicago. Dean Beam of Bethany Seminary sponsored Dr. Gross.

Rev. George Dyck of Bloomfield, Montana, spoke in chapel while snowbound in Dakota on his way to Kansas.

The local ministerium sponsored a week of community revival meetings conducted by Rev. George R. Brunk, of Denbigh, Virginia. The meetings were held in Pioneer Hall, December 5 through December 12. Rev. Brunk conducted the chapel services each morning during this entire week.

In this position Mr. Purves will be responsible for contact between the hospital and patient families during hospitalization. His work will include the compilation of patient case histories, the interpretation of hospitalization treatment to family members and patient follow-up to aid them in establishing normal home and family life.

Mr. and Mrs. Purves are members of the Berne First Mennonite Church and have contributed much to the congregation's music program. In 1948, Mrs. Purves organized the church's junior choir and has been conductor since then.

Since 1952 Mr. Purves has been president of the Winner House, a men's and boys' clothing manufacturing firm in Berne. His work with this firm has included that of production manager and personnel director.

The Purves family will live in Smithsburg, Md., which is three miles from Brook Lane Farm. Mr. and Mrs. Purves have three daughters—Jean Ellen, 8; Margaret Murie, 6; and Mary Christine, 2.

FIVE PERU PAX MEN ARRIVE IN PARAGUAY

Five of the 10 PAX men clearing jungle and building a roadway in Peru under the R. G. LeTourneau organization have arrived in Paraguay where they will assist in the construction of Mennonite colony roads.

MCC headquarters in Akron, Penn., received word of their safe arrival on Dec. 23, and it is likely they arrived around that date. The names and addresses of the five PAX men to arrive in Asuncion: Bruce Boshart of Cucamonga, Calif.; Jake Funk of Ile des Chenes, Man.; Carl Hooley of Elkhart, Ind.; Ed Ratzlaff of Mountain Lake, Minn.; and Philip Roth of Orrtanna, Penn.

Their first assignment in Paraguay will be to assist in the construction of a graded road from Hoffnungsfeld, the freight terminal for the three Chaco colonies, to the rail head known as Kilometer 145, which is a distance of 40 kilometers or about 25 miles. Construction of this Huffnungsfeld-Kilometer 145 is already underway. Should the possibility of building a roadway between Asuncion and the Chaco become a reality, these PAX men will assist in that construction. The construction of such improved transportation facilities will do much to improve economic conditions in the Paraguayan colonies.

The five men remaining in Peru will continue their service with the LeTourneau organization. Mr. LeTourneau has expressed a great deal of satisfaction with the service of the 10 Mennonite PAX men and indicated possible interest in having several more such personnel.

The names and addresses of the PAX men remaining in Peru: Harry Bert of Newberg, Penn.; Willard Ebersole of Warren, Ill.; Paul Fry of Manheim, Penn.; William Nofziger of Wauseon, Ohio; and Cloy Roth of Milford, Neb.

FUTURE OF UMT RESTS WITH 84TH CONGRESS

In recent weeks there have been queries from Mennonite church members regarding the future of military service in the United States.

These questions are occasioned by the expiration of the present Selective Service Act (the Universal Military Training and Service Act of 1951) on July 1, 1955, unless extended. It is expected that legislation will be introduced early in the 84th Congress to amend or replace present conscription laws.

While it is still too early to predict exactly what proposals will be made, Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson has said he would ask for continuation of the 24-month Selective Service draft for another four years from June 30, 1955. He has also stated he intends to press for continuation of long-term voluntary enlistments and a modified form of universal military training. Under the Wilson plan young men would have the choice of being inducted into the Army for two years, enlisting in the Air Force or Navy for four years, or taking six months' basic training and then serving in a National Guard or organized reserve unit for at least 9½ more years.

Indications are that a principal feature of any new bill will be a proposal for a compulsory strong reserve. It is reported that strong differences of opinion exist as to the period of compulsory training and/or active service which should precede drafting into the reserves.

It seems likely that the present exemption, deferment and civilian alternative service provisions will be recommended to Congress with possibly some tightening up on deferments. The MCC Peace Section is keeping alert to any of these developments.

TWO WORKERS TO SAIL FOR KOREA

James C. Hostetler of Louisville, Ohio, and Helen Tieszen of Marion S. D., are scheduled to sail for Korea from Seattle Wash., on Dec. 23. Both are loaned by MCC to Christian Children's Fund, an international child welfare agency.

Mr. Hostetler will serve as secretary in the CCF office in Seoul and will be working with Arlene Sitler of Hespeler, Ont., another MCC worker on loan to CCF. Miss Tieszen will be connected with the administration of a children's home in Korea.

They had only been married ten days. A double funeral was held here in Clinton, with many relatives and friends mourning their sudden departure. In a solemn service Sunday afternoon, Nov. 28, Norman Schmidt and his wife Janice, were ordained into the ministry. A. G. Schmidt brought the message based on 2 Tim. 2:1-7. Pastor Richard Tschetter performed the ordination assisted by missionary Samuel Entz, Albert G. Schmidt, and Walter Regier. This day was our Harvest Thanksgiving Festival. Rev. and Mrs. Sam Entz were our missionary speakers. This great day was followed by a missionary conference on Monday and Tuesday with the Entz's and missionary Arthur Friesen as speakers.—Mrs. Margaret Horn, Corr.

—Friedensberg Church, Avon, S. D. The meetings the first part of October with Sam Sprunger came to a close with many blessings to be recorded. Miss Elizabeth Foth from Brooklyn, New York, was with us Oct. 17, and gave us a very challenging message. Mrs. Jake Koehn, who was a patient in the Sacred Heart Hospital, is slowly regaining her health again. Mrs. H. P. Unruh who was in the same hospital for medical care is feeling better again. In November, the Mission Society gave a program in church with the missionaries Rev. and Mrs. Peter Nickel from Auke Bay, Alaska, and Mrs. Harold Barber from Colombia, South America. Johnson Relief Chairman—Mrs. J. J. Franz. Harvest Mission festival was held Nov. 28. Herbert Dalke spoke in the morning and the evening meeting, designed especially for young people, was conducted by John Thiessen. Our cornerstone laying service for our new educational building took place Sunday afternoon, Nov. 28. Thanksgiving Day, our children had a special collection of $20.00 for Harri, a boy from India. The film, "The Call of the Cheyenne," was shown Dec. 8, by missionary Alfred Habegger from the Montana field.—Mrs. Hulda Froese, Corr.

It is startling to learn that two out of every three people in Washington, most of whom work for a government founded on religious faith, are without any perceptible manifestation of such faith.

and Saul showing that even though David had reasons to get even with Saul that he saved his life a number of times. The Bible story is illustrated from a large picture book. Timmy gets the point and leaves the shop planning to help the boys in his gang rather than to get even with them.

The film is well done. Two things should be mentioned about the film, which our churches would want to consider before using it. The story of David and Goliath is a part of the film. David succeeds in slaying Goliath because God was with him. The other is that the assumption of the picture is that junior boys have already accepted Jesus Christ as their Savior. If a group feels that ordinarily a person should become a Christian after the junior age this might be a hindrance. However, this issue is brought in only incidentally and should not hinder the effectiveness of the film.

Thoughts from Psalm 18

I love Thee, Lord, Who art my strength;
My true affection goes
To One who never fails; at length
His holy purpose shows.

So I will call upon the Lord,
I will trust in Him always;
He is my fortress and my rock,
Worthy to be praised.

In the day of calamity,
The Lord God is my stay;
He brought me into liberty,
Because He was obeyed.

For all His judgments are before me,
His statutes I observe;
He, therefore, hath rewarded me,
According to His Word.

As for God, His way is perfect,
A Guardian to not a few
That trust in His integrity;
His Word is tried and true.

Thou, my Lord, wilt light my candle,
To show me on my way;
My God will make the darkness light,
And lead me every day.

The shield of Thy Salvation sure
Thou hast given me;
Thy gentleness hath made me pure,
Thy hand supported me.

Oh, sing ye praises to His Name,
Strong citadel, no less;
Oh, give thanksgiving to the Lord
Who all the earth will bless.

—Elizabeth Wiens Thiessen

Today's man in the street has asked: "What is so different about the execution of a Nazarene Jew two thousand years ago? Why should it compel any special attention today? Wherein lies the reason for contemporary reverence of a peasant who was hung in an obscure land so many years past, or for congregating in thousands of churches to offer humble thanksgiving for his sacrifice?"

An examination of the Cross, as the Roman Centurion examined it, gives the irrefutable answers. This execution was different because it teaches the Love of Almighty God, because it pictures the human destiny for which all of us are created. Sin put the Son of God on Calvary's Cross that day, but His forgiveness, His promise of eternal life, His Love, His approach to suffering, His spiritual thirst, His triumphant life, and His deep, abiding faith have taken Him down.

This is the difference. This is why Christians call Good Friday "Good!"

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN THE LOCAL CHURCH

We need a renewed and clarified vision of the needs and possibilities of Christian education in our local church levels. The fine work of the Sunday school in times past should be reviewed to see if it may now be improved. Is the material properly adapted to the various age groups? Are the teachers taking their work seriously and putting the needed time and effort into it? Do they have the proper "lesson helps"? Have they had special teacher training? Would they be interested in continuing such training as well as taking short courses both in biblical material and in better teaching methods?

What about the adult Christian education? Is it well-balanced and well directed? Is the material used best suited to the needs of everyday Christian living? Are there teachers' meetings where teachers may discuss together the leading truths and applications of a given lesson?

Our Board of Education and Publication is giving much time and thought to such questions. They are working on Sunday school material which should be a great improvement over much that is now used. They seek to understand the needs of the various age groups of children, and to supply materials best suited for that particular age. Committees spend days, and even weeks, in working on plans for improved methods and materials for Christian education.

Unfortunately this Board is often restricted in its work because of lack of financial support from our churches. There is difficulty in meeting the budget needs. Because the work of this Board is less glamorous and less dramatic than some of the other church work, it is too frequently neglected. We need a clearer vision of the great possibilities and needs of Christian education, and a deeper concern about having the proper skills to do the work properly. To this phase of our Christian work we should give more serious consideration during this coming year.

SAMPLING THE READERS' REACTIONS

Recently mention was made of the fact that questionnaires were sent out to a cross-section of our readers to try to learn their opinions and reactions to various departments and sections of THE MENNONITE. Unfortunately only about a third of the questionnaires came back although they called for but a simple checking of various possible opinions, and postage was paid by the Publication Office.

Of the readers who responded, the vast majority preferred that the name "Mennonite" be retained, and that the page size be kept the same, although 38 per cent favored a greater number of pages. As to the number of pictures used about an equal number preferred "more" as were satisfied with "the same."

As to the material published, 77 per cent thought it was well-balanced, and 75 per cent declared the articles "good," although 13 per cent thought they were not varied enough. Only 3 per cent found them "uninteresting." Sixty-eight per cent favored keeping the number of devotional articles about the same while 21 per cent thought there should be more such articles.

As to the front cover, in addition to the picture, 47 per cent expressed a desire to have the lead articles listed, 36 per cent preferred poems, while 16 per cent would have no print at all.

The "Jottings" were considered "about right," although some thought they were too long, others too few in number. Eighty-seven per cent stated they favored a "counselor's column" where personal and home problems could be considered. Sixty-five per cent were satisfied with the "conference reports," 69 per cent desired frequent book reviews, 52 per cent desired frequent film reviews while 35 per cent thought such reviews should appear regularly.

As to the parts of THE MENNONITE read first, half stated the Editorials, and 30 per cent the "Jottings." On the average 16 per cent read all the paper, 43 per cent read most of it and 23 per cent about half of it, while 10 per cent read only a few pages.

As to Editorials, 82 per cent stated they were "good," although 16 per cent found them only "fair." Fifty per cent found the Youth Section "good," 28 per cent "fair," and 13 per cent declared it "excellent."

There were also a number of subjects as well as writers suggested, and also some helpful suggestions for improving the paper.

We wish to thank all who responded to this readers' sampling, and we hope to profit by these replies, as we are much concerned about making our church paper better and of greater service in the future. Your prayers are solicited to this end.

An Appreciation of the Lord's Prayer

FRANK R. MITCHELL*

The prayer which our Lord taught His disciples to pray invites our prayerful study this winter and the Editor has again kindly asked that these studies be shared with the readers of The Mennonite. We gladly share them and sincerely ask your prayers that we may be led aright.

The author of this prayer is Jesus our Savior and Lord. Even though He has given it to His disciples, it belongs to Him. There are those who feel that the prayer has been misnamed because He could not have used it for Himself, but this need not be stressed because He did not intend to use it for Himself. He composed it for His beloved disciples. He gave it to them, but it forever belongs to Him.

There are those who remind us that Jesus never wrote a line and that all that He said came through the hands of gospel writers and apostles who could not fully understand Him. If it would be conceded that there may be enough truth in this statement to make us cautious in understanding the problem of interpretation, there is one thing that is very sure. If He had directly written this prayer with His own hand, it could not possibly be more His than it is.

Luke significantly tells us that He was praying before He gave the prayer to His disciples. May this not be enough to tell us that He thought and prayed about it a long time before He gave it to His disciples? He impressed the prayer upon their memories. He dwelt on the right manner of praying, then He illustrated His teaching with the prayer. He used His own method to show that simple, sincere, heartfelt requests to God are more important than the words of a prayer. He put the prayer in short, simple sentences with pauses for reflection in between. The prayer is not the impulse of a moment. The Lord gave His very best. He planned and thought it all out most carefully and prayerfully. In giving the prayer, He gave Himself.

While there is no evidence that the Lord labored to do so, the fact is that the prayer underlies all His teaching. To be sure, it lies very near the surface in all of the New Testament writings. The writer of the First Gospel places it squarely in the middle of the Sermon on the Mount as if he felt that the prayer comprehensively summarizes and epitomizes all that Jesus said. Christians will be forever grateful for the gift of the Lord's Supper. It effectively symbolizes all that He ever did for sinful men. And the Lord's Prayer adequately represents all that He ever said. In what He did and what He said He truly gave Himself.

Luke tells us that the prayer was given to His disciples to pray together. The way the prayer is worded also shows this intention. It is a group prayer, and as such it eliminates the selfishness of men. Those who pray the prayer are brought to see that we share the need. Recently in Chicago, a large body of one hundred and twenty-five thousand Christians from a majority of the various Christian fellowships in the world prayed together the Lord's Prayer. Even those who felt that they were not permitted to partake of the Lord's Supper together at this time, prayed together with yearning sincerity the Lord's Prayer. It is the one bond between all Christians. There has been, and is no Christian fellowship in all the world that does not pray the Lord's Prayer. And now again it has been demonstrated that we can pray it together.

And yet on the other hand the prayer is just as intensely personal as it is communal. It is a prayer for the closet as well as for the group. The prayer addresses itself to the inward, personal and private needs of the individual as well as to the total welfare of the fellowship of saints of all ages. It reminds us that the Christian Church is made up of separate individuals. Forgiveness and being forgiven, temptation and deliverance from evil are, first of all intimate personal matters, which are not to be dealt with en masse.

In the prayer we are taught that there is nothing insignificant or meaningless in life. Our everyday living is made a part of eternity. An interested, loving Father goes with us through every detail. Life is not to be accepted as a matter of course. It is to be accepted as fresh from our Father's hands. He knows and understands and shapes all things. Every individual has a destiny of his own which the Father is willing to help him work out. It is as if Jesus would lift for us the veil that has come between us and God, so that we could realize the relationship between us. It is He that shows us the true realities of life and in the prayer we share the experience of sons before our Father.

Finally, there are those who have said that there is nothing new in the Lord's Prayer. It has been stated that all that He said there has been said before. Let us frankly concede what truth there is in this statement. It is true that Jesus selected words for His prayer that are to be found in the great Jewish prayers of the Old Testament and of His own times. The common substance of His prayer was as familiar as man's perennial need. But He put a content into the prayer that was unknown and utterly new. Beside this, there is one petition of the prayer that was unheard of in any former prayer. It may also be said that the content of the prayer is far more than the sum of its parts.

Jesus' prayer with all of its old familiar words was utterly new. All pray-ers before Him sought the presence of God. There was a yearning about many of their prayers that betrayed man's cravenness and unfitness to stand before God. In the Lord's Prayer Jesus succeeds in actually bringing the worshiper into the very presence of God. He put Himself into the prayer in such a way that there never was a prayer like it. The ages have proven that it takes

Highlights of Missionary Observations III

ANDREW R. SHELLY

"For this cause left I thee in Crete" Titus 1:5.

These words came to my mind as I toured the two islands in the Far East where we have mission work. St. Paul wrote these words to Titus who was on the island of Crete.

It appears that Titus was a bit discouraged or frustrated at the evils he beheld on this island. The task seemed so immense to him. And it was! But, Paul writes to him in the challenging epistle that it was because of the evil and problems of the island that he left him in Crete.

KYUSHU is the southernmost island of the several islands which make up Japan. There are four main ones and a number of smaller ones. We went around the island by train. We entered at the northeast tip and went down the eastern coastal train route to visit our fields. Returning we went up the western route.

If there is a challenge anywhere, certainly there is one on Kyushu Island. The population is about 13,000,000. For this entire population there are less than 100 active missionaries. Of course, in addition there are some Japanese churches.

Japan is divided into prefectures which compare roughly to our states. Our work is located in Miyazaki Prefecture. This is the southernmost prefecture. Thus, we are laboring at the southern tip of Japan. This area has long been neglected in mission work. Twenty-four per cent of the 2,000 missionaries in Japan are in Tokyo itself.

Miyazaki Prefecture has about 1,300,000 people. It has been estimated that there are less than 1,000 Christians. There are very few other missionaries in the area. In one of the cities in which we work, ours is the only gospel light.

Our missionaries who are settled on Kyushu have just completed language school so they really have not been at work for a long period. However, there are already stalwart Christians. In a number of cases I asked them how they came to accept Jesus Christ as their Savior. How inspiring to hear them tell glowingly of their joy in Christ. I took a number of pictures of these happy Japanese Christians. Although "babes in Christ" they showed an unusual maturity and took part in the worship services — in fact, in most cases actually led the service.

One of the converts interpreted for me about a dozen times. I got to know and love him dearly as a brother in Christ.

Our places of work are: Miyazaki City, Nichinan, Miyakonojo, Koayashi, and Hyuga. Please pray for this work as our workers labor for the Lord.

KYUSHU is indeed an island of need. The task is overwhelming "for this cause" we have work there. As we pray, give, and go much of the need can be met.

FORMOSA is the other island about which I want to write. This island has become the haven for many Chinese refugees. In addition to those native to the island are these millions who fled the mainland. The seven days we spent in Formosa were filled with challenge.

We saw the work the MCC has been doing. We visited the clinic at Hwalien and saw about one hundred tribespeople waiting to be examined and treated. We saw the tracts. We heard, as we arrived, part of the morning witness period. We saw the full time native speaking to people about spiritual things. Yes, we saw and were convinced!

One morning we took a ride in the surrounding territory. We visited villages (really in some cases the population was in the thousands) of the Tyal and Ami tribes. As we walked through these villages, it became abundantly evident that here is a great need to be met.

We also visited at Taichung. Here we beheld the wonderful work at the babies home and orphanage. We also noted the services in the Bamboo Chapel sponsored by Glen Graber. Services were held Saturday evening (Bible study) and three on Sunday.

Yes, Formosa is an island of challenge. Our Conference is moving more and more into the island to spread the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

As a Parent I Have Problems

R. C. KAUFFMAN*

Without claiming to be altogether objective, I would say that I have two fine children and that, so far as I can tell, I am getting along fairly well with them. But there are some problems to which I do not have the answer. Two particularly disturb me since I have a suspicion that they might be important.

I don't know what balance to strike between a denial and a surfeiting of children's wants. I know that it is bad to set a round of satisfactions that it will be difficult to maintain in later life. A study (Porteus, The Practice of Clinical Psychology, pp. 325-9) comparing several hundred delinquent with non-delinquent children found the delinquent group distinguished by a love of ease and indulgence that far surpassed any realistic hopes of satisfaction. Occasionally, about this time of the year, one overhears parents remarking, "We really don't know what to get Susie for Christmas. She already has everything." Even more tragic than the child who will get nothing for Christmas, is the child who is bored with "having everything."

And yet the surfeiting of children's wants is sometimes the surest way of helping them to move on to other more worth-while and enduring pursuits. I have observed a case in point evolve at our home during the course of the last year or two. Our youngest heir, five years old at the time, was plunged into an absorbing interest in guns when an uncle of his bought him one, complete with holster and cowboy hat. From this our son's interests soon encompassed all weapons of self-defense — rifles, spears, swords, and knives. It looked bad for the Mennonites! I decided to meet the problem head-on. I bought another gun as soon as the first wore out, I helped him make spears and supplied him with the materials for his death-dealing instruments. He went to bed with a gun strapped around his pajamas. We had to "frisk" him Sunday mornings to make sure that no gun be drawn during church services. Over the last several months, however, I have observed an increasing carelessness about being fully armed. The gun, swords, and knives go untouched for days on end. The other day I asked, "Eddy, don't you play with your guns any more?" "Not much," he replied, "such things are really for younger kids."

Some years ago our college students were clamoring for folk games on the campus. Now we have them—and the problem is to get the students to attend. To what other wants might surfeiting be the answer? How many of our childish wants still persist because of an early unintelligent and unsympathetic suppression of them?

My second problem is one of knowing when to insist on an observance of our local mores and when to allow for peer group conformity. Often this forces the child to choose between "being different" and "belonging." For some few fortunate children this choice may never become critical since they are so secure in themselves that they either shape the group to their differences or else forego belonging without any great sense of loss. My children are, however, not among these fortunate few and I am not sure that I can expect them to be since I do not recall having been among them myself, nor do I know a formula that would guarantee the development of this enviable self-sufficiency.

The problem at hand is set forth in sharper outline by a statement appearing in Luella Cole's widely used text in Adolescent Psychology (Cole, Adolescent Psychology, p. 304). She writes, "Parents who will not tolerate smoking, use of cosmetics, or social dancing are themselves poorly adjusted to modern customs. If adolescents from such homes insist upon maintaining their parents' standards, they will become ostracized from their own society."

Of course Luella Cole is not a Mennonite. Also, it might be argued, she chose her cases carefully. What if the list of smoking, cosmetics, and social dancing were extended to include drinking, night clubs, and coming home at any hour of the night? Obviously there is a point at which any parents who function in that capacity at all would be led to draw a line and at that point, then, would confront the dilemma under consideration. They can enforce standards and insist that the child be different or they can choose to promote the child's membership in the group at the expense of standards. Mennonite parents almost inevitably choose the former, and perhaps this is as it should be. There is, however, the distressing aspect that this choice is all-too-often made on the basis of family reputation, really only a thinly-veneered form of self-interest, and with little regard for the socio-psychological implications of this choice for the child.

The sense of "being different" in some socially significant way is a poignant one for the child. It constitutes the most general cause for the inferiority feeling and the inferiority feeling, it can be added, is among mental and emotional ills what the common cold is among physical ills—one of the most prevalent while also one of the most costly and disabling, both in itself and through its ready complications. It may be that religiously-inspired standards must be upheld at all costs to the individual. But if this is true it would still seem that a Christian concern for personality would impell us to search for ways of helping the child cope with the problem of "being different." If Mennonites wish to persist in being what Dorothy Thompson called a "Queer People," in the world and yet not of the world, this problem deserves more attention than it has generally received.

Thinking About Books

Elaine Sommers Rich

Today let's talk about books. The New Year is a good time to resolve to read some of those "must" books during the coming year. Here are several I've enjoyed recently.

With God in Red China is Olin Stockwell's story of his imprisonment by Communists. What would you do if you faced endless days alone in a prison cell? Stockwell, a minister and Bible teacher, discovered the New Testament in an amazing way. He wrote all over the margins of the one other book he had. He found memories of the past a help. I'm not sure what people mean when they call a book a "thriller," but they probably mean a book like this one.

Mary Ann (Hostetler) Melchert sent me from Japan a book called Echoes from a Mountain School edited by Seikyo Muchaku. It is a collection of compositions written by school children about their own lives. Their extreme poverty and their eagerness to learn shine through most of the sentences. The Japanese student who had dinner with us today was so glad to see this book in English and explained to us its influence in bringing about changes in Japan's rural schools.

So Sure of Life is Violet Wood's well-told story of a medical doctor who ended up in Tennessee's Smoky Mountains instead of in Java as he had originally intended. If you have your own Hall of Fame for Christian heroes, you will no doubt include Dr. Robert F. Thomas after reading this biography.

A slim, exciting volume is Franklin Littell's The Anabaptist Concept of the Church. .It is more scholarly than the previous books, but if you've read this far in this column, you could also read it. A taunting line from somewhere kept saying itself in my mind as I read this book. "We have become the watered progeny of a glorious ancestry." This is the story of people who really understood the meaning of the Cross.

Not light reading, but certainly thought-provoking, is Fred Blum's Toward a Democratic Work Process. Anyone who has ever worked in a factory or tried to evaluate factory work from a Christian viewpoint will find ideas to digest here. Mr. Blum concludes that people work pretty much only for money, but that they somehow feel the motive is wrong. He also concludes that people who invest their lives in a company should have "say-so" as well as those who invest capital. He looks forward to the day when work will be part of an over-all life pattern which is meaningful and when human values will have a central place in the organization of the work process.

The neighbor who handed me Margaret Applegarth's Men as Trees Walking handed me a great spiritual blessing. Drill anywhere in the book and you strike oil. This is a modern Hebrew 11. Words fail me to tell of Mary Morrow, Fraulein Walpurgis, Htingbai Gam, Grandmother Gatewoman, Bishop Berggrav, and many others. For weariness of spirit, take a dose of this book and feel the surge of vigor.

Inspired by Margaret Applegarth, I record a latter day epigram. "Great is the company of those who wear the old clothes a while longer and buy a new book instead."

Flashes of Thought

Like Unto Trees

Walter Gering

There it was, lying prostrate upon the ground, victim of a storm which had passed through the village. Only a few hours ago it had been towering high above the street; its shade had been a blessing to those who sought shelter under its boughs from the noonday heat. Its beauty had been the pride of the owner. Now it was the symbol of tragedy and weakness in the midst of life; a grim reminder of what often happens, not only to trees but also of what often happens to lives subjected to the pressure of life's storms.

I thought of other trees seen along the road. It was one of those heavily wooded sections of our state where trees are crowded upon each other. They too had been subjected to the storm. Many of them had weathered its fury; others had been bruised and battered. But what had impressed me had been the fact that seldom had I seen any of these battered trees lying prostrate upon the ground. Weakened and broken they had begun to sway back and forth. But the out stretched branches like steady arms, had given support upholding them. They were kept from being crushed to earth by their own kin and neighbors.

What lesson for these days when so many are swaying under the load of the day. It takes so little to reach out a helping hand; it means so much to those in need. Only eternity will reveal how many a soul has been kept from falling by the under girding of neighborly hands.

"In every patch of timber
You will always find a tree or two
That would have fallen long ago
Borne down by wind or age or snow
Had not another neighbor tree
Held out its arms of sympathy.

Shall trees be nobler to their kind
Than men who boast the noble mind?
Shall there exist within the wood
This great eternal brotherhood of oak and pine, of hill and fen
And not within the hearts of men?

God grant that men be like to these;
And brothers—brotherly as trees."

My Last Days at Neuland

MARIE J. REGIER

Sunday afternoon in Asuncion, Paraguay—Monday evening in Wichita, Kansas, thus quickly has one chapter in my life ended and another begun. There are different angles from which one can look at the Paraguayan Chaco. The average farmer sees bush and cactus, ants and grasshoppers, backbreaking labor and broiling duststorms, low prices for cotton and high prices to pay for manufactured goods, a steady diet of mandioka and kaffir flour although there are chicken, pork, and occasional vegetables and fruit.

But there is another side to one who was dependent upon physical labor to make a living. There is lovely Halbstadt in spite of its cattle roaming the streets day and night and making the walks rather impossible at times; and in spite of the sand which hot northwinds of the Paraguayan winter whirl into your eyes. There are the lovely green "Pariiser" trees which are green almost the year around. For as soon as they get through shedding their leaves, the new ones come out. Red tiled roofs glow between the trees. Practically every yard has its flowers, particularly luxuriant phlox which blooms and blooms, sometimes from October till March or April. There is the pink and white oleander, the brilliant red of the so-called Chinese roses, the fresh green and the reddish orange blossoms and fruit of the pomegranate. Young orchards of grapefruit, orange, and lemon are growing up and I think of Goethe's words, "Kennst du das Land wo die Zitronen bluehen, im dunklen Laub die goldorangen gluehen?" And the despised cactus—I had it in my front yard and enjoyed the wonderful "Queen of the night." Then, if one walks down the street during the night of milky-white moonlight and drinks in the odors of the various blossoms in the bush (provided there does not happen to be a decaying bottletree nearby) I could not help saying again and again, "How beautiful, how beautiful."

The last days in the Neuland were busy days, but not busier than the average day of the average person in the States. During the last month or two I tried to turn over my work among the women to others. Each month I had a group of women meeting at my house. One month it was the leaders of the women's missionary societies and the next it was the ministers' wives. In both cases at the meeting next to the last one, I asked the women to elect someone else to take charge of the meetings. In order to have something inspirational at each meeting and also to get the idea of adult Sunday school classes into the colony, I suggested that a lesson from the Sunday school quarterly be discussed. This was done and seemed to be quite effective. The women leaders of the mission societies especially participated in the discussion. Plans also were being made at the business meeting for the all women society to meet in January. The local group of Halbstadt had presented a little play by J. H. Janzen about the meeting of a women's missionary society some time ago and they were asked to repeat that for the benefit of the whole colony. Others were willing to contribute songs and instrumental music, the instruments being guitars. The January meeting ought to be successful. The new leader for the colony is Mrs. Anna Rakko, the doctor's wife; for the group of ministers' wives, Mrs. Margarethe Thiessen, wife of the young minister, Isaak Thiessen who studied in Brazil recently.

I was rather touched at the farewell services the local missionary group had for me. Also I was pleased with the album full of Bible verses and verses of song as a farewell message. Striking among these verses was the one by the doctor's wife which said something to the effect that if experiences glow as they sink into the past, they will still glow a long time afterwards. The German is much more expressive than this lame translation of it.

While I always felt that the work among the women was really my main work, in reality I spent much more time in the "Zentralschule" during the winter months and I could at that time do very little visitation in the homes, except right in Halbstadt where I could take time out between classes. I did enjoy the work in school very much too although it was quite a task to teach ancient, medieval, and modern history after hardly having looked at it for twenty or thirty years. Church history and Bible were easier, of course. I was the sponsor of the first graduating class both last year when they were in their third year as well as this year. Some time before the close of school we had had an evening together, but on the last night that I was there about midnight, I suddenly heard singing under my window, and here they were, my seniors, giving me a final send-off.

The last Sunday that I was in Neuland happened to be "Hauptversammlung," that is the monthly

First Experiences

Aganetha Penner, new missionary teaching in Oraibi, Arizona, has the experience that comes to all of us at times, that something which we know and realized for a long time takes on new meaning. Her first Christmas season on the mission field makes the true meaning of Christmas so much more real to her that from sheer joy she likes to tell it to some of the rest of us.

The Hopi children eagerly studying their parts for the Christmas program given December 17, probably contributed.

Among other things which have been keeping the missionaries busy was a Sunday school teachers training course, planned especially for the Hopi Sunday school teachers. Another was prayer day at the Oraibi church and Aganetha was thrilled when they sang, "Look to the Lamb of God."

There were things of a social nature to keep them busy, as the "Peppernut Bake" for all the Hopi women. The evening was one of happy fellowship, baking and eating peppernuts, and singing Christmas carols.

A special cause for joy was the experience with Betty, a girl who had been faithful in attending Sunday school for some time and now was willing to say "yes" when Miss Baerg asked her whether she wanted to have Jesus as her Savior.

meeting of the General Conference church and Rev. Rempel led in a short farewell service for me at this time. It too was fine without being sentimental or overemotional.

And now I am back in North America. Across the continent and across the waters my thoughts go back to the folk there in their struggles. It isn't easy and they need all the encouragement they can get, but that doesn't mean necessarily transporting them to Canada. If some of us in North America realized the great service that some of the teachers and ministers are giving and how very necessary their service is in Paraguay, we would encourage them in every way we could but we would not urge them to desert their field of labor, for after all there are other things in life which are of more value than the comfort and luxuries which North America has to offer. May God bless, comfort and support those who are staying there and taking up their cross daily. This is my prayer for the brothers and sisters on the other side of the equator.

A Missionary Challenge

"The gospel of Jesus Christ and the Communist Manifesto. The gospel is a much more powerful weapon for the renewal of society than is our Marxist philosophy. All the same, it is we who will finally beat you. We are only a handful, and you Christians are numbered by the million. But if you remember the story of Gideon and his three hundred companions, you will understand why I am right. We Communists do not play with words. We are realists, and seeing that we are determined to achieve our object, we know how to obtain the means. Of our salaries and wages we keep only what is strictly necessary; and we give the rest for propaganda purposes. To this propaganda we also consecrate 'all our free time and part of our holidays.' You, however, give only a little time and hardly any money for the spreading of the gospel of Christ. How can anyone believe in the supreme value of this gospel if you do not practice it? If you do not spread it? And if you sacrifice neither time nor money for it? Believe me, it is we who will win, for we believe in our Communist message and we are ready to sacrifice everything, even our life, in order that social justice shall triumph. But you people are afraid to soil your hands."

Film Review

The Fiery Furnace, 16 mm. Color, 12 min. Producer: Moody Bible Institute, 820 N. LaSalle St., Chicago, Illinois. Rental $6.00.

This is the second in a series of Bible films which are being produced by Moody Bible Institute. The film follows the pattern of David and Saul. Three junior boys come into the shop of Andy Fixit. One of the three complains that some boys are bothering him because he is a Christian. In fact, he brings his bicycle with a few broken spokes to Andy for him to fix. This sets the stage for Andy to tell the story of three boys in the Old Testament who faced much greater obstacles for their faith — the story of the three Hebrew children who were thrown into the fiery furnace for their faith. The boys learn that as the Living Christ came into the fiery furnace to help the three Hebrew children that so the living Christ will also help them in their difficulties. This film is well done and would fit into any of our churches who use films. Probably those of upper junior age would follow the implications of the biblical story more than the younger junior age.

A New Venture

Our Board of Missions has ventured into something new with respect to bringing our mission fields to our churches. On December 1, 1954, the sound film, "The Call of the Cheyenne" was dedicated and consecrated as our Board of Missions' first authentic film to bring before our congregations.

Comments from Colombia

"Recently our responsibilities at the Home for Children have been few that we might devote more time to extension work in the neighboring areas. Not all welcome our message. We know what it means to hear women and children chant: 'Protestants, Mason, Communista' or to hear them sing: 'We do not want Protestants who have come to Colombia to corrupt us.' We also know what it means for the light of the gospel to break forth on the face of a new believer, to follow him in his effort to leave religious superstition and the world behind, accepting the stern opposition and ridicule of former companions, that he might fully follow Christ.

"These new groups of believers must not depend upon us nor upon the Mission. Strong, independent, confident, spiritual churches are the greatest need. We must guide, but not drive; counsel, but not rule. Paradoxically missionaries are often the greatest impediment to a strong national church.

"Despite political unrest, poverty, ignorance, and superstition, Colombia has much to offer. Considering the centuries of limited freedom imposed by both church and state, the people are making remarkable progress in many areas. And the scenery of Colombia is indescribable. Would that you could join us on a Sunday or Tuesday night, as horseback and homeward bound we trace a mountain-top trail for a mile or more. The full moon silhouettes deep valleys and rivers on both sides. And beyond in every direction are more mountain ranges, more coffee-covered hills, more fertile valleys."

Small Estates

Q. My estate is not very large, and is mostly in bonds and real estate. Should I have an attorney help me prepare my Will? M.V.

A. Yes. Your attorney should be consulted always in the preparation of a Will. By so doing you are sure to avoid misinterpretation of your intentions by the Probate Court, and can be sure that all statutory requirements are met. (Reprinted from "Property")

Have you made your Will?

And have you remembered the General Conference in that Will?

Watch & Pray

Prayer Calendar

YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION

General Conference Mennonite Church

Prayer is the soul's sincere desire,
Uttered or unexpressed;
The motion of a hidden fire
That trembles in the breast.

Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,
The Christian's native air,
His watchword at the gate of death;
He enters heav'n with prayer.

Appeal to Prayer

On December 16 the 1955 Prayer Calendar of the Young People's Union was mailed from Altona, Manitoba, to all the youth groups in the churches and schools of the General Conference Mennonite Church. As this writing appears in print, many groups will have already distributed the calendars and scores of young people will have already referred to them in their personal devotions.

The 1955 Prayer Calendar was edited by Brother and Sister Kehler, of North Clearbrook, British Columbia. Brother and Sister Kehler, have made the 1955 calendar particularly meaningful by adding daily Bible reading topics with Scripture references to the prayer suggestions.

The theme of the prayer calendar is the admonition of our Lord Jesus to His disciples, according to Matthew 26:41, "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak." This theme and encouragement holds true for us as young people, who live in a day of so many temptations and much weakness of the flesh.

The distribution of the calendars is an excellent opportunity to emphasize the importance of personal devotions and private worship among your young people. Here are some suggestions, as to how this may be done:

1. Sponsor a program early in the year on prayer and devotions, stressing the importance of these. Draw attention to the calendar and explain its use. Suggest to the young people that they have a special time and place for their personal devotions every day.
2. As new members join your youth fellowship have extra copies of the calendar available to them to use.
3. Encourage your young people to keep an extra sheet of paper in their calendars on which they might list other special prayer concerns, related to the work of the youth fellowship, the church, the Conference, and the Christian church as a whole.
4. Provide for a prayer cell experience at one of your youth fellowship meetings. Divide the group into smaller groups of two, three, or four. Have these groups conduct their own devotions according to the suggestions of the calendar, making prayer, Bible reading and discussion and spiritual sharing parts of such a session. The ideas gained from such a procedure will help those in private worship, who have little idea of just what is meant in devotions.
5. Encourage prayer partners. A personal sincere friend as a prayer partner can help much in promoting the devotional life of the individual. "Where two or three are gathered" Christ has promised His presence.

Youth leaders and committees would do well to make prayer and Bible study one of the continual emphasis in the youth program. Christ had chosen three from his disciples, who should share with Him in prayer fellowship the sorrow of that dark night. But even these three select men needed continual reminders. How much more do young Christians, who are faced with many temptations, need to watch and pray.

Go to dark Gethsemane,
Ye that feel the tempter's power,
Your Redeemer's conflict see:
Watch with Him one bitter hour;
Turn not from His griefs away;
Learn from Him to watch and pray.

Our Best?

When you turn on the radio and hear music which is badly out of pitch and very poorly done, what type of music is it? Unfortunately it is usually music put on by a church group. Which do you work harder on—a part in a class play at school, or a part in a young people's program at church? Did you ever try as hard to get someone to go to church with you as you tried to persuade them to go to a party with you? I'm afraid our answers to these questions will show that Christ and His church are receiving much less than our best. We seem to forget Christ's plea to "seek ye first the Kingdom of God."

If we were trying to "give of our best to our Master," what would we give? Certainly we'd give more money to God than we spend for our own amusement! Certainly we'd spend more time in prayer and Bible study than we spend reading the funny paper! Yet there is something more than time and money which we would certainly give—we'd give our life! Maybe this seems a little demanding. Maybe we could get away with holding back a little for ourselves—after all, we want to enjoy ourselves. That's just the trouble, we don't enjoy ourselves by giving God almost, but not quite all. In giving our lives we lose them. Let me tell of two people that I came in contact with recently.

The first was a man who picked me up at a bus stop in Cleveland in the summer of 1953. During our conversation he mentioned that he held the world's record for insurance sales and had an annual income that ran well into six figures. At the time he was driving a new Lincoln and commented that he had two other cars at home, a Mercury and a Cadillac. He had a home at Miami Beach, was the best in golf at his country club, and had a son who graduated from law school at the head of his class. Yet he added that he wasn't happy. He mentioned that he had purchased a new sport coat; but that he would get no enjoyment from it, for he would only add it to the 10 he already had. He also said that he had recently ordered a new $280 tuxedo, but added that that wouldn't give him any real satisfaction either.

The second man was neither rich nor famous. He was a missionary who had just returned to this country on furlough from Africa. He commented that people often ask him if he doesn't hate to leave this country when it is time to return to the field. On the contrary he said that he can hardly wait to return by the time his furlough is ended, for Africa is where he is doing God's will.

What is the difference between these two men? The one had everything in terms of modern standards, the other had nothing except the personal satisfaction of doing God's will. The one had spent his whole life on himself, the other had spent his life serving God and his fellow men. Which man would you rather be? We are the ones who make

The Man Without a Church

Is the man who is in 1-W service without a church? No. Though many of the approximately 275 men from our General Conference churches, who answered the 1-W Program Evaluation Study Questionnaire, seem to feel that way, we all know there are churches everywhere. Some have opportunity to attend services at their home church, so can continue warm relations; others enter into the work and worship of a congregation in the community where they work, either Mennonite or of another denomination. Some feel lost, or, what is worse, a few tend to lose themselves without realizing what is happening.

Where this occurs, that is doubly tragic. Many young men just out of high school or even older, may not be sufficiently rooted in their church and spiritual nurture to be able to stand alone when they make the radical change from the rather secluded rural life to the rapidly moving activity of the big city. Speaking for themselves or, perhaps more often for their young buddies, these men write into their comments: "There should be a closer tie with the home church"; or, "We'd like to hear more often from our minister or others in the church." For all our young men away from their home church, letters from their church home can do wonders.

To meet this need might be a good field of activity for the young people of the church to enter into. In churches where one or more of the young men are in service, whether as 1-A's or 1-O's in this case, minister and young people's organization could well co-operate in such contacts with them as sending church bulletins regularly, writing letters to these boys and visiting them when possible. Surely we all agree that keeping close ties with our members, and especially when we virtually send them out as our ambassadors of peace, they need our interest and our prayers. Many of them have wonderful opportunities to witness for salvation through Christ, as well as especially proclaim and demonstrate to the world ways of peace instead of ways of war.

It is, however, in place to point out the other side of this question; namely, that of the boys' concern about their church relations. Do they make an effort to keep in touch with the home church? All human relations have two sides to them. The church is sending The Mennonite and other literature to boys in service. Some churches, I am sure, send bulletins and letters. Do boys in service do their part—read, write to pastor or members of the young people's organization, attend the home church when they can? Do they leave a word of testimony for Christ and His peace with the home church in person or by letter? Boys about to be called by their draft boards can gain much help for their future two years from those who are engaged in this work. How much we can help each other and particularly if we remember it is for the sake of Christ.

There is a third side to this question. If visits to the home church are very rare or impossible, (in some communities frequent home visits are frowned upon) or even for all the intermittent Sundays, where do the 1-W boys worship and participate in church activities? Some units have their own weekly program of Bible study and worship services; some have Mennonite churches nearby which they can attend and work in. Many young men, however, have job assignments which make all of this practically impossible. And in the midst of it all, let us remember that hospital orderlies, for instance, often are on duty on Sunday morning. But all this does not solve the problem for many young men who do nothing about finding any Christian church where they could worship. Some boys declare it especially helpful in clarifying their belief to hear other pastors and worship with other Protestants.

OUR BEST?

this decision for our own lives. "But seek ye first His kingdom and His righteousness, and all these things shall be yours as well."

Does this mean that to give our lives to God we must all be missionaries? Certainly not! Neither does it mean, however, that we can say to God that we'll do anything he tells us to—except ———! Our first decision must be to give ourselves entirely over to God. From there God will lead the way.

Many of us will be tempted to say that we'll commit ourselves to God in a few years; but for the time being, while we're young, we'll just "string along" with the church and be "halfway Christians." Here I am reminded of the girl who made this type of comment to her pastor when he asked her about her future. Shortly after this she received a bouquet of roses from the pastor. It must have been a fine bouquet at one time, but when she received it the roses were wilted and unlovely. The next time she saw her pastor she thanked him for the bouquet, but mentioned that there must have been a mistake, for the bouquet was badly wilted when she got it. He explained that that was the way he had sent it to her, for he had wanted to get the good out of it before he gave it to her. Let's not sap the good out of our lives before we give them wholeheartedly to Christ's work. Let's enjoy the benefit of giving our best to our Master, now!

MCC News Notes

ANNUAL MCC MEETING HELD DEC. 29 AND 30

During 1954 Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches in the United States and Canada contributed $1,890,000 in cash and material aid for their unified relief and service ministry "in the name of Christ." This far-flung witness of Christian love and peace during the past year was carried out by more than 475 representatives who served in 24 countries including the United States and Canada.

This was the ministry reviewed in Chicago Dec. 29 and 30 by Mennonite and Brethren in Christ representatives who make up the Mennonite Central Committee. Following this review, Mennonite aid, peace, 1-W services, Voluntary Service, and mental health activities, these representatives planned the 1955 program.

The decision to decentralize the administration of the 1-W services program and to establish a committee to co-ordinate a ministry to 1-W men was perhaps the most significant development at this 1954 meeting. Under this setup all groups of 1-W men will be attached to local congregations or conference institutions instead of being served directly by such central agencies as MCC or the Mennonite Relief and Service Committee, Elkhart, Ind.

This arrangement is being made so young men away from their home churches in government service can be tied as closely as possible to the service and witness of the churches and have ample opportunity for Christian growth and service. This setup is intended to give 1-W's better opportunities for personal development and satisfactory educational, social, and recreational activities.

The committee on co-ordination of 1-W administration will consist of representatives selected by Mennonite and Brethren in Christ groups. This committee will receive plans of how conference groups minister to their men in government service and will be a clearinghouse for a co-ordinated ministry to 1-W men.

This 1-W ministry plan was presented by Albert M. Gaeddert of Inman, Kan., who assumed the position of director of MCC 1-W services during the past year. In one of the messages during the Wednesday evening inspirational service, Brother Gaeddert suggested that the 1-W program reveals the weaknesses of Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches, but offers excellent opportunities for sacrificial living, for systematic giving to the Church, for "plus service" and for a mission outreach of the Church.

"It seems to me that our churches have not done too good a job to help our young people face the world alone," Brother Gaeddert said. He went on to say that "it almost seems as if we depend upon the government to spell out where we must make sacrifices."

Another Wednesday evening message was presented by Frank J. Wiens of Reedley, Calif., director of the South American MCC program during the past five years. "The basic object and concern of aid to our brethren in South America must be to strengthen the Church," Brother Wiens said. "It is most encouraging to note that Mennonites in Paraguay struck out on missionary activity soon after their arrival." Brother Wiens outlined some of the educational and economic needs and developments essential to the Mennonite church community in Paraguay.

Harvey Toews of the Waterloo, Canada, office introduced the Ailsa Craig Boys Farm, a new project which was approved by the annual meeting. This Christian home for delinquent boys is being established on a 135-acre farm donated by the Ailsa Craig Mennonite Church in Ontario. Brother Toews outlined causes of juvenile delinquency, related developments leading to the establishment of this home and told of contributions that can be made to the lives of delinquents through a service "in the name of Christ."

The fourth presentation on Wednesday evening was made by Ed Peters, Mennonite potato, fruit, and beef producer of Wasco, Calif. Brother Peters described the work of American Mennonite businessmen who have organized to strengthen Mennonite communities in Latin America through demonstration projects in industry and agriculture. This group, known as Mennonite Economic Development Associates, holds before it the vision of demonstrating American know-how and making the Christian gospel known at the same time, Brother Peters said.

MEDA members met following the annual meeting. Members of the Mennonite Aid and Peace Sections met before the annual meeting began Wednesday afternoon.

Mennonite Aid Section members and directors of Mennonite Resettlement Finances, Inc., had been called together to consider the continued organization and function of these two groups. This meeting passed on to the annual meeting a recommendation that MRF be liquidated and its assets transferred to MCC. The recommendation was approved by the annual meeting and the decision made to continue a study of the Aid Section organization and function.

Peace Section members, in addition to reviewing the past year's developments, heard a brief address by Orie O. Miller, MCC executive-secretary, on "New Peace Frontiers." Brother Miller expressed the feeling that Mennonites today are respected for their Christian peace testimony as never before and have a God-given opportunity to make this position known to the world and to the Church at large.

Brother Miller told of the need for this witness in Japan, the readiness of persons at Evanston to listen and the call for assistance by CO's in Belgium and Luxemburg which do not at the present time recognize such a position. He told how Mennonite PAX men in Enkenbach, Germany, are making a most significant peace witness. A vast number of American military personnel are located in the area around Enkenbach and many persons think it unbelievable that Americans are performing a constructive service in the midst of this military situation, he said.

The Mennonite Central Committee now consists of 22 members and two associate members. Most of the members attended this year's annual meeting. Two of them—B. B. Janz and J. B. Martin—could not be present because of illness.

Reorganization resulted in the selection of the following executive committee members: C. N. Hostetter, Jr., of Grantham, Penn., chairman, representing the Brethren in Christ; H. A. Fast of North Newton, Kan., vice-chairman, General Conference Mennonite; Orie O. Miller of Akron, Penn., executive-secretary, member at large; H. S. Bender of Goshen, Ind., assistant secretary, Mennonite; Waldo Hiebert of Hillsboro, Kan., Mennonite Brethren; William T. Snyder of Akron, assistant executive-secretary, member at large; and J. J. Thiessen of Saskatoon, Sask., Canadian Mennonite Board of Colonization. P. C. Hiebert of Hillsboro, continues a member of the executive committee by virtue of being made a life member when he retired as MCC chairman.

Other committee members: Oscar Burkholder of Breslau, Ontario, Nonresistant Relief Organization; George L. Classen of Yale, S. D., Krimmer Mennonite Brethren; William M. Enns of Winkler, Man., Canadian Mennonite Relief Committee; Henry F. Garber of Mt. Joy, Penn., Lancaster Mennonite Conference; Kenneth Geiger of Elkhart, Ind., United Missionary Church; Andrew Gingerich of Mannsville, N. Y., Conservative Mennonite; B. B. Janz of Coaldale, Alta., Mennonite Central Relief Committee.

Schmidt of Marion, S. D., Evangelical Mennonite Brethren; F. M. Wenger of Moundridge, Kan., Church of God in Christ Mennonite; Abe Yoder of Hartville, Ohio, Old Order Amish; and Merlo M. Zimmerman of Flanagan, Ill., Evangelical Mennonite.

The associate members: Jared F. Gerig of Ft. Wayne, Ind., Missionary Church Association, and George J. Rempel of Meade, Kan., Emmanuel Mennonite Church.

AN APPRECIATION OF THE LORD'S PRAYER

more than prayer to bring sinful men into the presence of God. Jesus alone can do that. He alone can successfully deal with man's sin. He does it for those who will pray as He instructs them. He stands with the worshiper in the prayer.

Our Father in heaven, help us to see Thee in the prayer He taught us to pray. Amen.

HIGHLIGHTS OF MISSIONARY OBSERVATION

We met quite a number of Formosan Christian. May there be many more.

Urgency of the Islands

We can no longer think of missions as we once did. The world is rapidly changing in every respect. There is an urgency which is hard to describe. Many forces are at work bidding for the heart of the Far East. Communism is vigorously at work. Especially is this true on Kyushu Island. In Japan communist literature can be secured very readily. They are working in every sector of society. They work hard and fast.

The Catholic church is very hard at work on both islands. They are pouring hundreds of workers and tons of material goods to implement their efforts. They are making a concerted bid for the heart of both islands. (Just in front of us on this plane are some Catholic young people on the way to Madras, India, for a great Asian Catholic conference).

Various isms are putting forth strong effort. This is true all over the Far East. Our plane landed several hours ago at Thailand. Christian Science literature and workers were on hand in the airport building. Other false isms and cults are diligent in their efforts to win people to their beliefs.

But, we are alert to the needs of the islands too! May the Lord grant that we may feel a real urgency and go forth with pentecostal power. To meet the urgency will require much prayer, money, and personnel. Will we meet the challenge?

—Butterfield Church, Butterfield, Minn.: On Thanksgiving Day, our pastor, Edward Duerksen, spoke on Heb. 13:15, a passage of praise by word and deed. Several brought verbal expressions of gratitude to God for His many blessings. We were happy for, and inspired by those of our returning young people who participated in song and devotion during our Thanksgiving services. Sunday evening, Nov. 28, Rev. and Mrs. Alvin Kleinsasser brought a challenging message entitled "Living a Victorious Christian Life." After the message he was united in membership with our church, an action which is a prerequisite toward obtaining a General Conference ordination certificate in his future work. Dec. 1, the Senior Mission Society provided a fellowship supper in the church basement. Guest speakers were Rev. and Mrs. Max Eisenbraun, missionaries in China. —First Church, Nappanee, Ind.: Dec. 19 was a memorable day for our congregation, our first Christmas services in our new church! The children gave a program during the Sunday school hour. At the morning worship service white gifts of special Christmas offerings were brought by young and old. The evening service centered around a play, "There's a Song in the Air," given by the Loyal Berean class, with the help of intermediates and seniors. The minutes of the church board meetings are being mimeographed and made available to the congregation after each meeting. It is felt that in this way the congregation will have a better understanding of the work and problems of the board, and can pray more intelligently for this work. Thus far it has met with much favor. The Silver Wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Leon Gering was observed by the honored couple in a special two week "wedding trip" to the Hawaiian Islands. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dyck made the trip with them. Why?

Why "shop around" for "love stories"
Till empty so of purse and heart
When the good old Bible glories
In being for you love's sweetest chart—

Why look abroad for this and that
In "best sellers" till blue of face
When the Bible's magnificat
Sings also of God's saving grace—

Why try to "keep up with the times"
By books you think more up to date
When the Bible beyond the times
Frames for you, in Christ, Heaven's gate—

Why seek for literature "that's real"
In theses men have thought and wrought
When the Bible gives you "the feel"
Of life with deathless triumph fraught!

"different." Here is an individual whose chief concern does not seem to be luxury and conveniences, but a spiritual atmosphere "where prayer is wont to be made."

How we emphasize modern conveniences, the latest heating systems, the best equipped kitchen, the most desirable location, as being the marks of a fine home. It is refreshing to note that there are still those who consider the custom of "family worship" of prime importance.

Into the Beyond

REV. CHRISTIAN J. GOERING was born in Russia, March 16, 1869, and died December 11, 1954, at the advanced age of over 85 years. In 1874 he migrated with his parents to America and spent the rest of his life in the Moundridge, Kansas, community. In 1895 the Eden Church elected him to the ministry, and in March, 1902, he was ordained as Elder and served the Eden Church until 1937. His was a busy life of service both in the church and community. Truly, many have found spiritual blessings through his long ministry.

"Life, now I am ready!
Not baffled and dismayed;
I met Him on the highest hill,
No more am I afraid.
A heart for any fate is mine;
There were thorn prints on His brow
And nail scars in His hands.
Life, I am ready now."

This Is For Parents

"Parents are likely to make a great mistake in matters that create attitudes on the part of their children. Little inconsistencies, or sometimes great inconsistencies, get children pretty badly mixed up. I am listing several of these inconsistencies:

1. If you assume that a three-hour session at a movie, any movie, is harmless for your child and then insist that a two-hour period at church school and morning worship is injurious to his nervous system, that gets him pretty badly mixed-up, does it not?

2. If you give your child 50 cents to go to a movie once a week and 15 or 20 cents more for refreshments and a dime or a nickel to put in the collection at Sunday school, this is likely to get him badly twisted as to his sense of proportionate values, isn't it?

3. If you allow your child to listen for several hours a day to radio and TV thrillers and then assume that there is no time in the day for a short prayer and a brief conversation about religion and spiritual and moral things, again he becomes confused as to comparative values.

4. If you insist that your child shall spend plenty of time to get his weekday school lessons and talk to him about these things but pay no attention to his getting his Sunday school lessons, he is pretty likely to grow up into spiritual illiteracy, isn't he?

5. If you recognize the importance of guidance and instruction in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and other factors of ordinary education but assume that your child will just naturally grow into a religious person without guidance and instruction and without benefit of your personal influence, you are encouraging the development of a poorly balanced character, aren't you?

6. If you send your child off to Sunday school while you do other things, such as taking care of the lawn or playing golf, or going fishing, and then criticize the church because it has not been able to capture the loyalty of your child, you are a little unreasonable, aren't you? Or in the same line, if as a family you do things or go places about three times out of four that take you away from church participations on Sunday, you are a little unreasonable in expecting the church to make out of your child a devoted and sincere Christian. Wouldn't you say that is true?"

CONSOLIDATING THE BOOKSTORE WITH THE OFFICES AT NEWTON

Last June Mrs. Elva K. Leisy of Dallas, Texas, made another building in Newton — 720 Main St. — available for Conference use by deeding it on an annuity basis. The purpose of this gift is to provide more room and to bring the bookstore and storage facilities together with the Conference offices in the 722-Main-St. building which Mrs. Leisy gave outright to the Conference about eleven years ago and which it adjoins on the south.

Considerable remodeling was necessary to convert the 720 building for most practical and economic use. The front also is being changed to conform in appearance to the present office building. When all this is completed the date for dedicating the enlarged office-store facilities in Newton will be determined and announced.

FINANCING CHRIST'S WORK

The various Conference budgets have been made up and adopted. Much consideration has gone into these budgets by the different Boards. The Boards now launch into their work for the new year with the faith that our churches and individuals will rally to their support and make possible their planned work by meeting the budget requirements.

There are two approaches to this matter of giving for Christ's work. One is to stress the amount of money needed; how much per person would be required, (less than $19 per member, or less than the tithe on $200); how we are obligated to pay our just debts and how we ought to pay our full share to the Lord.

The other approach is to point out the great possibilities of Christ's work in our Conference; what a blessed opportunity to help in a practical way; how necessary the work is and how rewarding both to us and those helped. Concrete examples may be given showing what has been accomplished, and what joy has been raised in human hearts.

The one method seems to say "Pay what thou owest." The other says "See what the Lord is doing." It may be necessary to use both methods, but the question might well be asked whether we should not put more emphasis on the second method. As a rule, if our people know what is being done and what is being planned, they are ready to help worthy causes.

FATHER AND SON

Two articles in this issue deal with the concerns of fathers for sons. In the one case the father repents of his negligence to his son; in the other the father has lost his son and wants to save other sons.

A mother was asked how she raised such a fine family since the father's work took him away from home so much. She gave the significant reply that "when he's home, he's home."

A kind and understanding father who loves and appreciates his children, and after a strenuous day's work can still be "at home" with his son, will be establishing a relationship of first-rate importance. He will receive many fine rewards as he finds himself co-operating with God in developing a Christian character in his child. It is good to realize this fact before it is too late, for sons so soon become men.

MENNONITE COOPERATION

Shortly before our own church historian, Dr. C. Henry Smith, passed on, he expressed the opinion that in a hundred years from now our church historians would look back and pick out as the most significant event of this period the work of our Mennonite Central Committee. In his mind, this ability of all branches of Mennonites working together in matters of Relief and peace and rehabilitation was a symbol of what might be done on a still wider scale.

Our groups are small and it seems unfortunate that we can not be more closely unified in our work and witness. But there are trends which point the way toward such further unity. The work of the Mennonite Central Committee with the young men, both in Civilian Public Service and now in 1-W work shows this is possible. Furthermore, the young men who saw this unity at first hand will soon occupy positions of leadership in the various conferences. They have been convinced that closer co-operation is possible and desirable.

There are already signs of such closer co-operation. The schools and colleges have a united organization of Mennonite and affiliated colleges. This group has its regular meetings and finds them very helpful. There have been a number of "Mennonite Cultural Conferences" which have brought the various groups together in helpful ways.

There is an increasing co-operative effort in providing materials for Sunday school work. Much time has already been spent in a unified effort to produce together the best possible material.

There is also consideration of bringing about a closer relationship among our theological schools. Last summer the joint effort in holding a seminary summer session seemed to prove that such united efforts could be mutually helpful. Another similar joint seminary summer school is being planned for this summer, to be held at Mennonite Biblical Seminary.

Many are asking, if such sessions are possible in summer, why not also during the regular school year? Closer co-operation on the theological level might be both possible and desirable.

OUR SERVICE-CONSCIOUS YOUTH

One of the very encouraging features of our church life is the increasing number of young people who are giving valuable time in some form of special Christian service. True, some of it is demanded by the government in lieu of military service, yet much of it is entirely "voluntary." Even when working out the two years required by our government there is a splendid opportunity to give such service in a Christian way that a lasting contribution to the cause of Christ is made.

Whether such work is done in hospitals, children's homes, or other institutions; or in foreign lands in building houses or better farms, or a deeper faith in God, there is a great opportunity attached to it for real spiritual service. A year or two spent in "Voluntary Service," or in "1-W" work may prove to be among the richest experiences of life.

The 1955 Contribution Blanks show the budget breakdown: Missions, $582,825; Christian Service, $172,075; Education and Publication, $54,000; General Treasury, $7,000; Ministers' Aid, $8,000; Radio Subsidy, $9,000. In setting up their 1955 schedule of offerings, churches should take note of the last three items. Compared to the budgets of the other causes, these are very small, but these small amounts are really needed.

"Listen Son"

I am saying this to you as you lie asleep, one little paw crumpled under you cheek and the blond curls stickily wet on your damp forehead. I have stolen into your room alone. Just a few minutes ago, as I sat reading my paper in the library, a hot, stifling wave of remorse swept over me. I could not resist it. Guiltily I came to your bedside.

"These are the things I was thinking, son: I had been cross to you. I scolded you as you were dressing for school because you gave your face merely a dab with a towel. I took you to task for not cleaning your shoes. I called out angrily when I found you had thrown some of your things on the floor.

"At breakfast I found fault, too. You spilled things. You gulped down your food. You put your elbows on the table. You spread butter too thick on your bread. And as you started off to play and I made for my train, you turned and waved a little hand and called, 'Good-bye, Daddy!' and I frowned, and said in reply, 'Hold your shoulders back.'

"Then it began all over again in the late afternoon. As I came up the hill road I spied you down on your knees playing marbles. There were holes in your stockings. I humiliated you before your boy friends by making you march ahead of me back to the house. Stockings were expensive—and if you had to buy them you would be more careful! Imagine that, son, from a father! It was such stupid, silly logic.

The Good-Night Kiss

"Do you remember, later, when I was reading in the library, how you came in, softly, timidly, with a sort of hurt, haunted look in your eyes? When I glanced up over my paper, impatient at the interruption, you hesitated at the door. 'What is it you want?' I snapped.

"You said nothing, but ran across, in one tempestuous plunge; and threw your arms around my neck and kissed me, again and again, and your small arms tightened with an affection that God had set blooming in your heart and which even neglect could not wither. And then you were gone, pattering up the stairs.

"Well son, it was shortly afterwards that my paper slipped from my hands and a terrible sickening fear came over me. Suddenly I saw myself as I really was, in all my horrible selfishness, and I felt sick at heart.

"What has habit been doing to me? The habit of complaining, of finding fault, of reprimanding—all of these were my rewards to you for being a boy. It was not that I did not love you; it was that I expected so much of youth. I was measuring you by the yardstick of my own years.

"And there was so much that was good, and fine, and true in your character. You did not deserve my treatment of you, son. The little heart of you was as big as the dawn itself over the wide hills. All this was shown by your spontaneous impulse to rush in and kiss me good-night. Nothing else matters tonight, son. I have come to your bedside in the darkness, and I have knelt there, choking with emotion, and so ashamed! It is a feeble atonement. I know you would not understand these things if I told them to you during your waking hours, yet I must say what I am saying. I must burn sacrificial fires, alone, here in your bedroom, and make free confession. And I have prayed God to strengthen me in my new resolve. Tomorrow I will be a real daddy! I will chum with you, and suffer when you suffer and laugh when you laugh. I will bite my tongue when impatient words come. I will keep saying as if it were a ritual: 'He is nothing but a boy—a little boy!'

"I am afraid I have visualized you as a man. Yet as I see you now, son, crumpled and weary in your cot, I see that you are still a baby. Yesterday you were in your mother's arms, your head on her shoulder. I have asked too much, too much.

"Dear Boy! Dear little son! A penitent kneels at your infant shrine, here in the moonlight. I kiss the little fingers, and the damp forehead, and the yellow curl.

"Tears came, and heartache and remorse, and also a greater, deeper love, when you ran through the library door and wanted to kiss me!"

The Shrine of Sleeping Childhood

I do not know of a better shrine before which a father or mother may kneel or stand than that of a sleeping child. I do not know of a holier place, a temple where one is more likely to come into closer touch with all that is infinitely good, where one may come nearer to seeing and feeling God. From that shrine come matins of love and laughter, of trust and cheer to bless the new day; and before that shrine should fall our soft vespers, our grateful benedictions for the night. At the cot of a sleeping babe all man-made ranks and inequalities are ironed out, and all mankind kneels reverently before the living image of the Creator. To understand a child, to go back and grow up sympathetically with it, to hold its love and confidences, to be accepted by it, without fear or restraint, as a companion and playmate, is just about the greatest good fortune that can come to any man or woman in this world—and, perhaps, in any other world, for all we know.

And I am passing this "confession" along to the fathers who may be privileged to read it, and for the benefit of the "little fellers"—the growing, earth-blessing little "Jimmies" and "Billys," and "Marys" and "Janes" of this very good world of ours.

Strength for to-day is all that we need,
As there never will be a to-morrow;
For to-morrow will prove but another to-day
With its measure of joy or of sorrow.

In the "New York" of South America

WALTER and MARTHA DYCK

Buenos Aires is the largest city in Argentina—in fact, in the whole of South America. Its six million people live in an area, nearly 20 by 40 miles. (30 X 60 km.) There would be enough people of Mennonite background in this vast metropolis to form a large Mennonite church. But, as we have experienced in other cities, Buenos Aires, meaning "good air," is not an ideal atmosphere for the growth of a Mennonite fellowship.

For over 35 years the Old Mennonites have been doing mission work in Argentina. Spanish-speaking congregations have grown up in an area extending 400 miles out of B. A. A newly dedicated chapel, at the mission headquarters in this city, is attractive and well built. Their mission school at Bragado is a positive factor in the growth of an indigenous church.

A mass revival effort conducted recently by Evangelist Hicks, at home in the USA, has had a pronounced effect on the thinking of hundreds of thousands in Argentina. The evangelical witness and position in B.A. has been strengthened. Usually 50,000 to 60,000 and once up to 150,000 attended one service. When the press, when conversations on busses and in places of business turn to a discussion of Christ, then there is hope for the Protestant cause in South America. Attendance at the Old Mennonite mission has grown considerably since these meetings.

We also have a concern for our German-speaking people scattered throughout the city. Among these, about 135 chose to stay here in 1947, when due to a revolution in Paraguay, it was impossible for three months, for the MCC to move Mennonite refugees up the river to their new home in Paraguay. Since then several hundred others have returned and are now trying their hand at bricklaying. Used bricks are relatively cheap. The door and window frames are expensive. One room finished, they move in, and then continue with another room or two. Stucco from without; plaster within, makes modest but attractive homes.

The MCC is providing a fine evangelical witness to these people in the persons of Brother and Sister Martin Duerksen. For a week, Dec. 7-14, 1954, we were privileged to go with them in their work. One afternoon we went to Villa de Mayo to make house calls and conduct a service in one of the homes. About 50 attended. Another day we called on homes in the Ezpeleta sector. About 25 attended there. On Wednesdays and Sundays, prayer services and preaching services are held at the MCC center in Villa Ballester. Individual participation was good. A deep, earnest spirit was evident. A fine young people's choir sang on Sunday.

Going by train, subway, or bus, both pastor and people sometimes have over two hours one way to go to services. A car would be a great help to our brother and family here.

Since August (1954) a church fellowship has been organized. It is called the "Alianza Evangelica Mennonita de la Argentina" (Alliance of Evangelical Mennonites of Argentina). It has to be designated and registered with the government as "evangelical," for this is a Roman Catholic country.

This all-Mennonite fellowship is truly evangelical in a wholesome sense of the word. Its doctrinal statement reads much like one in a Mennonite church in another land. The membership, as yet, is small (about fifty). Excuses for not joining are those which any active pastor has often heard. Requirements for membership are on a high New Testament level.

We had a blessed week in B. A. The six services conducted, the congenial hospitality, the secluded guest room, the many contacts and consultations, the fine family spirit (the Duerksens have five children)—all this has been an inspiration to us.

As we pen these words, sitting on the flat tile roof of the MCC home in B. A., we see two dozen windmills arising from a sea of tin and tile covered dwellings. Tomorrow we cross again into Uruguay, this time with a seaplane, to continue our contact with our Danzig Mennonites. Next Sunday we are to bring the "Festpredigt" at the ordination of the newly elected elder of the Montevideo congregation. Hope to tell you about it next time.

Will you pray for us? But will you also remember with us, the Duerksens who labor in a hard field. They are doing a commendable and much needed work here. They represent us in a worthy way. Should you come through Buenos Aires some time, please do stop in. A card or letter of encouragement will be appreciated by the Duerksens. Address: San Lorenzo 249, Villa Ballester, F.C.N.B.M., Buenos Aires. Argentina.

Film Review

"No Vacant Chairs" (16 mm., sound, 15 minutes) color, rental $6.00. Available from Moody Bible Institute, 830 N. LaSalle Street, Chicago, Illinois.

This film presents the story of J. C. Adams teaching a Sunday school class of junior boys. He is having a difficult time keeping their attention because he didn't prepare sufficiently and because he is using language which is beyond the grasp of the members of his class. In desperation he goes to the superintendent and tells him that he is going to give up the class.

The superintendent points out that other teachers have had similar problems in getting started in teaching but have overcome their difficulties. The film portrays a few situations in which some of the teachers are doing a good job of teaching. J. C. Adams enrolls in a teacher training course as the film ends.

Two Years That Count

ALBERT M. GAEDDERT*

We have reason to be grateful that in choosing our 1-W work we have the opportunity to perform a real Christian service. Each 1-W has this choice. He can choose to volunteer for PAX service, for Voluntary Service, or for alternative service. In alternative service the 1-W receives the prevailing wages; in Voluntary Service he works for $10 per month plus maintenance; in PAX service he and his family pay what they can toward a cost of $75 per month. This is what it takes to pay his transportation to and from his foreign field of service and provides his maintenance while in the service. All of these are open for 1-W's.

The PAX boys are 1-W's, too. They give their time to service abroad. Many work in Germany building homes for refugees; others work in Greece in a program of agricultural rehabilitation of villages that were overrun repeatedly by bandits and the villagers left without animals for tilling their soil that was badly eroded and very rocky at best. PAX men work also in Korea, alongside native Koreans, in a rehabilitation program; several work in an orphan boys' home. There are reportedly more than 100,000 orphans in Korea. Others workin Jordan, in Indo-China and in 21 different countries outside of the U.S. If anyone desires to make his two years of service count richly in sacrificial service, here is an opportunity that is perhaps unprecedented.

Not all can go abroad. And they need not to perform a much-needed service "in the name of Christ." Many choose to give their time in the US, receiving $10 per month in addition to their maintenance. These are the Voluntary Service workers. Wiltwyck School for Boys, Esopus, New York, is one of the institutions where volunteers serve. Young, tender minds and lives, who are usually less at fault than their parents, can often be saved from a life of violence and crime by being shown "another Way" by someone who takes an interest in them.

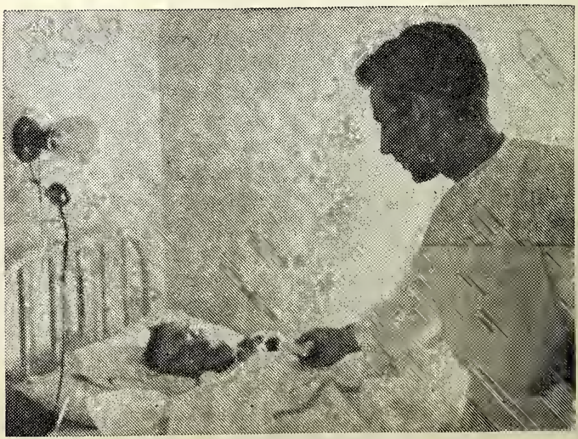
Harold Regier, a member of the Burrton Mennonite Church, Burrton, Kansas, is a 1-W in Voluntary Service at Gulfport, Mississippi. He spends much of his time working with Negro youths in the North Gulfport Christian community center.

Gulfport, Miss., is one unit of which we have heard more. Why do not church people take two weeks of vacation this winter and visit Gulfport? Here you will find the Bible being taught to youngsters who would otherwise not be taught any Bible. You will see directed recreation in place of questionable amusements and night clubs. You will find ways in which help is given to churches, to ministers, to teachers, and others in a way that enables the indigenous church to become stronger and better able to cope with its problems. You will see house visitation work here that leaves its imprint on entire families.

In Portland, Maine, there is another VS unit for 1-W men. Men are given a two-month training as they begin their hospital work. From that point forward they are used to do the work to the fullest of their abilities, often doing highly technical work. Morale is high in this unit. This year their ball club was voted as the team showing the best sportsmanship during the season.

There are other VS projects. One should mention them all, but space does not permit. Kansas City has a unit where men work for prevailing wages, but the 1-W's bring their wages back to the unit so that other "plus service" may be rendered. On "skid rows" they rescue men from the "holes" and rehabilitate where possible. Rehabilitation is successful only if it means a change of heart and a yielding to Christ. If only they had places away from the city where they could give them work and rehabilitate them, they say.

Neither is all the service rendered "in the name of Christ" done by those who work without pay. More and more men are realizing the opportunities of a "plus service" beyond the working hours of the day. Even while on the job in the institution there are ways of living up to the challenge of Christ—"What do ye more than others?"



Here a 1-W orderly feeds a TB patient. Ministering to the sick has been a significant Christian service and provided opportunities to witness for the Christian faith.

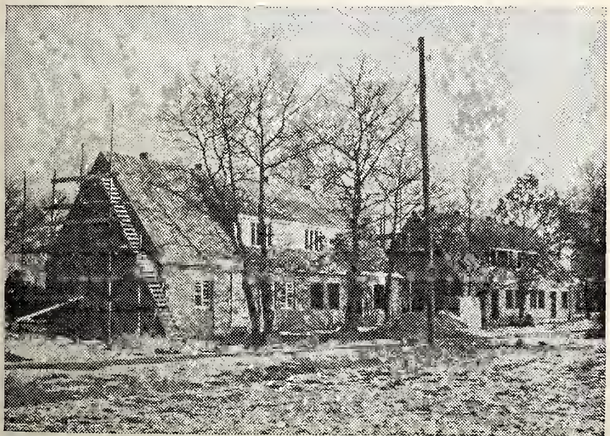
*Director of Mennonite Central Committee 1-W Services.

Denver's 1-W's are supporting a chaplain in Colorado General Hospital. This is the first time in the history of this hospital that a chaplain has been employed. The opportunities are numberless; have the chaplain himself tell you about his work, or better yet, follow him through the hospital as he goes from ward to ward. This is the way in which many patients can be reached as well as families who have someone hospitalized. The extended hand of Christian fellowship in time of sickness or bereavement is a very welcome hand. In addition to supporting the chaplaincy program, there are many who give, just as folks at home do, for church and conference causes. Indeed, there are also those who have begun to give the tithe! No doubt, these will have begun a system of methodical and proportionate giving that will be used the rest of their lives.

In Topeka there are both types of units—a small VS unit and the larger alternative service unit. The interesting development there is the growing participation in "plus service" among the alternative service fellows. The VS unit sponsors a boys' club in North Topeka where there are crafts, recreation and Bible study classes. While this was started by the VS group, the 1-W's are taking an interest in giving of their means and of their time and talent to this way of helping the youth of North Topeka.

While it is realized that by the nature of the program it is not too demanding of sacrifice, ought we not to add that perhaps our home churches are not either greatly demanding of a "plus type of service"; neither are our farms and our business. It is very much up to each individual what he wants to make of it.

There is no question about the opportunities for Christian service in the 1-W service. And one is happy that we are beginning to realize in the 1-W program how a "plus service" can be rendered in various ways. Perhaps the 1-W program can even point out ways in which this "plus service" can also be rendered by others who are not in the program, but are at home doing their duties assigned to them and going about their regular business.



PAX men in Germany are building houses for displaced Mennonite refugees. Such housing projects are resulting in new church communities. In addition to performing this valuable construction work, PAX men find opportunities for "plus service" activities.

Flashes of Thought

Fences

Walter Gering

It was only one out of thousands of letters which reach the desk of the President. How many letters flood the mails, bearing their requests to the chief executive. All are urgent appeals clamoring for help. It would be utterly impossible to yield to all of them. But this was different; there was an urgency about the appeal of this father which would not be denied.

You see, it had to do with a canal which had been constructed to carry water across the country. The canal was a worthy project, supplying cool, refreshing water to the thirsty land. Many a farmer's crop had been saved by its flow. But the appeal of this father would not be silenced: "Please build this fence, Mr. President. I can't fence it in nor can any of my neighbors, because it belongs to our government. That's why I am writing to you."

Those little children—how they loved to bathe in the flowing stream. There was the constant urge to get into the waters on those hot summer days. But this letter: "Please build this fence, Mr. President" —what kind of a crank was this, calling for a fence, barring the children from their favored swimming hole? Surely there was nothing wrong in this summer activity.

Yes, it had provided many happy hours of pleasure. But there had been a terrible price. Thirty-three boys and girls, one by one, had disappeared in the waters never to return. So it was that this appeal had come: "Please build this fence, Mr. President. Build it for Joe — not my Joe now — because he was the last boy the canal took from his mamma and daddy. Not for my Joe but for some other little Joe—or David—who's all boy and might be No. 34."

As parents we face the sobering question: are we building fences along the canals of life, protecting them from the waters which might harm them? Treacherous waters flow daily; tragedy lies round about them. How many a life could be spared if only we would join in building protective fences along the way. Certainly it costs something to build fences; they are expensive. But the value of one life and soul far exceeds the cost of any fence.

In the 1955 budget appears a new item: "Radio Subsidy, $9,000." What does it mean? In short it means that the General Conference hopes to eventually bring a sustained witness for Christ and Christian living in America via radio. Years ago the radio committee was created. In time the "Faith and Life" broadcasts were successfully established in Newton. It is believed that this year this ministry should be expanded into other areas. Churches and individuals who love to support Christian radio programs are invited to send their gifts to the Conference Treasurer, 722 Main, Newton, Kansas.

Friendly Corners Highlights

GLEN HABEGGER

Occasionally we have some visitors find their way to this spot nine and one-half miles south of Eloy on Sunshine Boulevard, and approximately one-half mile west of a "wide spot in the road" called Friendly Corners. One Saturday afternoon in October Richard E. West, secretary of the Rocky Mountain District for the American Bible Society called at our station to become acquainted with our facilities and our work. Many of the Scripture portions distributed inour work here are obtained from the American Bible Society. Mr. West also accompanied Rev. Oscar L. Smith, American Bible Society representative for this area, to various camps for cotton pickers where Brother Smith regularly holds open-air services with the aid of a powerful two-speaker public address system mounted on his Chevrolet station wagon. This year Brother Smith first came out for camp services on the afternoon of the third Saturday in August. Rev. Donald Lloyd and I go with Brother Smith to bring short sermons. Music is provided by sacred recordings.

A. J. Harrison of San Fernando, California, was our evangelist for two weeks of evangelistic meetings beginning November 21 and ending December 5. Attendance was encouraging, the highest number present for any one meeting being 78. We have evidence that some of the Precious Seed fell on good ground. Fifteen boys and girls voiced the decision to receive Jesus as their Savior from sin, but that isn't all. Sixteen men, thirsty for the Water of Life, came to the Savior. These "babes in Christ" will need help to grow in this newly received life from Christ. Especially the children will need Christian nurture, for most of them come from homes where the parents are not Christian. Perhaps some parents will be strongly reminded of the need of their eternal souls by their own children. We pray that it may be so. O that there might be good soil instead of thorny soil! Fifteen of the men who accepted Christ were Mexicans living in a camp situated about 500 feet east of our station. During the first week of our special meetings I had distributed in this camp some Spanish gospel tracts and some Spanish Christian magazines. This literature the men received gladly. Some of the men accepted the invitation to attend the special services even though most of them could understand almost no English. It came to pass that on the Sunday morning of November 28 a certain Senor Riviera, a Spanish-speaking Christian, came to the service. Riviera, a native of the Rio Grande Valley in Texas, had just moved into the community, had happened to see our chapel, and had decided that that was the church he wanted to attend. "Every member of my family is a Christian" declared this Mexican gentleman who has seen the passing of perhaps forty-five years. After the service on this Sunday morning he conversed with some Mexicans who had also attended the service. Evening came and Senor Riviera came again to the service. When opportunity for testimonies was given he asked permission to come forward and sing "What a Friend We Have in Jesus" in Spanish as his testimony. Several Mexicans present that evening listened intently. I'm sure not a word of the song was wasted! Conversing with these friends after the service, Senor Riviera, discovering the hunger these men had for the gospel, asked permission to use our chapel on the following evening to preach to them. Using the story of Nicodemus, Riviera preached to fifteen Mexicans and the next evening also a few Americans from the camp across the road. When the opportunity was given to decide for Christ, the fifteen men from south of the border responded. ". . . He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord" (1 Cor. 1:31).

A few days after these men were lined up in camp and ready to board a bus and some trucks to return to Mexico. Before they left I had the opportunity of presenting most of the 150 Mexicans with Spanish Gospels of John. Spanish New Testaments—perhaps two dozen of them—had been given to the men who attended the special services and also to the fifteen who professed faith in Christ. On the morning when these men left, approximately a dozen and a half more Spanish New Testaments were distributed among those who had not yet received Testaments. More of them would have taken New Testaments but our supply was insufficient. Many of the men seemed eager to receive the gospel portions and one man asked for a Spanish Bible. We thank God that we could get the Word to these men before they recrossed the border. We pray God will greatly multiply this Seed by producing a good harvest.

Miss Nickel and Mrs. Habegger distributed Christmas gifts that many people had provided for the children in the cotton camps. Toys, clothes, colors, color books, and candy sticks were given.

Children's Bible classes are very few in number at this season of the year. Before cooler weather came classes were held after school, as well as on Saturdays and on Sunday afternoons. Now there are no classes after school and very few on weekends since one must wait until the middle of the day until the air is warm enough to have class outdoors. If the sky is cloudy class cannot be held at all.

However, the regular chapel services continue. Sunday school with Miss Nickel in charge is at 9:30 a.m. There are three classes for children of three different age levels, preschool and first grade, second grade to fourth grade, fifth grade to eighth grade. Exceptions are made where children are below average ability to understand. The writer teaches an adult class which has had as many as six or seven in attendance and on a few Sundays no one has come. At 10:30 the worship follows the Sunday school. In the evening at 7:30 we have a

"We Thank You"

Here is one of the many letters of gratitude we received from our people in South America. Brother Hübert has been helped by our Board of Missions while he studied in Brazil in a Lutheran Seminary. He has finished the course and is now on his way to his home church in Paraguay where he expects to serve as spiritual shepherd. Let us thank God for such consecrated leadership

—John Thiessen, Executive Secretary
Board of Missions

I herewith wish to acknowledge receipt of your November 9, 1954, letter, at which time I also received the check for my trip. I wish to thank you for everything that you have done for us during our stay here and also for sending the travel money so promptly.

Many words of thanks are of no use to you or anyone else, but we shall try with God's help, to pass on to others what we have received here as the opportunity affords. We thank you for your well wishes and would ask you to continue to remember us in your intercessory prayers. I know that I would not go far with what I have learned here and therefore we will need much strength, patience, and love from our heavenly Father. He will give these to us according to His promises if we and others ask Him for them. Therefore we shall have faith and shall do our duty.

May our heavenly Father repay you and all our brethren in North America many times for what you have done for us in South America and for what you are still doing. It is much more desirable to give than to always receive; one is especially aware of this when one is forced to ask for help. May God lead in such a way that some day we may be in that fortunate position to be able to give richly.

With sincere greetings, your thankful
Hans Hiebert

Excerpt from a letter from Rev. and Mrs. Harold Ratzlaff, Champa, M.P., India, dated November, 1954.

"We thank you for your remembrances of us during this past year. We thank you for the Christmas greetings, the birthday greetings, the gifts of one kind or another, the letters of encouragement, the assurances that we and the work have not slipped out of your memory. The Christian Church in India needs your prayers more and more. Perhaps the information coming from India will be less, but that is a signal to the prayer warriors to remain at their posts of duty. May we all be found faithful."

Kindly note in the Ratzlaffs' letter the importance of "letters of encouragement." Many can send a card or short letter with a few words of encouragement. Our missionaries need it. Let us not expect a reply. Missionaries are busy people, sent to the fields to "feed the flock," and to present Christ to the dark world in which they work. All their strength goes into this work. We would not want to add to their burdens.

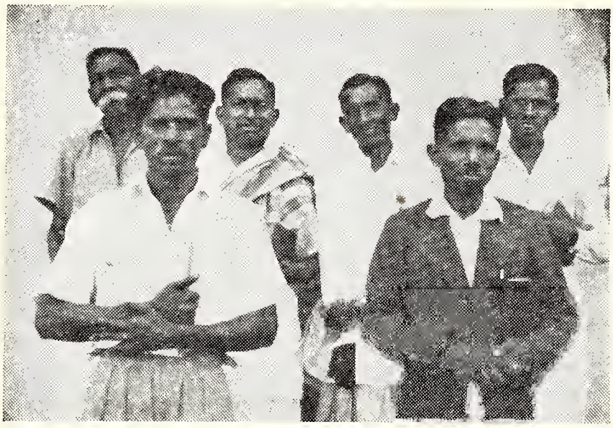
song service followed by a message with an evangelistic appeal. Wednesday evenings at 7:30 we have an expository message on some portion of Scripture and a time of praying together.

The Sunday school children—approximately fifty of them—practiced hard for their Christmas program which was given on the evening of December 22. Blue robes trimmed in white added color to the exercises and made the program attractive for the children.

Tried and True Folk of Sirko, India



BACK ROW: From the right, Joseph Nag, deacon, whose rich fields are a picture. He is one of the oldtimers who is as a pillar in the church.

Next to him is Johan Barik, evangelist, who has charge of the church services in the nearby village of Kursi Pahar.

Next is deacon Bhikari who does his share in the work of the church.

To the left is Ramo, father of the former pastor of the church. He spoke with considerable enthusiasm about being in Mesopotamia where he was shown some of the old biblical sites.

FRONT: Left, Master Gyan Singh, headmaster of the Sirko school, and Nidhi Kumar who is the evangelist in charge of services at Sirko. The pastor who is an ordained elder has a large parish. The evangelists are responsible for most of the church services.

I thank thee, Lord, that all my joy
Is touched with pain;
That shadows fall on brightest hours;
That thorns remain;
So that earth's bliss may be my guide,
And not my chain.

Mennonite Youth

Sponsored by the Young People's Union of the General Conference. Editor, Lois Duerksen, North Newton, Kansas

Program Helps for January, 1955

PROGRAM NO. 1

PURPOSE: The purpose of this meeting is to aquaint young people with the nature of the 1-W Alternative (Earning) Service Program.

OPENING WORSHIP: Following is a list of suggestions found in the Mennonite Hymnary from which you may choose you own opening worship.

"O Master, Let Me Walk with Thee" No. 223; "Lead On, O King Eternal" No. 399; "Peace, Perfect Peace" No. 256; "O Power of Love, All Else Transcending" No. 517; "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God" No. 549.

Scripture: Acts 10:34-39; I Thessalonians 5:14-23.

Responsive Reading Mennonite Hymnary: Commiting Our Way, No. 13; Comfort for Zion, No. 46; The Beatitudes, No. 55.

PROGRAM:

A. Introducing the Alternative (Earning) Service Program.

1. Our beliefs. 2. Past programs.

Reading material: Service for Peace by Melvin Gingerich. This book is available at your church library or from your pastor. Chapters 1, 2, 4, and 5 deal particularly with these points.

B. The present program in brief. The July 13, 1954, issue of The Mennonite pages 422-425. Proceed with Caution by MCC Offices Akron, Pa. A copy of this can be gotten from the offices in Akron.

1. What the government expects of conscientious objectors July 13, 1954, issue of The Mennonite p. 419. Read article entitled "On this our government says." A few additional suggestions.

A 1-0 classification indicates the recognition of one's conscientious objections to war on the part of his draft board. Also, that he is not entitled to a dependency of occupational deferment. A 1-0 classification means that you are available for service as a conscientious objector when called and agree to serve in a civilian assignment in interest of the national welfare, health, and safety.

2. Procedure in brief:

a. In almost every case the fellows volunteer for 1-W service before the draft board calls them for working.

b. The first question the 1-0 faces as he seeks a place of "approved work" is whether to get an individual earning assignment or to go under MCC into some form of church volunteer work. The latter will be discussed in two later programs, therefore we will discuss only those in earning positions.

c. In choosing alternative service the 1-0 must take the initiative in getting a job at an institution which the government approves as contributing to the national welfare, health, and safety. Draft boards and some pastors have lists of these approved institutions.

C. Illustrating Some Facts of Our General Conference 1-W's.

1. First of all we will try to show how the General Conference 1-W are distributed as to states and countries. Instructions: Cut enough two by four inch slips of paper so that you will have a slip for each state or country listed below. Put the name of each state or country with its number of 1-W's on these slips. This part should be done before the meeting. Explanation of this illustration: Hand each slip to some individual. The leader then in roll call fashion calls the name of each state and the person who has that state will rise and give the number of men working there. (As of about October 1, 1954)

State or Country	No. of 1-W's
Colorado	114
Kansas	89
Michigan	35
Illinois	23
Germany	20
Connecticut	20
Pennsylvania	14
Wisconsin	12

Greece	4
Oregon	4
Iowa	3
Puerto Rico	2
Missouri	2
North Dakota	2
Austria	1
Iraq	1
Jordan	1
Minnesota	1

2. The second part is to show in a graphic way how our 400 1-W's are divided as to the different programs. Here is one way of doing this; you may think of a better way. Make three stacks of books. Each book will represent 17 1-W's. Thus two books will represent the Voluntary Service program, two books will represent the PAX and Relief program, and twenty books will represent the alternative service or earning program. Each stack of books can be labeled according to which program it represents by putting the name of the program on a slip of heavy white cardboard and set against the stack of books.

Types of Service	No. of Men
Voluntary Service	37
PAX and Relief	33
Alternative Service	348

3. The last part is to show approximately how many 1-W's are working in the different types of jobs. For this part you will be given the types of work and the percentages. You may choose your own way of showing this. These figures are taken from all Mennonite and Brethern in Christ men, but we are assuming that our fellows are distributed almost the same.

Mental Hospitals	43.3	Public Welfare	2.9

3. Get a map to show where the 1-W's of your church are located. Small stickers can be used so that the number of 1-W's working there can be written on. You may want to make V S stickers different from those in A.S. and those in PAX and Relief still different.

THE END

Dear Readers:

This is the first time the YPU Program Helps have appeared in the Youth Section. By this time most of you have heard or read Harris Waltner's letter and seen the report of the YPU council meetings, concerning this change of procedure. Although the Program Helps may be less detailed than previously, we sincerely hope that you will find them an asset to your Youth Fellowship meetings. We are going to try publishing these program helps toward the first of each month with a few being printed around the middle of the month.

A word of appreciation to all of the youth groups who have been sending in their youth news. So far there has not been occasion to use these reports in the Youth Section. Would you as young people still like to see a "Notes on Youth" column in the Youth Section? Would you rather send in more detailed reports of your outstanding activities? Whatever your opinion is, why don't you write a card to Lois Duerksen at North Newton, Kansas, and from there on we will see what can be done. Thank you.

—Lois Duerksen, Editor

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

by A. Menno Knight

Do you ever pay attention to the older members in our churches? Have you ever tried to visualize what they were like when they were young? It hardly seems possible that at one time in their life they were young like we. Yet we must realize that at some time they had some of the same frustrations and fears with which we are struggling. They had some of the same disappointments that come over us. They may have had the same ambitious thoughts and desires we claim. They, at some time in their life, had these feelings which are so real and sincere to us. What did they do with them? Have these victories and defeats made them bitter or are these older individuals happy in their old age? We must realize they didn't get to their present status in a day, or a year, or even ten years. This was a life-long process. We, as young people, must realize that some day we too will have to look back over our past life. What are others going to say about us when we have grown old?

Acknowledgement should be given at this time to John Bauman whose article, "Our Best" was printed in the January 11 issue of The Mennonite. Through some error his name did not appear as the writer of the article. —LD.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Norman Cousins, editor of the Saturday Review, world traveler, author and lecturer will speak in Memorial Hall, Bethel College, Thursday, January 27, at 8:00 p.m. on "America's Assets in the Present Crises."

In the fall of 1953 Norman Cousins returned from his third world-survey tour in six years. His 1953 globe trip took him to the world's major crisis centers—Berlin, Vienna, Istanbul, Karachi, New Delhi, Hong Kong, and Tokyo. Two years earlier he returned from an assignment in India, Pakistan, and Ceylon as a Smith-Mundt lecturer under the auspices of the U. S. Government.

On all his tours Cousins not only spoke, he also listened. He listened to the people of India-Pakistan as they spoke about their lives, their problems, their opinions. He listened to government officials engaged in the adventure of self-government.

Earlier trips have taken him to Japan and Hiroshima in particular; to Germany, where he served on a committee to study Germany's progress in establishing democratic rights for the individual; to Bikini, where he observed the atomic explosions.

These surveys and tours are the direct reflections of his concern for the condition of man in our time and especially for the survival of values. These concerns are expressed in his best-selling books: "Modern Man Is Obsolete," and "Who Speaks for Man?"

Since 1940 Norman Cousins has been editor of the Saturday Review. Under the leadership of Cousins this magazine has become a great voice dealing with the moral and political conditions that affect human growth in general.

He is president of the United World Federalists, which is working for a strengthened United Nations, possessing the powers of world law.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Jakob Duerksen, Bluffton student from Chaco, Paraguay, spoke at four central Illinois services during the Christmas season. Accompanying Mr. Duerksen were his wife, Margarete, and children, Waldemar and Elfrieda.

Talks were given by Mr. Duerksen at the Normal, Illinois, Mennonite Church on December 30, at the Central Conference Y.P.U. watch night service on December 31, at the Meadows Mennonite Church on Sunday, January 2, and at the Flanagan Mennonite Church on Sunday evening.

Jakob Duerksen is studying at Bluffton through the support of the General Conference Mennonite Church Young People's Union. After completing his education at Bluffton this year, Mr. Duerksen will return to Paraguay as a teacher and minister to his people.

Elfrieda Landes, junior from Wadley, Ala., and Els van Lier, sophomore from Amsterdam, Holland, represented the Bluffton Student Christian Association at the National Student Assembly of the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. at the University of Kansas at Lawrence December 27 to January 2.

Students from all 48 states and United States territories gathered for this assembly which meets only once every four years.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Dr. S. F. Pannabecker gave the opening chapel address of 1955 at Bethany Biblical Seminary on January 4. His message, appropriate for the New Year, challenged the students to renew their dedication for the coming days.

The regular prayer fellowship of the Woodlawn Mennonite Church met on Wednesday evening, January 5. Marvin Ewert led the period of meditation and prayer, calling our attention to the gospel narrative of the "rich young ruler." To be Christians we must have more than justice, following of a religious code, living a good life; we must have love.

Sunday evening, January 9, at 6:00 the Woodlawn Mennonite Church held the first session of the winter School of Missions. Rev. Leland Harder of the First Mennonite Church of Chicago led a discussion on "Why Missions" in the early session. Following the fellowship lunch Miss Winnie Bonar, a national of India who is now in the States, spoke to the group on the present situation in India.

The evening of January 16 has been set aside for the rendition of Bach's motet "Jesu, Priceless Treasure." This motet is being given by a group of the Seminary Fellowship and is directed by John Gaeddert.

The film is exceptionally well done and would be very helpful for a general teacher's meeting. It includes a sufficient amount of material that it could be used itself. It could be used even more effectively, however, as an introduction to the eight filmstrips that Moody Bible Institute has also produced, which go into the various items discussed between the superintendent and J. C. Adams more in detail. These filmstrips will be reviewed in a later issue of The Mennonite.

This whole series may help to solve our need for materials for teacher training. Whenever any of these materials are used a discussion should follow, led by someone competent in the field.

MCC News Notes

KOREAN ORPHANS WOULD LIKE MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

The old violin, forgotten clarinet or trombone stored away in some out-of-the-way corner of your attic or garage would be a valuable and useful possession for an orphan boy in Korea

Some of the boys at the Mennonite Vocational School for Orphan Boys, Kyong San, Korea, have been asking about the possibility of obtaining musical instruments for a small bond or orchestra. Since it's quite impossible for MCC personnel in Korea to purchase such instruments, it is thought there are many good used instruments which persons in American Mennonite communities would like to contribute.

Verne Kohls, principal of the school, says they can use any kind of instrument made provided they're in good working order and can be easily packed and shipped. Instruments should be shipped to the Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Penn.

This Kyong San Vocational School is the home of approximately 200 orphan boys. They are taught regular school subjects, agriculture and crafts and receive the benefits of a Christian home.

NEW WEST COAST MCC OFFICE AND CENTER COMPLETED

A new building to house the West Coast MCC regional office and material aid processing center has been completed at Reedley, Calif., and will be dedicated in a brief afternoon service Sunday, Jan. 23.

This 30- by 70-foot building of corrugated aluminum exterior and sheet rock interior was constructed with considerable volunteer labor from local churches in the area. The new building replaces the leased facilities in Reedley which have been used for the center and offices for a number of years.

This Reedley center is the point to which West Coast Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches bring their contributions of food and clothing and where these materials are processed and stored for overseas shipment. The regional office interprets MCC activities to West Coast churches.

Allen Linscheid of Freeman, S. D., who has been serving in the regional office since January, 1952, is terminating. Wesley Pauls of Dallas, Ore., is now working in the regional office as secretary-bookkeeper. Personnel serving in the center are Ada King of Reedley and Abner Smoker of Paradise, Penn.

73½ TONS OF MEAT CANNED THIS SEASON

A total of 73½ tons of meat, most of it beef, valued at approximately $73,500 has been canned by Mennonite communities in New York, Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Ohio during the first half of the 1954-55 canning season.

A total of 73,647 cans each containing two pounds of meat were processed by these communities with the use of the MCC portable canner from mid-October until Christmas. This canned food will be shipped to feed the hungry in such countries as Indochina, Korea, Austria, and Jordan.

Here are the communities and the number of cans of meat processed: Clarence, N. Y., 4,672; Denbigh, Va., 10,464; Harrisonburg, Va., 15,608; Belleville, Penn., 13,885; and the following Ohio communities, Middlefield, 4,001; Hartville, 6,157; Springfield, 4,824; West Liberty, 5,856; Archbold, 8,180.

During 1954 a total of 125 tons of canned food was shipped to Indochina, Korea, Austria, and Jordan. The value of this food contributed by the MCC constituency was nearly $135,000.

131½ TONS OF FOOD AND CLOTHING TO GREECE

A shipment of 86½ tons of clothing, beef, flour, and canned fruit is enroute to Greece where it will be distributed to earthquake victims in the area of Thessaly which is south of Salonika.

Forty-five tons of powdered milk and shortening available free to MCC from government surplus food stocks will also soon be shipped to Greece for the same distribution. This material aid will be distributed by European Mennonite Voluntary Service personnel under the direction of LaMarr Kopp of Ephrata, Penn.

The Mennonite Hymnary and
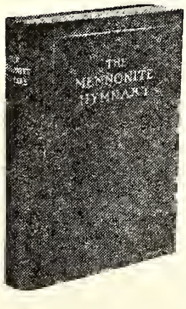
Handbook to the Mennonite Hymnary

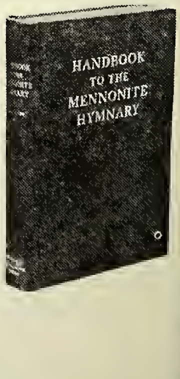


THE MENNONITE HYMNARY is an attempt to meet the need of a uniform hymn book in our General Conference churches. This book is now widely used in our churches. The great variety of hymns and songs lend themselves to the use of all services carried on in the church.

A special feature of the HYMNARY is the placing in separate sections distinct types of hymns, such as the Chorales, the Gospel Songs, and the Metrical Psalms. This arrangement is much more beneficial in finding hymns.

A companion to the MENNONITE HYMNARY is the HANDBOOK TO THE MENNONITE HYMNARY. The HANDBOOK seeks to explain as far as possible the origin of the words and the music of every hymn used in the HYMNARY. The great lyrics of the church are a precious heritage and a source of inspiration and power. This work is intended to foster an understanding of and a love for our hymns, new and old, and to stimulate the time-honored and blessed practice of congregational singing in the church today.

The HANDBOOK is useful for private study, family devotions, special church services, special music services or hymn sings, and group studies in hymnology. It contains a special section, "Introduction to our Hymns and Tunes." Comprehensive without being technical. A great deal of work has gone into research to make the work as authentic and reliable as possible and to bring to you the best information available on each song. The entire family will enjoy reading the stories back of our great hymns. Every great hymn has a story behind it and to know that story—how the hymn came to be written, what makes it a great hymn, why it has lived through the ages—puts a new meaning into family worship.



Special efforts were made to match the two books—the HYMNARY and the HANDBOOK. They can be bought separately or together in pairs.

This combination of MENNONITE HYMNARY and the HANDBOOK TO THE MENNONITE HYMNARY makes an ideal addition to anyone's library, a splendid gift for any home.

Mission Work Expands

"The most recent development in our field of work is the fact that a church building has been bought by the Mission Board and moved to Seiling. Up to now we have held our Sunday and midweek meetings in the Indian homes. As these are not large it is often difficult to find room for all who want to attend. The newly acquired building needs to be remodeled and renovated, and so it will be some time before it can be occupied, but it will be of great advantage when it is ready for use."

More Fruits of the Fields

"Others are receiving baptismal instruction now, among them a father and mother with two daughters. We are especially glad for this for it makes it so much easier when several in the family are Christians, than when there is perhaps only one and the other members of the family are opposed to Christianity. Then there is L., a young girl recently married, who came out for the Lord at Seiling on a very rainy Sunday night. We were just a little hesitant about going to Seiling that evening, wondering whether anyone would come to the meeting. It rained hard all the 21 miles, and when we got to a certain hollow a wide stream of water flowed across the road. Road officials were there who told us it was still passable if we drove carefully. (Soon after we were through the road was closed).

"When we got to Seiling we found that nearly all the Indians had gone to a big gathering some miles from town that afternoon and were caught in the rain and could not get home on account of swollen creeks. At the home where the meeting was to be we found L. alone with a two or three year old little cousin, who had been left for her to take care of. L. was a very shy girl. Hardly ever had we heard her say more than yes or no. Now we had opportunity to deal with her in presenting the way of salvation to her. When she expressed a desire to follow the Christian way we asked whether she would not tell the Lord so in prayer. To this she consented very readily and seemed happy for the opportunity. While the lightning flashed and the thunder crashed, she prayed on. As she prayed in Cheyenne and in a very low tone, we were unable to understand, but we could feel the sincerity of it.

"We stayed with her for several hours until the thunder and rain ceased and the water went down. We offered to remain longer but L. assured us that she was no longer afraid. So we went home rejoicing that another soul had started her services and is always ready to lead in prayer, no matter who or how many are present.

"Another source of rejoicing is the conversion of a middle-aged man. Until recently he seemed impervious to the gospel. With his drinking, quarreling, and carousing he made life miserable for his Christian wife. Many prayers had ascended to the throne of grace on his behalf, but matters seemed to become worse rather than better. How glad we all are that he has finally been convicted of his sin and has yielded himself to the Savior."

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

1. To work for a Conference unified in Christ.
2. To teach the gospel of Christ effectively.
3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

RECRUITING FOR THE MINISTRY

We are short of ministers. Quite a number of our churches are without regular pastors. The number of young men who enter the ministry is not sufficient to fill the vacancies. We need some better method of recruiting young ministers.

Such recruiting cannot be done by one method alone, nor by one or two contacts. It cannot be done only when young men are about to leave college. The claims of God for service as His ministers need to be made clear at many points in life and by various methods.

The home should be the first recruiting agency. In early youth the child should be impressed by the needs and opportunities of the Christian ministry and should be taught to be open to the call of God.

The Sunday school teacher has a splendid opportunity to bring to young minds the importance of the call of God for His special work. Dedicated teachers can inspire the child to give serious thought to the ministry as a life work.

The minister should be a good recruiter. His life and example should inspire youth to live similar lives. He can present the work of the ministry to the growing boy as a great challenge.

Special Conference representatives should be in touch with young men in high school and college. These should be specially appointed board members or committeemen well qualified to present the claims of the ministry in a fair and appealing manner. This should not mean that the youth be coerced, but that he should at least be led to give a fair and valid consideration to the call of the ministry.

Where such presentations of the needs and opportunities of the ministry are presented at various stages of the growth of the youth, we may expect that more serious attention be given to the call of the Christian ministry as the life work of more of our youth.

THE PARABLE OF THE GOOD FATHER

The story of the Prodigal Son might also be called the story of the Good Father, for it is the father and not the son who is the real hero of the story. He did not turn the son out of his interest and affection when he left home. His heart was too full of forgiving love to cast him off even when the son was engaged in "riotous living." The parable gives us a picture of God and His interest and love for His erring children.

He was a concerned father interested in both sons' best welfare. He had a great concern for the younger one as he watched him make his choice to leave home. But that concern continued even after the son went away. His was a love that would not let him go.

He was a compassionate father. He followed his son and suffered with him. His heart could not rest until the son was restored. How like the merciful heavenly Father who ever has compassion on His wayward children.

He was a forgiving father. Forgiveness is always costly, but this father was ready with the forgiveness that only love could offer. The scene of his meeting with the wayward son is touching beyond words. It is but a dim sample of what God's love can do when a wandering child returns.

He was a generous father. He gave the best he had to the son. The new robe, the ring, the shoes, and the feast, all were manifestations of his genuine love, and symbols of the heavenly Father's love for us.

Have we been too unappreciative of our Father's mercy and love? With the wandering son, may we say, "I will arise and go to my Father."

A SERMON TOPIC FOR PREACHERS

The churches are not silent concerning the wrongs and horrors of war. They believe the slaughter of human beings is not Christian. Yet few preachers direct sermons against a practice among us that causes more deaths each year than resulted from the whole Korean war. A hundred people a day are killed by automobile accidents and the churches seem to have nothing to say about it. We shudder at the thought of Herod's slaughter of the children in Bethlehem, where perhaps twenty children were killed, but have little to say about the slaughter of 392 lives over last Christmas week end in America alone. The lives of all people are precious and any cause that snuffs out the lives of our fellow men is the business of the church

Many of the causes of automobile accidents involve a matter of morals. Drinking perhaps leads the list of causes, and the church should have some clear and strong words to say about the drinker who becomes a potential killer. Disobedience to the traffic laws is another major cause of accidents. Even "good" people ignore the speed laws, yet respect for the laws of the land is a Christian duty. Preachers should emphasize the importance of obeying the laws.

Pride and envy enter into automobile fatalities; pride in owning a powerful machine capable of enormous speed, and envy of others who may travel faster than we. But both pride and envy are sins that need to be pointed out and dealt with.

"Thou shalt not kill" could well be the sermon title for a message on reckless automobile driving. Killing a hundred people a day calls for church attention.

Highlights of Missionary Observations IV

ANDREW R. SHELLY

We are in India. From the time that Brother S. T. Moyer met us at the Calcutta airport to this moment we have had a full and wonderful time. It was profitable to stay at the Lee Memorial Mission home in Calcutta.

One of the rare privileges of our brief stay in the Calcutta area was to visit places of interest surrounding the life and work of William Carey, early missionary pioneer in India. We worshiped in the Carey Memorial Church in the morning. Later in the day we visited the place where Carey did his early work. Serampore College, the Carey library and museum are located here. Only the power of God can account for the accomplishments of this one man.

We had a little more than a day in the Old Mennonite Mission area in and around Dhamtari. We had a very blessed time looking over their work. My wife and I stayed with Bishop and Mrs. Weaver and family. With them, and with all the missionary family, we had a blessed fellowship. It was a rather short visit, but long enough to appreciate the fine work which has been done.

Jacob Geisbrecht came to Raipur to meet us. The eighty-five mile ride to Jagdeeshpur was interesting. We stopped at a few places of special interest along the way. A high point came when we came to a large river which marks the place where our mission territory begins.

My wife and I have been staying with the Dr. Desters and Harry Detwiler is with S. T. Moyers. Needless to say we have been appreciating this fellowship very much. We have already gone through the Jansen Memorial School and the Sewa Bhawan Hospital. Both institutions have done a wonderful piece of work. We met many Indian co-workers. To talk with them has been a great inspiration.

We have also been visiting with our other missionaries in the Jagdeeshpur area. They are: Orlando Waltners, Jacob Giesbrechts, Helen Kornelson, and Esther Wiebe.

During the past week we have had the privilege of visiting some villages in this area. Our Jeep trips will never be forgotten. The Jeep is a wonderful vehicle and with expert driving can do amazing things. This is the thanksgiving season in India and we had the privilege of attending a number of services. To fellowship in this way with our brothers and sisters in Christ has been spiritually rewarding. The services had much in common with those we have in the US and Canada. It was a joy to see sincere Christians bring their offerings of produce and money to the Lord.

It has been a privilege to observe village life. We found many lessons to be learned. One of the most interesting and inspiring experiences was to observe a potter at work. It must have been an experience like this which is referred to in Jeremiah 18. "The word which came to Jeremiah from the Lord" was "Arise, and go down to the potter's house, and there I will cause thee to hear my words" (18:1-2).

We went to the Potter's house. Here we got the powerful lesson which the Lord gave to Jeremiah. It is an absolute lesson. The clay is in the potter's hand in an absolute way. He forms it according to his will.

Jeremiah 18:6 has taken on new significance: "O house of Israel, cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the Lord. Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand, O house of Israel."

But, the application is not alone to the "house of Israel." We need to make a 1955 application. Should not we read the verse: "O General Conference Mennonite Church, cannot I do with you as this potter? . . ." You will probably be reading these words during January. A New Year has just begun. Will our Conference be in the "potter's hand?"

It is necessary to be still more personal: "O local congregation, cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the Lord . . . ." Then, let us insert our own names. There is no higher resolve any of us can make for this year—clay in His Hand!

"Have Thine own way, Lord, Have Thine own way;
Thou art the Potter, I am the clay.
Mould me and make me, After Thy will,
While I am waiting, Yielded and still."

New Testament Translations

RUDY SENGER

Did you ever read the New Testament in Greek? Most of us cannot read it at all except from a translation. It has been translated into many languages. There are several kinds of English and these are not entirely identical. They differ according to the times and nations in which English has been spoken. An accumulation of manuscript evidence brings us nearer the original sources. Languages are also better understood than they were several centuries ago. So we may now have versions we can understand.

As a Christian, one ought to think intelligently on such matters. There is plenty of informative material available but it does not circulate among church people as it should. They are not informed about the ancestry of our New Testament, nor do they understand the nature and purpose of translation—not in a practical way. Various notions regarding versions do exist.

William G. Ballantine says: "There are millions of people who understand no language readily except the living English of today. Surely they ought to have the New Testament—the most important of books—in that language."

They should also have it printed in a readable form like that of our present-day books. The archaic English and the traditional form in which our New Testament is published accounts for much of the neglect to read it. Chapters and verses interrupt the reader and shed no light on the sense. The newer versions are printed in logical paragraphs—a much better way.

The late James Moffatt, translator, cites one very prevalent notion regarding words. He says: "de Quincy has a characteristic paragraph upon the delusion that 'every idea and word that exists, or has existed, for any nation, ancient or modern, must have a direct interchangeable equivalent in all other languages.' No one who attempts to translate any part of the New Testament is likely to remain very long under such a delusion."

Myles Coverdale (1488-1540) says: "Sure I am that there cometh more knowledge and understandings of the Scripture by their sondrie translacyons than by all the gloses of oure sophisticall doctours." Our Church school pupils get the impression that the boy Jesus was with physicians, but his parents "Found him in the temple sitting among the teachers," RSV. "Doctors" in KJV of Luke 2:46, 5:17, and Acts 5:34 were teachers (Greek, German and RSV).

J. Carter Swaim believes that "To this day it remains true that for the ordinary student of the Bible one of the best aids is a variety of versions. Only thus can an affirmative answer be given to the question: "Do you understand what you are reading?" Comparing several versions may also indicate that where scholars differ widely, or hesitate, there the ordinary reader should not be too "dead sure"—further light may be necessary.

Erasmus (1466-1536) experienced "That when he first read the New Testament, with fear and a good mind, with a purpose to understand it and obey it, he found it very useful and very pleasant; but when, afterwards, he fell on reading the vast difference of commentaries, then he understood it less than he did before, then he began not to understand it."

Second Timothy 2:15 is a much quoted passage, but the haphazard constructions often placed upon it are disturbing. It reads: "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," KJV.

"Study" is here in a sense that is different from our usage. The Greek, spoudason, denotes "to hasten," "to give diligence." It is variously translated, as in Heb. 4:11—"try hard, be earnest, make every effort"; in 2 Tim. 4:21—"do your best to come before winter;" (RSV) then as in our text, 2 Tim. 2:15—"do all you can, strive earnestly, concentrate, do your utmost," etc.

"Dividing" tends to justify any unskilled handling —neglecting the word "rightly." Unless the student knows the setting and observes the context, he may not derive the true sense from "divided" passages. The paraphrase, "that needeth not to be ashamed," seems excessive; and the Greek has it simply "unashamed." Consider this rendering: Do all you can to stand before God approved, a workman unashamed, dealing straight with the word of truth.

Paul is in Rome and in prison. Timothy, now alone, must cope with a difficult situation and deal with certain quibblers, verse 14. He is pictured as a workman who is to do his best to meet God's approval. A workman who cannot cut a nice fit would hesitate to enter his workmanship in a contest, but one who maintains a straight course in the use of Scripture need not be ashamed.

Now read Second Timothy straight through. Repeat this reading occasionally and you will learn a way that is better than piecing together unrelated portions. Our New Testament was not meant to be merely a book of quotations. Although it can be quoted, it was written to be read. Then too, why not read it in the only language our generation understands?

No translation can ever serve for all time. It would not be understood after it would no longer be in any given generation's mother tongue. Living languages constantly change. Acts 2:5-13 records a happy event. People asked: "What does this mean?" Why were they so impressed?

The King James Version contains many words familiar to us, but it uses them in a different sense: e.g., doctor, study, offend, peculiar, conversation, science, and many others (over 300, some obsolete). There are also sentences that may baffle us, like 1 Tim. 6:10. In such cases, it would be simpler to

"Lovest Thou Me?"

WALTER and MARTHA DYCK

It had been an impressive service in the sanctuary of the Central Methodist Church, Montevideo, Uruguay, of which Carlos Gattinoni is the pastor. Mennonites in Uruguay are deeply indebted to him for his assistance he continues to give them in getting settled in a new land. From time to time Mennonites are still holding their services here.

On this occasion, Dec. 19, 1954, 4 p. m., Brother Klaus Dueck, the newly-elected elder (one of five ministers elected by the congregation in the past year) was being ordained as the leader of the Mennonite congregation in Montevideo.

The first of two questions directed to the candidate by the officiating elder, Bro. Ernst Regehr of El Ombu, was: "Do you love your Savior sincerely?" Then followed the second, "Are you convinced that the Lord has called you to this office?"

The answers were given with a definite "Yes!" Seated below, with others on the first bench, Mrs. Klaus (Anita Driedger) Dueck, mother of two young children, entered with feeling into the vows that were being given and in which she will have to share.

The service of ordination had opened with greetings by Bro. Johannes Woelke of Montevideo. Bro. Rudolf Hein of Gartental, read a Scripture lesson and led in prayer. The sermon, (festpredigt) which it was my privilege to bring, was based on 1 Peter 5:1-4, in which Peter says, "Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof" (not with a mere sense of duty, nor for personal advantage, nor out of a desire to wield authority).

Bro. Ernst Regehr based his message on the humble, dependent attitude of John the Baptist (John 1:19-29). Bro. Klaus Dueck had selected "My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness" (2 Cor. 12:9) as a motto for his call into the eldership. Greetings by guests and fellow-ministers were given in turn. My charge to Bro. Dueck, who is less than 30 years old, was "Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers" (1 Tim. 4:12). The choir sang two appropriate hymns.

"Lovest thou me more than these?" is the question which the elder, the fellow-ministers and the people in the Montevideo area are facing in a very real way. Mennonites in Uruguay are living under a unique type of democracy which has prevailed for nearly fifty years. It probably has the highest standard of living in Latin America (without any income tax). The country is no larger than the state of Nebraska. The population is about 2,350,000, one-third of whom live in Montevideo, its capital city.

Politically and religiously one can practically believe and live as one desires. There are no "loyalty oaths." The sickle and hammer can be seen during election times. But there were only about one-half as many Communist votes in the recent Presidential election than there were seven years ago. But it is also a country in which Christmas is now officially called "Family Day" and where Passion Week is promoted as "Tourist Week."

The new Mennonite elder faces a difficult situation in holding high the banner of Christ and caring for about 200 souls scattered widely in lower Uruguay. Services are conducted by the five ministers in seven places. Isolated families and individuals live here and there on farms and in the city.

Where in Canada and the U.S.A. many ministers drive late-model cars, Bro. Klaus Dueck will continue riding buses. The Duecks live, with seven other families, on a rented farm at El Pinar, about 30 miles outside the city. Their daily duties on the farm include helping to milk by hand (at 3:30 a.m., and p.m.) a dairy herd of about forty Holstein cows.

We wish our brother and sister much love for their Lord and their people, also much courage as they undertake the leadership of what, by the grace of God, will become a strong growing Mennonite congregation in Montevideo.

In later reports we hope to tell of our first visit to the two larger colonies farther inland, El Ombu and Gartental, also what the Peter Epps, representing MCC, are doing as a spiritual ministry to the Mennonites in Uruguay.

Sowing the Seed

"At my sewing class at New Oraibi I have 20 ladies enrolled and I thrill to the opportunity of giving them the Word. Each mother brings her preschool children, so I've had as many as 18 or 19 preschool children there too. Sometimes they get pretty noisy during the Bible message, so I asked the ladies what a mother with 12 children does. La Vina, who had ten, said, "They're not all babies at the same time and the older ones help." But there too, I have a wonderful opportunity to sing with them and teach them little Bible verses."

"Work" as a Means to "Grace"

"Some have asked what we do with the 4"x4" and 4"x6" quilt blocks. We have sewing classes every Tuesday and Wednesday during the winter months. We give the Hopi women as many quilt blocks as they can sew during the class. We sew from 1 p.m. till about 2:30 p. m. Then we ask them to put their sewing away while we sing, pray, and study God's Word. At about 3:30 p. m. they start sewing again and sew till 4:30 p. m. They come to get the quilt blocks, but we come to give the gospel. Some of the Christian women have said that the sewing classes helped them to turn to the Lord. So as you cut quilt blocks won't you pray that more will accept Christ as their Savior."

A Parable of No Shoes

(Profession Without Practice)

Hugh Price Hughes puts our need of practicing the theory in an unforgettable parable worth quoting in full here in spite of its length:

I arrived here early one morning. I was cold, there were flurries of snow on the ground and as I stepped from the train on the platform I noticed that the baggageman and the redcaps were warmly dressed in heavy coats and gloves, but oddly enough, they wore no shoes. My first impulse was to ask the reason for this odd practice, but repressing it, I passed into the station and inquired the way to the hotel. My curiosity, however, was immediately enhanced by discovering that no one in the station wore any shoes. Boarding the streetcar, I saw that my fellow travelers were likewise barefoot, and upon arriving at the hotel, I found the bellhop, the clerk and all the people had on no shoes.

Unable to restrain myself any longer, I asked the ingratiating manager what the practice meant.

"What practice?" said he. "Why," said I, pointing at his bare feet, "why don't you wear shoes in this town?"

"Ah," said he, "that is just it. Why don't we?"

"But what is the matter? Don't you believe in shoes?"

"Believe in shoes, my friend? I should say we do. That is the first article of our creed, shoes. They are indispensable to the well-being of humanity. Such cuts, sores and suffering as shoes prevent. It is wonderful!"

"Well, then, why don't you wear them?" I asked, bewildered.

"Ah," said he, "that is just it. Why don't we?"

Though considerably nonplussed, I checked in, secured my room, and went directly to the coffee shop, and deliberately sat down by a friendly looking man who likewise conformed to the convention of wearing no shoes. The first thing we noticed upon walking out of the hotel was a huge brick building. To this he pointed with pride.

"You see that?" said he. "That is one of our outstanding shoe manufacturing establishments."

"A what?" I asked in amazement. "You mean you make shoes there?"

"Well not exactly," said he, a bit ashamed, "we talk about making shoes there, and believe me, we have one of the most brilliant speakers you have ever heard. He talks most thrillingly and convincingly every week on this great subject of shoes. He has a most persuasive and appealing way. Just yesterday he moved the people profoundly with his sermon on the necessity of shoe-wearing. It was really wonderful."

"But why don't you wear them?" said I insistently.

"Ah," said he, putting his hand upon my arm and looking wistfully into my eyes, "that is just it, why don't we?"

Just then, as we turned down a side street, I saw through a cellar window, a cobbler actually making a pair of shoes. Excusing myself from my friend, I burst into the little shop and asked the shoemaker how it happened that his shop was not overrun with customers. Said he, "Nobody wants my shoes. They just talk about them."

"Give me what pairs you have ready," said I eagerly, and paid thrice the amount he modestly asked. Hurriedly I returned to my friend and said to him, "Here, my friend, one of these pairs will

Flashes of Thought

Sermon in Stone

Walter Gering

It was not the statue itself which was so arresting. In fact it was a very ordinary figure, pieced together after the rubble had been cleared away. The marks and scars of the battle were evident even after it had been put together.

It had been a victim of the war, as had many other honored objects in the church. Once it had stood upon the pedestal near the altar; a constant reminder to those who gathered reverently for worship. Many an earnest soul, searching for comfort and renewed faith had looked beyond its cold, lifeless form to the living Savior and had been refreshed. That was before the war.

Now it was again being placed upon its pedestal from whence it had fallen during the bombing. Slowly but surely the rubble had been cleared away throughout the village. The beloved church which had been severely damaged was being restored. The roof was repaired and the walls re-enforced. It was under the rubbish that the fallen statute was found, broken into several pieces. Fortunately it was not beyond repair. Piece by piece it was put together until all had been restored; that is, all but the hands. A long diligent search failed to produce the hands. They had been crushed under the weight of the rubble. There was nothing left to do but to place the statue upon the pedestal without the hands. So it was that the statue of the Christ was restored to its former position.

But it was not the statue which arrested the attention of the passers-by. There had been others far more attractive. It was the inscription which had been placed at the base of the pedestal: "I have no other hands than yours." That was all; but it spoke loudly to the heart of all who passed. The battered statue was soon forgotten. But the words sounded on through the years: "I have no other hands than yours."

It is true! These hands of ours are indeed the hands of the Savior. It is these which He would use in the work of His kingdom. Let us yield them unto Him in humble devotion. He has no other hands than ours.

The Church in Neuland

MARIE J. REGIER

The ministerial situation in Paraguay is quite different from that in the States, and also from Canada, though we find more similarity with this section of the General Conference. Those of us who are older remember, of course, a similar situation in the olden days when there were a number of ministers who took turns preaching Sunday morning. One was the "Aeltester" and only he could perform baptism and serve communion.

The situation, is, of course, similar in the different colonies, but we will take Neuland as an example. The colony is divided into a number of villages, some being about a mile apart, sometimes only half a mile, while those farther away from the center are all of twenty and thirty miles apart. When there are no cars, but only buggies for transportation it is obvious that serving the community is not an easy matter for the minister. Moreover, in most of these colonies the membership is partly General Conference and partly Mennonite Brethren. Three Sundays in the month the village group meets as a congregation irrespective of their membership. There are also a good many who do not belong to church, yet come fairly regularly. There are others who were baptized in Europe but who objected to making a confession of faith when the church of Neuland was organized and who, therefore, have remained on the outside. The General Conference has about twenty-five ministers in Neuland colony with only one "Aeltester," the Rev. Hans Rempel. These ministers take turns in accordance with a regular schedule in making the rounds of the services in the different villages. Rev. Rempel is at liberty to visit the church services as he sees fit and substitute or supplement. The Mennonite Brethren church has one leading minister, though he is not called "Aeltester" and several others, most of whom have left by now. These ministers also preach in the villages, but it seems that it was never possible to work out a schedule in co-operation with them, so that it will happen that some Sundays there are two or three ministers at one service while there is no one at another place.

I might mention about these ministers that a number of them have not been ordained, only elected. It seems that they fear the responsibility which comes with ordination, so they preach without being ordained.

Once a month the ministers, deacons, and trustees of the General Conference church come together for inspiration and for transacting business. Of late they worked out a list of articles of faith due to the fact that there is a group of quite conservative members who object to women taking part in the church business meetings, to having baptism services at any time other than on Pentecost. They also object to prayer meetings where people pray audibly. One man based his objection on the Scripture verse which says that God said to Moses, "Why do you cry unto me?" They feel that the General Conference church has taken over too much from the Mennonite Brethren church.

The first Sunday in the month is "Hauptversammlung" (Main church gatherings). One woman asked one time whether we had "Hauptversammlung" in North America, too. I laughed and said that I guessed we had it all the time. The members of the Mennonite Brethren church have their "Hauptversammlung" in their new church in Gnadental. The General Conference church meets in three or four places because nowhere is there a schoolhouse large enough to accomodate all of them. They are thus looking forward with much anticipation to the completion of the new church. There is first the regular church service at which two or three ministers speak. At this service everyone is welcome who happens to be in the village, so that there are usually some of the Mennonite Brethren folk too because they have not had a chance to go to their own service. After the service there is often a common meal and another service in the afternoon together with a business session.

Such are the forms through which the Neuland church tries to carry on the business of the King in their country.

read the true sense directly from a good translation than to consult voluminous commentaries.

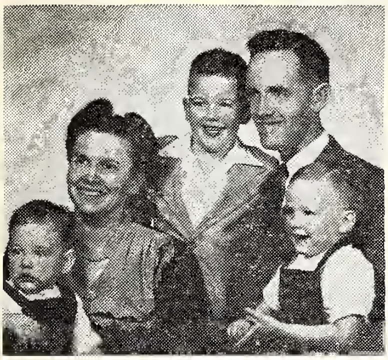
More than sixty years ago, a man named Beard said quite aptly: "Men need to bring to the Bible sufficiently strong prepossessions, sufficiently fixed opinions to have them reflected back in all the glamour of infallible authority." Such bias ever exists. The predilections of an uninformed mind can hardly lead to sound conclusions. A passage may not be construed to one's liking.

Therefore honesty and intelligence are first essentials in "dealing straight with the word of truth." Paul says: "We have renounced disgraceful, underhanded ways, we refuse to practice cunning," RSV. 2 Cor. 4:2 and 2 Pet. 3:16 suggest a sound working basis for developing a Bible student's conscience.

The 1955 Handbook of Information

Last year it was decided that the General Conference Handbook of Information should be issued as early in the year as possible. Also that it be made as interesting, informative, and useful as possible. Already material for the contents is being gathered The questionnaires for statistical information about churches have been sent out and some have been filled by the pastors and returned. If you have suggestions that will help make this book what it can and should be, please send it in at once to A. J. Richert, Conference Treasurer, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas.

Returning to India



To have a family, a nurse, and a school principal go out to India, all in forty days' time is cause for thanksgiving; particularly since it is so difficult to get visas for India. The Curt Claassen family of Whitewater, Kansas, sailed the first of the year and Melva Lehman, the school principal of Berne, Indiana, together with Anne Penner, the nurse of Plum Coulee, Manitoba, will be sailing on February 6th. Their sailing address will be:

Miss Melva Lehman, Passenger
Miss Anne Penner, Passenger
M/V Hoegh SILVERMOON
Sailing February 5, 1955,
New York to Bombay
c/o Hoegh Line, Pier 30,
Brooklyn, New York

No doubt some of you will want to send steamer letters and assure them of your interest in them and their work and your intercession for them.

Pray also for their co-workers who are coming home on furlough. These latter will be, God willing, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Duerksen, and Mr. and Mrs. Aron Jantzen and daughter.

surely fit you. Take them; put them on. They will save you untold suffering."

But he looked embarrassed, in fact he was well nigh overcome with chagrin. "Thank you," he said politely, "but you don't understand. It just isn't being done. The front families, well, I—I—"

"But why don't you wear them?" said I dumbfounded.

"Aha," said he, smiling with his accustomed ingratiating touch of practical wisdom, "that is just it. Why don't we?"

And coming out of the "City of Everywhere" into the "Here," over and over and over that question rang in my ears: "Why don't we? Why don't we? Why don't we?"

Film Review

Filmstrips "Successful Teaching": 1. The Teacher, 2. The Pupil, 3. The Language, 4. The Lesson, 5. The Teaching Process, 6. The Learning Process, 7. Review and Application, 8. The Final Test. Available from Moody Bible Institute, 820 N. LaSalle St., Chicago, Illinois. Filmstrips cost $5.00 each. The leader's guide costs $1.00. The eight filmstrips and the leader's guide cost $37.50. The commentary is also available on 7-inch 45 RPM records and on one 7-inch reel of tape, recorded in twin track, playing speed 3 3/4 IPS. The price of the tape or the records is $21.00. The filmstrips and records are available for $1.10 rental for each combination of a filmstrip and record from the Visual Aid Library, Rosthern Bible School, Rosthern, Saskatchewan, Canada.

Summary of Contents. The contents of the filmstrips are good. The presentation of the material in each of the filmstrips should be meaningful to the average Sunday school teacher. The filmstrips are in color which adds to their effectiveness. In these eight filmstrips practically the whole process of teaching a Sunday school class is covered. An attempt is made in the filmstrips to apply the material to teachers of different age groups.

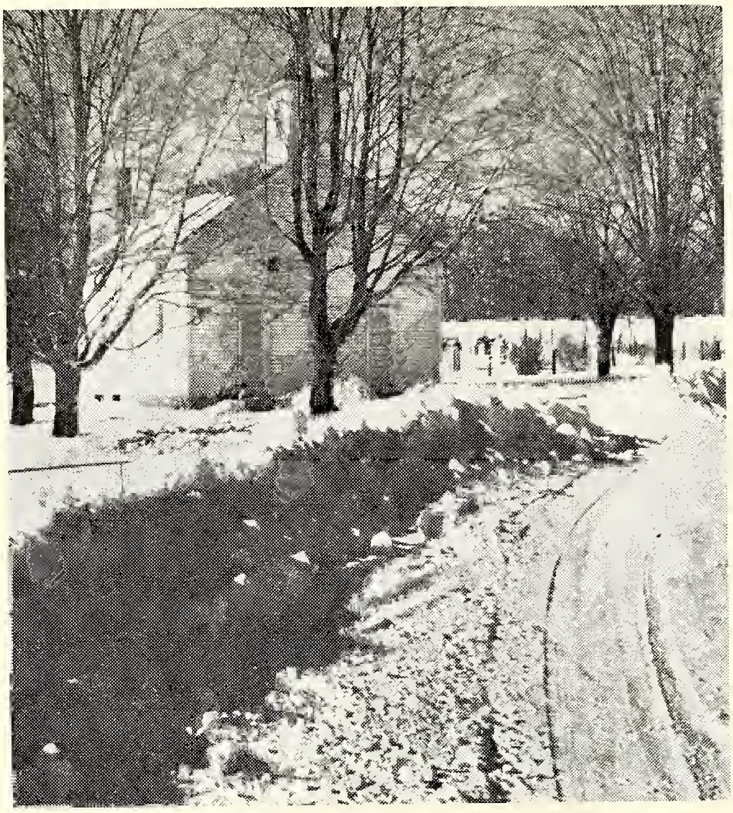
How to Use. The film No Vacant Chairs which was reviewed previously together with these filmstrips would be splendid for a teacher training course by a local Sunday school or a group of Sunday schools. One or two of the filmstrips could be used in one evening. It takes about twelve minutes for one of the filmstrips if the records or tape are utilized. In order to make the filmstrips helpful to the Sunday school teachers in a local church, the teachers should discuss the issues raised as they relate to their particular classes. A capable discussion leader should lead the discussion.

Making Materials Available. It may be that district conferences could purchase materials of this kind and then make them available to local Sunday schools. Some local churches will want to buy a set of this kind since it can be used more than one time. In some communities the ministerial association will be interested in purchasing a set of this kind and making the material available through the local library. The General Conference Board of Education and Publication will want to buy some materials eventually. This kind of a set should probably be available at a number of centers.

Last year the Conference received three substantial gifts: two were farm lands, one a business building. Also some substantial bequests in wills. Are you one whom the Lord has blessed with material goods and have thought of making a large gift or including a bequest in your will but have kept putting it off? If you need help in this matter contact the Conference Treasurer's Office, 722 Main, Newton, Kansas. Remember, even a comparatively small group like the General Conference can be a mighty force for Christ and righteousness.

Mennonite Youth

Sponsored by the Young People's Union of the General Conference, Editor, Lois Duerksen, North Newton, Kansas.



'Tis winter now; the fallen snow
Has left the heav'ns all coldly clear;
Through leafless boughs the sharp
winds blow,
And all the earth lies dead and drear.

And yet God's love is not withdrawn;
His life within the keen air breathes;
His beauty paints the crimson dawn,
And clothes the boughs with glittering wreaths.

Let's Face It

> We do not know very much of the future
> Except that from generation to generation
> The same things happen again and again.
> Men learn little from other's experience.
> —T. S. Eliot

Youth tries desperately to see what the future holds. We want to do the right things—those things which God would have us do. But what are they? How can we know? The preacher says, "Pray." Prayer is very necessary but is it enough? It is rather easy to pray, especially when our needs make us uncomfortable. Have we tried to discover the complete secret? How true are the words of the poet—"Men learn little from other's experience."

God has given us a library of the most tremendous experiences man has ever had and lived. This library is the Bible with its many books in one volume. From this great library we can learn from other's experiences; that is, if we are willing to read and study. The Will of God is an experience, as is the whole Christian life. With God's revelation to us through the Bible we can learn about the future and the experiences of the saints. But we have to read it.

The poet also says that "action is suffering, and suffering is action." Young people, before us stands the great free opportunity to act for Christ. Are we afraid we may have to suffer? Does your Bible tell you that it is a shame to suffer for Christ? Mine says the opposite. We want to be tough and we consider ourselves hardy. In our time young men think it is sissy to wear long underwear; girls don't want to be seen in wool stockings. We do many things to appear brave and strong. Why not be strong in ACTION as Mennonite Youth for Christ? We say the world is very wicked but if we read the Acts we must confess that very few, if any, of us go to prison like the apostles did because we love the Lord.

Being active in your youth group isn't going to land you in prison. It may cause secular friends to "sniffle" at you but as you read the Bible this coming year, try to realize the great truth in the poet's words, "Action is suffering." As you continue to read the Bible you cannot help but feel the joy which comes from "suffering" for Christ. Such moments turn out to be blessed experiences. This

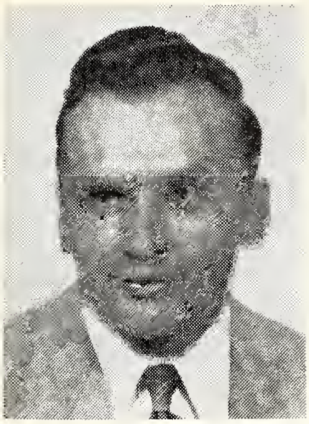
Life Sketch of Bill Gering



As a sister to Bill Gering I have been asked to write a brief history about him. Bill was born on a farm near Marion, South Dakota. He came from a Swiss-German home and was the youngest of six children. When Bill was only 15, his father passed away and later in 1947 his mother also died. He attended rural school and after graduating from high school he felt the need to help his brother on the farm, although he would have liked to go on to college.

During World War II he was drafted into military service. He had been registered as a C.O. but changed his mind shortly before induction, feeling he was not worthy to claim this position. His experience in the army was a great turning point in his life. It was there he found the Lord's way to be the only way to peace for the world. And it was there he decided to make a new start in life and admit his past mistakes.

Returning from army service, his old desire to attend college came back. He attended; hoping that God would reveal to him his mission in life. It was hard to give up the farm since he was greatly interested in animals and it meant parting with his registered Chester White hogs. Bill loves singing, hunting, and sports (especially baseball and basketball). His most recent hobby is photography.

He graduated from Freeman College in 1949 and Bethel in 1951. His interest in speech and drama during college days led him to also study under Dr. Fred Eastman, at Chicago Theological in the field of Religious Drama. While in seminary, he was awarded a World Council of Churches Scholarship for foreign study. This was a great opportunity and Bill was privileged to attend Mainz University in Germany in 1952-53. He entered Mennonite Biblical Seminary after his return from Germany, where he will graduate this spring.

As a youth his father encouraged him to go into Christian service. From those early days he has gone through some deep spiritual experiences. He was baptized in the Salem-Zion Mennonite Church where he still holds his membership. He believes his call into Christian service is clear and unwavering. Bill believes the Holy Spirit will reveal to him exactly where and what God wants him to do.

In working with young people his aim is not to preach at them, but to talk with them. We, as a family and community, wish him well in his full time work with the General Conference Young People's Union. We are praying for him.

Mrs. Harold V. Graber,

joy is one of the marvels and rewards of the Christian life.

We, as young people, must be willing to learn, act, and suffer. Let us face the New Year with the open Bible so that we may be filled with its inspiration and stirred by its action. The result will be a better understanding of God's Will for our lives and a better realization of a United Mennonite Youth in Christ for the future. —Bill Gering

BETHEL COLLEGE

Pres. D. C. Wedel attended the meetings of the Association of American Colleges in Washington, D. C., Jan. 11—Jan. 13. The theme of the program at these meetings was "Liberal Education and America's Future." Pres. Wedel also attended a business meeting of the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges where the concerns centered about the summer European tour, the foreign student conference and the Peace and World Order Conference.

Erwin Goering, director of public relations, and Harry Martens, business manager, are visiting churches in the Pacific District in the interest of the college. They expect to be gone through the month of January.

Richard Siemens, Newton, Bethel graduate in the class of 1951, and Wendell Wiens, Hillsboro, member of this year's senior class, have been accepted by the University of Kansas School of Medicine.

The Bethel College Fellowship organizations in Mennonite churches of the college constituency area are again active in carrying out the sevenfold aims of the Fellowship organization in the churches. These aims are: 1. Pray for Bethel, 2. Talk for Bethel, 3. Suggest improvements at Bethel, 4. Help people get better acquainted with Bethel, 5. Call Bethel's attention to prospective students, 6. Encourage prospective students to attend Bethel, and 7. Encourage individuals to make generous annual financial contributions to Bethel.

Seventy churches of this general area are divided into 16 districts with an over all chairman in each district. Last year some 30 churches participated in dinners and booster banquets and in general fund raising activities.

The next Memorial Hall Series program January 27, will feature a lecture by Norman Cousins, editor of the Saturday Review on, "America's Assets in the Present Crisis." Since becoming editor of the Saturday Review in 1940, Norman Cousins has made several world survey-tours and reported his finding in widely read magazine articles and books such as, "Who Speaks for Man?" and "Modern Man Is Obsolete." He is very much concerned with the survival of values and the healthy condition of the human community.

Last week the students at Bethel College voted to again sponsor a student next year from the Teacher's College in Wuppertal, Germany. Tuesday, Jan. 11, marked the opening of the campaign to raise the necessary $750. The success of this undertaking depends largely upon contributions of students and other interested individuals.

The Exchange Program, sponsored by the Student Christian Fellowship, had its beginning in 1950. Rudy Stubenrauch, this year's student from Wuppertal, was preceded by Fritz Potreck, Rudy Wiemann, and Annagret Voelcher.

Two years ago, the students at Wuppertal undertook the task of supporting a Bethel student for a year of study in Germany. Lillian Galle, Valley Center, is the student from Bethel this year attending the Teacher's College at Wuppertal.

The benefits of this program do not end with the students who study in a foreign country, or with the schools participating in the program. Through an exchange of this kind the community and the nation benefits as well. Thus it is the hope of the students that this exchange of ideas and friendship may help in the task of building a bridge of better understanding between nations.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Lincoln Hall, Bluffton College girl's dorm, became the proud possessor of a new Hamilton baby grand piano recently, due to the united efforts of the girls, parents, friends, and campus organizations. Special projects have been carried on by the girls to help pay for the piano which is now located in the Lincoln Hall lounge.

Two other special additions to equipment were made recently. The bacteriology laboratory received a water heater for sanitation purposes in laboratory work. A new electric clothes dryer was added to the girl's dorm laundry equipment.

Dr. Lloyd Ramseyer, president, attended the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges in Washington, D. C., on Jan. 11, and the Association of American Colleges meetings in Washington, beginning Jan. 11.

Alumni, former students, and friends of Bluffton College in the Chicago area will meet at Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago, on January 29, at 7:30 p.m., for a special Chicago reunion. Rev. William Keeney, assistant to the president at Bluffton, will speak.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Members of the Christian Youth Volunteers have taken up the project of redecorating the chapel and altering the platform so that the whole room will have a more church like atmosphere. During the Christmas vacation the walls were repainted and the platform was enlarged and raised. When the project is completed the room will make a better setting for worship services.

Rev. J. Herbert Fretz, pastor of the Salem Mennonite Church gave an inspirational chapel message the week after New Year.

A concert by Eddy Ruhl, a talented young tenor, was the latest offering of this year's Freeman College Concert Series.

As a special project the Alumni Association has inaugurated a library renovation program which it hopes to complete by 1956 when the Alumni celebrates its golden anniversary.

Steel book shelves ordered last summer were received and assembled during the Christmas vacation. The library was then moved into the former study hall where there is much more room for the stacks as well as for the reading area. The former library quarters are now used as study room for Academy freshmen, sophomores, and juniors.

MCC News Notes

STATEMENT REGARDING MCC DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT SURPLUS FOOD

This statement is prompted by further queries about the conditions under which government surplus food is available and the financial arrangements whereby MCC distributes such commodities in its foreign relief program.

Last summer the United States government made $300 million worth of surplus food available without cost to voluntary relief agencies. These commodities are to be distributed overseas within a three-year period. The availability of this free food to voluntary relief agencies is one of the government's efforts to decrease large stocks of commodities which have accumulated because of its subsidies to farmers.

As a government-licensed voluntary relief agency, MCC is entitled to surplus foods in the same way as are other agencies such as Church World Service (CWS), Brethren Service Commission (BSC), War Relief Services-National Catholic Welfare Committee (WRS-NCWC), and American Friends Service Committee (AFSC). When availability of surplus food was announced, MCC decided to accept quantities as could be distributed by its staff on principles of good stewardship. In other words, MCC is claiming all the US government surplus food which its relief workers can effectively distribute to the needy overseas.

Certain areas of the MCC constituency have been puzzled by statements that $1 contributions will make $20 worth of surplus food available. The meaning of such "$1 to $20" slogans by other agencies is that $1 will pay the overhead required to ship $20 worth of surplus food to needy persons overseas. Surplus foods are free and are not purchased.

There are certain costs of processing and shipping needed to disperse these commodities. In addition there are the costs of maintaining personnel who distribute these materials. Such costs are paid by the cash contributions made to the MCC relief program by Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches. MCC welcomes cash contributions designated for such purposes. Such contributions can be made to conference headquarters or MCC.

Questions have been asked how MCC's overhead in handling surplus food compares to the overhead of other relief agencies. MCC's overhead for relief operations is less than that of most agencies.

The use of government surplus food, like material aid contributed by the constituency, can be a significant Christian witness. Relief personnel distributing surplus commodities can make an explanation about the Christian motivation for their services in the same way as when they disperse other relief supplies. Relief workers need the prayerful support of their supporting churches so this food distributed "in the name of Christ" can be an effective and impressive Christian testimony.

The distribution of government surplus food such as that made available by the 1954 Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act is not new to MCC. Mennonite relief workers have been dispatching such materials during the past approximate two years. In 1949 powdered milk and eggs were made available to relief agencies.

During the past year MCC shipped approximately 320 tons of surplus commodity food valued at $183,239.35. Proposed shipping for the first quarter of 1955 is 80 tons valued at $43,500. Foodstuffs allotted to MCC are dispensed to Germany, France, Austria, Jordan, Korea, Formosa, Japan, and Indochina. Available foodstuffs are powdered milk, butter, cheese, cottonseed oil, and shortening. These commodities are available only in railway carload lots. At present wheat is not available from government surplus stocks.

Another way in which the government distributed surplus food was through the Christmas food packages in a project known as "operation reindeer" and "operation poinsettia." MCC received a total of 43,372 of these gift packages containing between 13 and 15 pounds. These parcels were disbursed to Austria, France, Germany, Jordan, Formosa, Japan, Indochina, and Korea and were intended for distribution around Christmas.

PAX MEN SAVE ENKENBACH SETTLERS $19,000

Since May, 1953, when PAX men began construction of refugee housing in Enkenbach, Germany, they have worked a total of 42,875 hours which represents a saving of approximately $19,093 for those Mennonite settlers. Had these American Mennonite 1-W men not contributed their labor, the cost of the eight houses built thus far would have been approximately 80,000 DM to the settlers. Six of these houses are completed and two are under roof. During the winter months the Enkenbach PAX men will dig five cellars, do some street grading and build "stalls" for the dwellings to house poultry, garden equipment and vehicles.

LEONARD GROSS TO EUROPE

Leonard Gross, son of Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Gross, Doylestown, Penn., sailed from New York City on Jan. 15, for a two-year term of service in Europe. His assignment will be determined after arrival. He is a Goshen College graduate and has attended the Goshen College Biblical Seminary and the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago.

After the material is properly arranged and labeled on the new shelves it will be much more easily accessible than on the cramped and crowded shelves of the former library space.

Several other improvements are planned and when these have been completed this Alumni project will be one of the most useful improvements on the campus.

Jottings

—Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kan.: Members of the Young Adult Sunday School Class enjoyed a wonderful evening of fellowship in the Christmas spirit at the Dr. Spaulding home on Dec. 3. This is a growing class of young married couples. Our Youth Fellowship provided Christmas (food and clothing) for a needy family. On Sunday evening, Dec. 19, the Adult and Treble Cleff Choirs gave a Christmas musical service. The theme was "Carols Around the World." Our pastor, G. S. Stoneback, was the reader for this inspirational service. The audience participated by joining in the singing of many of the carols. The German song, "Nun ist Sie Erschienen," was sung with much feeling by everyone. On Christmas evening the elementary department and a drama group (a family scene) gave the Christmas Story in tableaux form. The Christmas Story was read and told from the Bible by the father in the family scene as the children acted out in a vivid and realistic way, "No Room in the Inn," Shepherd, Wisemen, and many other scenes. A mixed quartet and a children's choir gave the mood music between the scenes. The congregation sang "Lead on O King Eternal" as the children joined the Wisemen on the stage in bringing homage to the Christ Child which made a fitting conclusion to this presentation. Dec. 31 both young and old met at the church for our annual watch night fellowship and prayer service. There were wholesome games for all ages, and refreshments. There were also several films shown including the feature, "All for Him." many prayers of praise and thanksgiving were said as the year drew to a close.—Mrs. John H. Gaeddert, Corr.

—First Church, Reedley, Calif.: What better way is there to begin the new year than with prayer? Wherever there are Christians in this world, the Universal Week of Prayer will be observed. Meetings were held each evening of the week of Jan. 2-7, in our observance of this special week, with various Sunday school classes in charge. The annual all church day on Nov. 7, was themed "Discipleship." The noon dinner was served by the Worthwhile Circle. J. J. Esau brought us the morning message on Dec. 5, in the absence of our pastor who was attending the Council of Boards meeting in Newton, Kan. Our church again presented "The Messiah," directed by Roy Reimer, on Dec. 5. The annual business meeting was held in two sessions, Dec. 9 and 14: our pastor has been elected to serve us for another term of three years. At the Christmas Eve Sunday school program, each class again presented their "White Christmas" offering, a special Christmas gift from each class to support some needy cause. The young people had a watch night service at which Jo Lange, German exchange trainee showed pictures. Our pastor is again teaching a catechism class beginning in January.—Mrs. Ray Goossen, Corr.

—Deep Run Church, Bedminster, Pa.: The Senior Choir presented a program of Christmas music from the Fountain House Plaza, Doylestown, Pa., Dec. 17. A Christmas play was presented by the Women's Missionary Society for their December meeting. Delmar Stahly from the MCC office conducted the Sunday morning worship service while our pastor made 1-W visitations in Connecticut. Ely Fretz spoke of their trip through the Home Mission fields in the south at our Sunday school and worship service at the Home for the Aged recently. The Sunday school presented a Christmas program Sunday evening, Dec. 26. Family night and watch night service was observed New Year's Eve, with the Girl's Gospel Team of Bluffton College giving a sacred program. The Youth Fellowship went Christmas caroling Christmas Eve, and presented a program at the Upper Milford Mennonite Church, Sunday evening, Jan. 2. Jan. 5 was the first of weekly meetings of Bible study on the book of Mark. Mrs. Hedwig Hueston from the First Church, Philadelphia, was received into our fellowship Jan. 2, 1955.—Corr.

—First Church, Madrid, Neb.: On Nov. 16, Norman Dalke performed the wedding services which united in marriage Miss Ruth Regier, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Regier, Madrid, and Curtis Preheim, son of Mr. and Mrs. Emil Preheim, Freeman, South Dakota. The marriage took place in the First Church of Madrid, at 7:00 o'clock. J. H. Fretz, minister of the Salem Church, Freeman, South Dakota, gave a short sermonette following the ceremony. On Jan. 15, we had our annual church meeting where new officers were elected and some officers re-elected for the different branches of the church work. The minister's report revealed the following: Workers present here in the last six months were Rev. and Mrs. Henry Grimm of Summerfield, Ill.; Mr. and Mrs. Herman Buller going into the mission work in Argentina; Missionary Marie Duerksen, missionary to India; Rev. P. K. Regier, executive sercetary of the General Conference and Rev. and Mrs. J. F. Sawatzky were here for the Thanksgiving and Mission Festival. Rev. J. H. Fretz was here to serve in the wedding occasion. In outlining the future work for the new year the following were mentioned: Organization of our young people, catechism and Bible class for the young people, weekly singing for our community hospital, revision of the church library, evangelism work, revitalization of the prayer meetings and Bible study, greater emphasis on the work of the laymen's organization. The congregation voted unanimously to extend a call for another year of service to Norman Dalke before he completes his work at Seminary. The call was accepted by Rev. Dalke.—Corr.

—First Church, Berne, Ind.: A Mission Festival was held here over the Thanksgiving week end which proved to be a real time of blessing and enlightenment. Seven sessions were held with those of our own missionaries and the workers in the Children's Bible Mission and the Go-Ye Mission, also John P. Suderman, board member, as speakers. The Gerald Stucky family of Colombia, S. A., arrived here on Jan. 3. They will live here during at least a part of their furlough, while their children attend the Berne school. Miss Melva Lehman expects to sail for her second term in India in a few weeks. John F. Sprunger, who had served as our assistant pastor for some time accepted a call to the East Swamp Church near Quakertown, Pa., and he and his wife and little son left for that place early in November. The Hugh Sprunger family left the same week for Formosa, where they will serve as the first missionaries of our Conference in that field. Erland Waltner of Newton, Kansas, was the speaker for the union services here during the week of Dec. 26—Jan. 2. He gave heart-searching and interesting Bible studies on the first epistle of John, and in the three daytime meetings on Galatians.—Corr.

—Bethany Church, Quakertown, Pa.: Milton Denlinger, gospel artist from Lancaster, Pa., painted the 23rd Psalm during the November Christian Endeavor meeting. The same evening, Nov. 21, the Ladies' Aid and Missionary Society held its annual Thank Offering program. On Thanksgiving an 8:30 a.m. service was held with Wilmer Shelly bringing a message on our Home Mission work in the south. The Ladies' Aid and Missionary Society entertained the families of the church at the annual family Christmas party on Dec. 11. The Sunday school Christmas program and pageant was presented on Dec. 19, and communion was observed on Dec. 26. At the yearly Sunday school election Wilmer Martin, Jr., was elected as our new superintendent.—Corr.

—Immanuel Church, Downey, Calif.: The ladies of our church gave a "Tupper" party for Mrs. Kenneth Radach on Dec. 6. Many purchased Tupper items (plastic kitchen ware) for their own use and a cash offering was also presented to Mrs. Radach so she was able to purchase many items that would come in handy upon their return to Africa. Our annual Sunday school Christmas program was presented by the children Sunday evening, Dec. 19. Following the program, a group of young people went caroling. Christmas Day services were held Christmas morning at 10:30. Sunday evening, Dec. 26, the choir presented a special Christmas musical, following which Rev. and Mrs. Kenneth Radach spoke and showed pictures of mission work in Africa. A New Year's Eve service was held at the church, followed by a watch night service at the church parsonage for the young people.—Lorraine Regehr, Corr.

The students who were home over the holidays have returned. One attends Berean Bible Academy, two at Meade Bible Academy, six at Oklahoma Bible Academy, one at Bethel College, and one at Grace Bible Institute. Mr. and Mrs. William Gaeddert celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary Dec. 29. An interesting program was given at the church. The young people had a social gathering at the parsonage, Dec. 30, with 27 present. It was closed with chorus singing, Scripture, and prayer. The New Year's message on Jan. 1, was followed with the annual business meeting. The following new officers were elected: Alvin Goossen, sec. of board; Arnold Nickel, treas. of trustees; Dan Epp, sec. of trustees; Mrs. John Williams, director for special music; Kenneth Gaeddert, pianist; Virgil Buller, song and choir leader; George Wiens, Jim Franz, and Eldo Franz, ushers. There was an installation service Jan. 9. Mrs. George Bergen underwent surgery at the Oakley Hospital, Jan. 5. We are praying for a speedy recovery.—Corr.

—Onecho Church, Colfax, Wash.: The Junior Choir under the direction of Darrell Allbright has been furnishing music for several morning and evening meetings, as well as participating in the annual Christmas program. Harold Burkholder of Grace Bible Institute held a series of meetings in the church, Nov. 18-28. He also presented the Thanksgiving sermon on Thanksgiving Day, and also taught the adult Sunday school classes on both Sundays. Many were specially blessed when attending five morning Bible classes on the book of Ruth. To hear Rev. Burkholder over the air on the local station in the mornings of one week was another great privilege. Following the Thanksgiving service many enjoyed a carry-in dinner in the basement of the church.—Corr.

—Garden Twp. Church, Hanston, Kan.: New officers of our WMS for 1955 are Mrs. Willie Voran, pres., and Mrs. Ferd Neufeld, sec.-treas. Central Kansas Bible Academy, Hutchinson, rendered a Christmas program in the church Sunday evening, Dec. 19. The annual Christmas program given by the Sunday school was held Dec. 24, evening. On Dec. 28, the annual church business meeting was held during which time the acceptance of our pastor's resignation took place. Rev. Graber's future plans are not definite as yet. Virgil Dirks occupied the pulpit in our pastor's absence, Jan. 2. Mrs. Waldo Ewy will be the correspondent for 1955.—Mrs. Albert Ewy, Corr.

—West Swamp Church, Quakertown, Pa.: The Women's Missionary Society held their anniversary service Thanksgiving morning with a mite-box service and Elsie Pfister from Kentucky as speaker. The sick and shut-ins were remembered by a visiting committee and with boxes of fruit and Christmas cookies. On Christmas Eve the junior department presented a Christmas program, followed by the film, "The Birth of a Savior." Also the White Gifts of the Sunday school were presented which amounted to $824. This was divided as follows: Missionaries— Drs. Harvey and Ella Bauman; Kenneth and Mary Bauman; Arthur and Helen Keiser; S. T. Moyer for young people's work in India; to our General Conference work; and to Bluffton College. The young people of the church went caroling after the evening program. Sunday, Dec. 26, the pastor preached on the thought, "Is Today Still Christmas?" In the evening a program of Christmas music and meditation was given. Dec. 30 the Bluffton College Women's Gospel Team presented a program of song and worship. New Year's Eve was ushered in by a C. E. social and watch night service. Our contribution for the new mission project of northeast Philadelphia amounted to $1,540.—Corr.

—Tabor Church, Newton, Kan.: Carl Lehman of Bluffton College and Paul Holdeman, a 1-W pastor, were our guest speakers Sunday morning, Dec. 5. The Willing Helpers Society invited the 1-W men from this area to our church services Dec. 5. After the service this society and their families enjoyed a fellowship dinner with them. Dec. 12, evening, the Willing Helpers gave a Christmas program; an offering was taken for missions. We had a Christmas program Christmas Eve for those families who do not have a program in their schools on that evening. Arnold E. Funk, pastor of the Bruderthal Church was our guest speaker on Sunday morning, Dec. 26; this was a pulpit exchange with our pastor. The general C. E. met Dec. 31, for election of officers for the coming year; also a sermon by Rev. Schmidt.—Mrs. Jake J. Goerzen, Corr.

Once again we can look back and review a year's work. The accompanying chart gives a graphic review of the phase of work for the past year—Conference giving. Through the combined efforts of each of you approximately 88 per cent of the Conference budget for 1954 was met. Percentages at the close of the year for the four boards ranged from 73.6 for Education and Publication to 90.4 for Missions. (The YPU, an auxiliary organization, oversubscribed its budget, reaching 111.8 per cent). Comparing these averages with 1953, we find a decrease of approximately 10 per cent. This does not mean, however, that we have slackened in our giving (total 1954 contributions exceeded 1953 by $8,000), but it indicates that our giving has not kept pace with the growing work of our Conference (the '54 budget was some $92,000 higher than the '53 budget).

We do want to commend each of you for helping to make December an all-time high month with over $122,000 recorded as budget receipts. This does not include any estate gifts; it represents your offerings, large and small, given directly or through your church. We thank God for each of your gifts.

To reach our 1955 budget goal we will need an average monthly budget income of $69,000—let's see if we can't reach it by regular and consistent giving.

Mennonite Seminary Summer Session in Chicago

A unique opportunity will be provided this summer for ministerial study in Chicago under Mennonite auspices. The program of summer studies in which students and faculty members of Mennonite Biblical Seminary and Goshen College Biblical Seminary participated last summer at Goshen was regarded as highly worth-while by all concerned. This summer a similar program is to be carried on with inter-Mennonite participation at Chicago under the administration of Mennonite Biblical Seminary.

A six-week session is planned divided into two three-week terms. Thus ministers who wish a short period of refresher courses may take advantage of a three-week term and students who wish more work can extend it to six weeks. All work will be on the graduate level and will provide attractive studies for men in the minstry as well as students in training.

Full details as to courses are not yet available but under consideration are Old and New Testament, Biblical Homiletics, Archaeology, Anabaptist or Mennonite studies, Missions, Christianity and Communism, and Pastoral Counselling. Actual offerings will depend in part on the interest that is expressed.

Classes will be held and residence available in the quarters of Mennonite Biblical Seminary, 4614 Woodlawn Avenue. The dates for the two terms are June 14 to July 2 and July 4 to 22. Either term can be taken independently or both can be taken without duplication.

Since there have been numerous requests in former years for some such program as this, it is hoped that many will take advantage of the opportunity. Attractive courses, some of the best qualified Mennonite teachers, and pleasant location, contact with Mennonite mission work, and the possibility of a new Christian fellowship should combine to make this a very profitable period for the minister.

"Inasmuch"

News of a devastating flood has slowly filtered through the bamboo curtain. We do not know how many people drowned, how many are still homeless, or how much starvation is resulting from loss of the rice crop.

But we do know that one of the problems of the United States is government-owned surplus food. And we do know Christ's teaching on helping those in need. Individual Christians, congregations, the Fellowship of Reconciliation and others are urging their representatives in Washington to share some of our surplus food with China's flood victims. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him," their letters urge. And if enough of us speak to this point, action is likely to result.

Here is a petition to the President drawn up by two church women, Dr. Mary Podea and Mrs. B. W. Hamilton. Copies may be secured by writing to Dr. Podea at 817 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

"We look with love upon China's famine-stricken children, and share in mother-love the pain of their mothers. Remembering Martha's words of long ago—'Lord, if thou hadst been here my brother had not died'—we request you, Mr. President, to give a generous portion of our surplus food as a love gift to the children of the famine areas of China."

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

1. To work for a Conference unified in Christ.
2. To teach the gospel of Christ effectively.
3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

RESPONSIBLE FOR SIX MILLION

We call attention this week to the fifth of the objectives named above: our responsibility to witness to the six million souls entrusted to our Conference. This figure has been arrived at by careful estimate of the number of people living in the mission territory delegated to our Conference, where other denominations assume no responsibility.

Responsible for six million souls! This is a very sobering thought. No other church groups or organizations to assist us in this. This would be approximately one hundred twenty souls for each individual member of our Conference. What are some of the ways we may best discharge this obligation?

We need to become more mission conscious, instead of less. Young people should give more serious consideration to the call of missions for their own life work. All should help to create a healthy missionary atmosphere in the churches. Pastors should be contagious mission enthusiasts that others may catch the vision.

It is easy to see that if human and financial resources be directed away from this obligation, our own six million will suffer in direct proportion. This is a strong argument for all our churches to help support our own Conference in its mission endeavors; for if WE do not care for this responsibility, NO ONE ELSE WILL. If the money that goes to outside causes, however worthy they may be, were directed along our own obligations, the six million would be far better cared for.

Churches need to become centers of dynamic evangelism to provide the missionary zeal for these tasks. As shown in another article, laymen need to become enthusiastic evangelists, both at home and abroad.

Six million—a hundred twenty for every individual member—is indeed a heavy responsibility; too heavy to be considered lightly, or to be borne without the help of the Heavenly Father.

THE CHURCH BULLETIN

Until rather recently, the regular church bulletin was considered by many an unnecessary extravagance, or only for the larger and wealthier churches. However, more and more churches are using them as a regular feature of their Sunday services.

For one thing, the bulletin can do away with the list of announcements which people have difficulty in remembering anyway. These can be listed concisely and clearly so that no one need be in doubt about the church activities.

The bulletin can also be an aid to worship, showing the order of service, the hymns, the Scripture passage, the sermon topic and text, and—for music lovers—the selections of music used. Supply pastors can be properly introduced, as well as reasons stated why the regular pastor is away. The bulletins can also contain some short message, a prayer or poem, that can be a source of inspiration beyond the time of the worship serivce.

Some churches send their weekly bulletins to absent members or hospital patients, or to members away from the home church. It becomes a means of keeping those unable to attend, in touch with their home church and its activities. Keeping bulletins on file or binding them yearly into booklet form also becomes a valuable church record and a useful reference.

But the church bulletin should be worthy of the church. Frequently one finds poorly mimeographed copies, with dim or blurred or crooked typing. Neat and attractive covers with first class typing of copies may cost a little more but should be worth it. The impression many visitors form of a church is the type of bulletins handed them. There should be plenty of copies so that each worshipper may have one of his own.

It may be necessary for the pastor to do all the work himself. In any church, capable laymen should be found who would be willing to do the mechanical work needed, and who perhaps in most cases could do it better than the minister himself.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE ARE ACTIVE

The church can indeed be grateful for the fine young people who are interested in the various types of Christian service. At meetings of Young People's Unions or other groups there is a seriousness and a concern for the Lord's work that is wholesome and gratifying. Young people are interested in Voluntary Service and make more sacrifices to engage in this type of Christian work than do the older groups. They are ready to give of their time and effort for causes which seem to them to be a witness to Christ, and to administer to the needs of others. The whole Voluntary Service program is a tribute to the interest and spiritual life of our young people.

The various workshops, study groups, and retreats also show how deep is the interest of our young people in Christian service.

We rejoice at this interest. We need to make possible a continuation and a growth of these various types of service outlets. The youth should be given every opportunity to engage in definite Christian service. Churches should be alert to ways of aiding this interest and making possible ever larger participation by the young people.

Evangelism: The Layman's Challenge

NOTE: At the suggestion of the Evangelism Committee of the General Conference, working under the Board of Missions, Harold Buller, pastor of Bethel College Church, is writing two articles on the need of local evangelism committees in our churches. The Evangelism Committee hopes that great challenge and stimulation will come to all readers—members of churches, to do something definite in this area.

Churches without an evangelism committee or its equivalent are missing a leg. Churches with a half-hearted evangelism committee are lame and will likely hobble along in their united Christian witness.

An evangelism committee is a group of laymen and laywomen selected from the church membership to lead out, together with the pastor, in the work of evangelization carried on by the church in the local community.

Such a committee, made up of lay people is extremely necessary for the following reasons:

I. Christianity is primarily a layman's religion.

If the true church of Christ were made up primarily of ministers then the lay members would be to the minister like ornaments are to a Christmas tree. The minister who could collect the most ornaments would seem the most successful. But that's not the way it is. The Spirit says, through Paul, "Ye are the body of Christ and individually members of it." This was said of the entire Church.

The church of Jesus Christ is made up of a body of believers who testify by word, deed, and invitation to their faith in the saving power of God.

The amazing growth of the Church during its earliest centuries was due to the daily testimony of the layman who was so convinced of his faith that he remained true to it under all circumstances of life, pleasant and unpleasant. He believed that all men should have a part in his new found joy. He lived and spoke accordingly.

When Christianity is limited to a "preacher's religion," to be argued and discussed in theological conferences, it has gone to seed that won't do much sprouting. Christianity is the layman's religion to be lived and testified to under all circumstances of life.

The living church is one in which its members win others to Christ and help them find their place in the body of Christ.

It is entirely natural that the members of any local church body, seeing this as its task and responsibility, would choose a group of its own lay people to help lead them in this work. Such a group can be called an evangelism committee. It is no more their task to do all the evangelizing for the entire church than it is the task of the minister. But together with the minister, the members of this committee help to guide others in their Christian testimony.

II. The layman's testimony is usually more effective among "outsiders" than that of a minister.

This is no slight against those who preach the Word as ordained ministers. But if you were not a Christian, and knew little about the Christian Church, who would have the better chance of persuading you to become a Christian? Would it be the minister who, so far as you would be concerned, makes his living by doing church work? Or would it be the layman who believes in Christ, even though to follow Christ's teaching makes it harder for him to earn a living in today's society?

The average non-Christian wants to know that the things of this world which Christ asks him to give up will be replaced by something meaningful and worth having. One way of telling is by watching people in similar circumstances who have tried it. This means, of course, the Christian farmer, teacher, or businessman living in the same community. If these who call themselves Christians are noncommittal about their faith then it will be considered of little value. But if they really believe in it in spite of difficulties it imposes, then maybe it can help their neighbor in his spiritual hunger.

Therefore, an evangelism committee dedicated to promoting a more active lay witness can be a most important part of the work of any church.

III. The minister can not possibly do the work of an evangelism committee by himself.

This would be true even if the witness of a lay person were not more effective than his own. Unfortunately, almost any community has more nominal or non-Christians than any one minister could possibly lead to Christ and the Church even if he could spend all his time at this task. But as it is, most ministers have the majority of their time taken up by meeting spiritual needs among church members and by the work of the organized church. Even the work of preaching gets to be something for which he too often prepares only at odd moments and after 9:00 p.m. This is true both for small and large churches.

In smaller churches the minister finds himself carrying much of the organizational work of the church. The responsibilities such as church business transactions, Sunday school, youth work, catechism classes, and even janitorial work, (not to speak of a part-time job on the side), keep him busy, even if he has no community or Conference responsibility.

In larger churches where more trained and responsible people can help carry the load there are so many more committee meetings, sick calls, pastoral calls, weddings, funerals, community affairs and a host of details that find their way to the parsonage that he bogs down anyway.

And then the members wonder at annual meeting why the church did not grow. It might well be because it needs an evangelism committee that actively leads the congregation in this great task.

Summer Bible Schools in Paraguay

HENRY EPP

December, 1954, witnessed our second summer Bible school in Asuncion with an increased attendance from last year's 35 to 55 regular students ages ranging from four and one-half to thirteen. The school was conducted in the MCC home with six teachers in charge of four classes. Material was ordered from the MCC offices, Switzerland, and paid for by local contributions. The school program included an outing to a nearby lake. On Dec. 12, Sunday evening, parents and friends of the Bible school attended the closing program.

We consider this DVBS work a must for Asuncion, especially since our Sunday school efforts from Sunday to Sunday do not meet with the success and co-operation we had hoped for. This summer school recorded a near perfect attendance for Mennonite children living or spending their summer vacations in Asuncion. Then also up to twelve non-Mennonite children from German-speaking homes attended, and after the closing program many of the mothers came and expressed their appreciation. Most of these children also took part in our Christmas Eve program, singing the carols with our children, reciting poems, and receiving Christmas gifts.

The German evangelical church has become so inactive that parents are beginning to show an interest in our activities, not that any one of them is contemplating leaving his or her church, but they are beginning to demand more from their own leaders. We are glad for this opportunity to witness and lend a helping hand.

Two hundred and thirty miles south of Asuncion we find hundreds, possibly thousands of these German evangelicals. Since a month ago they were served by one pastor who came to each colony once a year attending to baptisms, confirmation, weddings, etc., at that time. I had an opportunity to visit one of these colonies, the poorest economically, which consists of around sixty families with one hundred children. The children receive four years of public Spanish education, no German and no religion. I found only two families that knew of and practiced Tischgebet.

Details of conditions there, how we got to sending a worker down, and the difficulties encountered, cannot be reported at this time.

In December one of our Asuncion Mennonite teachers was sent to Camby Reta by the Mennonite Conference in Paraguay. After an intensive visitation program thirty-seven children responded. Local authorities forbade use of school or other public buildings and since no private house was central and otherwise suitable, classes were conducted open-air under the trees. Actually there was only one class at each of two meeting places (some two hours separate) because the children of 16 years were as ignorant of Bible stories as the 5 year olds. Some German instruction was given, and much time was spent preparing a Christmas Eve program. Over one hundred adults attended and admitted later it was the first time they had seen a Krippenspiel, or celebrated without drinking and dancing. (Although several days later these parties took charge of celebration anyway.)

Anyone interested in this mission project, its financing, etc., might contact the Mission Board. Rev. Walter Dyck who is coming here in a day or two will get all the inside information, or you might write us a personal letter. We will be happy to answer.

IV. Minister and people need to work together in a practical way.

This article in no way tries to say that the minister has no responsibility in the field of evangelism. He has tremendous responsibility. The laymen of any church very naturally want to look to their minister for leadership in this challenge. After all, they have learned to know him, not as one who makes his living via religion, but as one who chose to be a minister because he answered the call of God to a work that is of highest importance to him. They should look to him for guidance.

An evangelism committee will be the instrument through which this leadership can become practical and meaningful. Without such a committee either pastor or people working more or less independently would be much less effective.

The evangelism committee helps the church organize for action. Without it the minister would throw out his suggestions in sort of a confusion. He does not have time for all the details to make these ideas work. But now there is a group of people specifically dedicated to seeing that something is done. The committee is inspired by the minister.

The evangelism committee helps to make evangelism the work of the layman. If the layman does not personally engage in it, but keeps considering it the minister's job, he will never gain any real enthusiasm for it. His faith will fail to become contagious.

The evangelism committee, guided by a conscientious minister who finds out what lay evangelism is all about can help the layman do much better a task that no one else can do as well.

We need evangelism committees in our churches.

The purpose of the Budget Folder and Contribution Blank: It simplifies listing of offerings for Conference causes and mailing—by using the self-addressed, postage-paid envelopes—by church treasurers—and individuals. After two years, this has eliminated most of the confusion or wrongly addressed mail. It keeps before the people the annual budget. It results in more easily and accurately recording receipts by the Central Treasury. All churches have been supplied with these folders. If you have not received your or need more write to the Conference Treasurer.

The Beginning

ARTHUR FRIESEN*

Eighty-two years ago during the sixth session of the General Conference a mission board was elected. From the very beginning, when two churches in Iowa first united in 1859, the Conference had in mind starting and carrying on some mission enterprise. I believe home mission work was already being carried on at this time.

The above mentioned sixth General Conference resolved to inquire of the Amsterdamer Taufgesinnten Missionsgesellshaft whether mission work could be done side by side with them in Sumatra. This, however, could not be worked out. During the next session, in 1875, the first mission candidate, S. S. Haury, was accepted. He was instructed to visit our churches in the interest of missions and to look for an open door among the heathen of our own land first and if no suitable location was found to look elsewhere.

Up to this time the work in Indian Territory had been chiefly school work. The Superintendent of Indian Affairs was contacted at Lawrence, Kansas, to inquire of him about opening a mission in Indian Territory. He was friendly toward this plan so S. S. Haury and Peter Haury, on October 11, 1876, left by buggy, for their first of several trips into Indian Territory.

It is striking and impressive to note that in their search they recognized and respected the work of other denominations. They looked for a field not yet occupied by anyone. Among the Osages the Catholics were doing some work. The Baptists had established a mission among the Sac and Fox Indians. The agents were friendly but the various tribes were evidently supplied with schools and missions.

The second trip was to the Cheyenne and Arapaho Agency near the present city of El Reno, Oklahoma. This was in November, 1876. Here there was a government school but its supervision had been turned over to the Quakers and was like a mission school. Two years before this the Cheyennes had still fought against the whites. Now there were 2,000 Cheyennes and 1,700 Arapahos living in canvas and buffalo tents and they seemed willing to send their children to school. After further investigation among the Kiowas, Comanches, and Cados it was felt that an open door had been found and Haury was in favor of erecting a mission school with a farm connected with the same.

In the summer of 1877 the third trip was undertaken. He went into the camp with an Arapaho chief, sleeping in his tent, eating with the Indians, and witnessing what they called making medicine. In Krehbiel's History of the General Conference Haury is quoted as follows: "Again I am among the Indians. But as a mountain that cannot be crossed, the work, for the accomplishment of which I was sent here, stands before my spirit. The more I observe these poor Indians, the less competent do I feel for the hard task of living and laboring among them. In fear and trembling my heart would cry out, 'Send, Lord, whom thou shalt, only send not me.' " He felt that he had seen enough and in his heart there was a deep feeling of sympathy for these poor people held in Satan's power.

The plan was to build a small dwelling at Darlington the next spring and devote the summer to language study. Sore eyes, however, caused a delay and in the fall of 1878 he made a fourth trip, this time to the Creeks and Cherokees in eastern Indian Territory, to gain information from established missions. He was well impressed and hoped to banish the feeling of some that it was impossible for Indians to become Christianized and civilized.

On arriving in Halstead word was received that the Quakers had sent a missionary to the Cheyennes. Haury made his fifth trip to inform himself and found this to be true, however the Arapahos still wanted him to come. This would mean limited activities under the Quaker Agent. The General Conference was to convene that fall and Haury returned to Halstead waiting for further decisions of the Board and the Conference. Where was God leading?

Now word was received that Alaska had an open door. During this Conference Haury was ordained and it was decided to send him to Alaska to begin mission work immediately should he find a suitable location. J. B. Baer of Summerfield, Illinois, accompanied him. At Sitka they found that the Presbyterians had a mission. The location appealed to them but here again, since another denomination already had a mission, they decided to look elsewhere in Alaska. Everywhere it was the same. After seven months they returned home with a feeling that the journey had been a complete failure. Upon arriving at Halstead the revenue collector at Sitka informed Haury that the Presbyterians would do nothing and begged him to return.

That fall the Mission Board resolved to inquire further of the revenue collector, and, in order to be fair to the Presbyterian Missionary Society, to also inquire of their intentions. At the same time further investigations should be made in Indian Territory.

If no favorable reply was received by March 10, 1880, a committee composed of Rev. Christian Krehbiel, Rev. H. Richert, and Rev. D. Goertz together with S. S. Haury should go to Indian Territory. A short time after the Board's decision letters came from the Presbyterian board saying they were increasing their force. The Indian Superintendent wrote inviting them to come to Darlington and promised his assistance.

Upon these developments it was decided to drop Alaska as a possible field. The appointed committee then went to Darlington in April, 1880, just 75 years ago. They were favorably impressed with the prospects and recommended the immediate opening

Do you read books to your children? If you have older children or even teen-agers in the home, please don't miss reading But Not Forsaken by Helen Good Brenneman. (Mennonite Publishing House, Scottdale, Pa., $2.50.)

In addition to the book suggestion may I offer this bit of encouragement for a very delightful and enriching sharing experience such as reading together in the family circle can be? Necessity is often a guide in our lives. So it happened that because one of our children found it difficult to relax sufficiently at the table to enjoy her meals, we began reading during mealtime. Listening to stories helped: our children ate better, fussed less, and we all had a happy time. Not that we read at every meal—not even every day—yet through the years we learned many a good lesson from books and sometimes even caught the delicious refreshment of a nonsensical story read "just for fun."

Perhaps our family reading at the table had its beginning in my own childhood. I shall never forget the after-supper hour in my parental home when dishes and food remained on the table and elbows and chins went on too. Sometimes even the heads of the younger children drooped down on it and went to sleep. For them the intrigues of DAS NIEBELUNGENLIED or the beauty of Goethe's IPHIGENIA had little meaning. But for us fifth and seventh graders the hour passed too quickly. This was WONDERLAND.

Present schedules—ours as well as our older children's—often do not allow an after-supper leisure time. And so, looking back, I am glad that I set my own plate aside and used the mealtime to open the world of books to our children.

Just now we are reading But Not Forsaken. We shall never be finished with this story though we come to the end of its pages in the book. It will go on in our lives to remind us of God's goodness in our plenty and keep us willing to share our gifts, for the faces of Hans and Maria and Little Hans and Rosie shall ever be with us. Because they shall remain with us we shall "have a heart" for the refugees that come into our neighborhood; we shall understand better the ones among them who have lost their zest for living; we shall try to remember where they lost it in that far-away trek where fear drove them on and on and on.

I am glad to give the strength of this book—its faith in God—to our son. There may come a time when he shall be driven by forces of fear on an unchartered way. It may be that then he shall remember . . . Maria kept faith and found help in the certainty of the presence within her of the Helping Christ.

Flashes of Thought

God is My Light

Walter Gering

How often I had seen the church that way; there was nothing unusual about this. Yet somehow it sent a thrill through my soul. Long after we had gone back to the parsonage to enter into the activities of the day it still left me with a strange warm feeling within my heart.

You see, it was New Year's Day. The old year with its memories was still fresh in mind. It had been a year of blessings and sorrows. Experiences which had shaken the very foundations had come and gone. Now we were turning over a new leaf, eager to begin anew. The message of the morning had been delivered and the closing song was sounding through the halls.

It was one of those days in which the skies are overcast with clouds and the shadows deepen across the land. It was almost with a sense of foreboding for the New Year that we sang in the darkened church. Even the hymn itself sounded forth the same note.

'Tho naught of Thy great power
May move my soul
With Thee thru night and darkness
I reach my goal.
Take, then, my hands, O Father
And lead thou me
Until my journey endeth
Eternally."

"Thru night and darkness"—what a thought for the New Year. Then it happened. Just as the congregation led off into the closing words of the hymn the whole room was suddenly flooded with a brilliant light. The sun had pierced the clouds for a few brief moments and the singing of the hymn ended in the radiance of light. In deep meditation upon this startling flood of light my eyes glanced to the opposite page. There it was again:

God is my light!
My Soul, do not despair
In hours of thy distress!
The sun with draws
And earth is dark and drear;
My light will never cease."

Thank God for moments such as these in which the Eternal Light of God pierces the darkness of a cloudy day and floods the souls with a light divine. May this be our experience as we walk together with Him who is indeed the "Light of the World."

PAX Men Distribute Christmas Bundles in Germany

PAX men in Germany distributed more than 2,000 Christmas bundles during the holiday season. Contributed by American Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches, these personalized gifts brought much joy to the hearts of boys and girls ranging in age three to sixteen. The bundles were distributed in the refugee settlements near Wedel, Enkenbach, and Backnang where the drafted American Mennonite youths are building houses.

Christmas programs by the PAX men provided a Christian atmosphere at every place distributions were made. Designed especially to appeal to children, presentations featured dramatization of the Christmas story and carols sung by unit choruses and quartets. Since most of the immigrants had not yet become members of a church and would probably not have attended any other Christmas observance, programs of this type were a vital witness.

Nearby large concentrations of refugees were focal points for Wedel and Backnang distributions while Enkenbach efforts generally served widely-spread locations.

While dispensing more than 500 parcels to some of the 3,000 children (the entire settlement has 9,000 persons) of the immense "Ventdorp" camp near Hamburg, Wedel PAX men were so well received that plans are now underway to give an Easter program there. The government welfare office at Wedel assisted the unit in reaching an additional 200 children in the area.

The "Seminary" building where 1,000 people share crowded quarters was the center of bundle disbursement by Backnang personnel as nearly 600 children in the large former school received packages. PAX men also reached occupants of smaller barrack-type structures in other parts of the city.

Enkenbach men served approximately 700 immigrant children at scattered locations in the Kaiserslautern and Worms districts. At this unit the boys gave special remembrances, sent directly from their families and friends in the U. S., to resettled Mennonites living at the project site.

Handing a bundle to each child individually helped to make distributions a personal and meaningful experience for recipients. Given with each parcel, a pocket-size New Testament and seasonal Christian message in small attractive folder further emphasized the spirit of the occasion.

In the interest of more effective distributions, PAX men previously investigated the need for bundles in refugee camps near the units. Several weeks before Christmas, men visited families with whom they had contact and re-checked those who received packages last year. Welfare agencies cooperated by supplying names of persons in need.

PAX men in Germany are interested in the Christmas bundle distributions because it eases an immediate physical need and opens the door for a continuing contact with the forgotten refugee. Revisitation of these families every few months will give an unbroken witness and facilitate further assistance.

Our Mission Work in Moencopi

Most of our readers hear more about Oraibi, Arizona, mainly because our Hopi Indian school is there. But Moencopi, some 60 miles from Oraibi, near Tuba City, is another of our mission stations in Hopiland (the other stations being Oraibi and the combined stations of Hotevilla and Bacabi).

This picture shows the combined buildings at our mission station, Moencopi, to the right is the church and to the left is the dwelling house. Just at present (December, 1954) Brother and Sister Alvin Voth are repairing the buildings there. The buildings are some 50 years old and need repairs.

A report about the work at Moencopi from the Voths says: "We have now 67 names on the list in Mrs. Voth's class alone! Almost a hundred children are asking for parts in the Christmas program. We are thankful for the Tuba City teachers who help here." Let us thank God for the opportunity to bring the good news of salvation to our Hopi neighbors and friends.

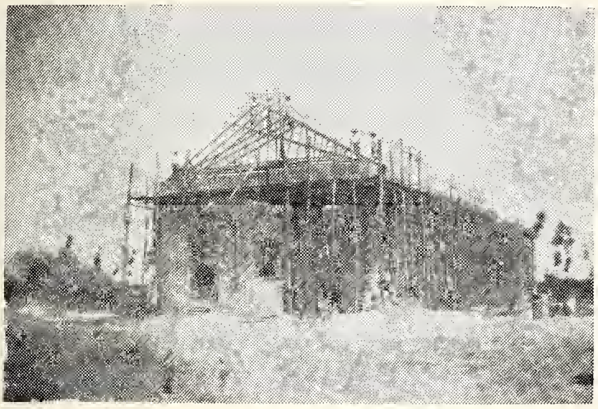
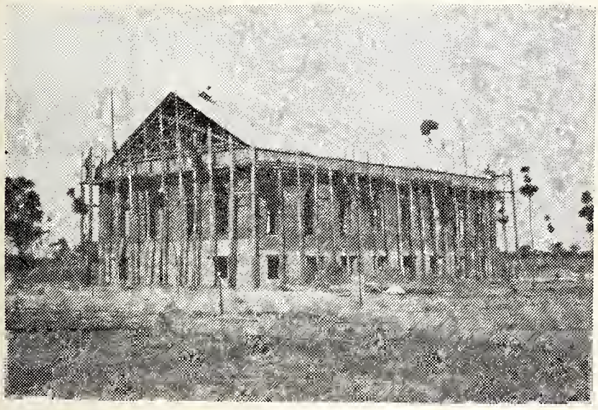
Building a Church: Halbstadt, Neuland Colony, Paraguay





Here are two pictures giving us a little idea about church building on the other side of the equator. This is the church in whose constituency are over 200 widows (or perhaps many so-called "grass widows" whose husbands are probably living somewhere in concentration camps and slavery in Siberia). In this church constituency there are comparatively few men. Yet those few men have put up this church thus far, doing the mason work and the roof. Because of termites they build of brick which they made themselves.

Now this church needs our help to finish it. Glass for windows is very costly in Paraguay. Also finishing work will cost a good bit. So many in our land have built and are building new churches. Can we help our brethren in South America a bit?

Copy for the Handbook of Information for 1955 is now being compiled. This book should and can be made one of the most useful items in our Conference and church work. In order to make this book serve your purpose best it will need your suggestions. Let us know now what you expect of this Handbook of Information for 1955.

A Dilemma Solved

Malcolm Wenger

The missionary looked at the peeling paint on the mission parsonage and thought, "I really should take time to paint this building before cold weather comes, and then too there is that roof that was damaged by the hail last summer. That really should be repaired."

"On the other hand I ought to be visiting those families that haven't been seen for so long, and there is that boy who was in trouble last Saturday, and then there are the primer materials that should be prepared and the article I was to write, and . . . ."

"Of course I could ask for more budget money from the Board of Missions so that I could hire a painter to do the work. But that might cut down the work the Board can support elsewhere . . . . It is hard to know what to do . . . ."

This dilemma is often faced by the missionary. There always seems to be more to do than he can get done. A frequent prayer is, "Lord help me to use my time today for what ought to be done, and not to do what should be left undone."

Unexpected help in this dilemma for the missionaries to the Cheyennes in Montana was furnished recently by a group from the Menno Mennonite Church, Ritzville, Washington, who spent an eight day "vacation" painting and shingling at Busby and Lame Deer. The group included Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Janzen of Ritzville, Mr. and Mrs. Cliff Taylor of Lind, and Mr. Abe Krause of Mountain Lake, Minnesota, who had been working in the wheat harvest in the vicinity of Ritzville.

The group did work which would have cost about $440.00 at regular wages. In addition a substantial amount of paint and supplies was furnished by the Menno Sunday school which sponsored the project.

Those who came not only worked but also saw something of the country and the people and got a glimpse of the work of the church among the Cheyennes. May others too experience the blessings of a "vacation" spent for Christ.

THE BEGINNING

of mission activities among the Arapahos. A short time later Haury made his seventh trip to Indian Territory. This time he also took his bride of six months, Susie L. Hirschler, and a wagon load of furniture and belongings.

This is a brief review of our General Conference seeking its first mission field. During those seven years there was adventure and discouragement. Seemingly open doors closed again. There were obstacles and heartaches.

Now in 1955, 75 years later, we praise the Lord for His leading and His many blessings. Sunday, April 24, 1955, has been designated as the 75th Anniversary Day. Hitherto hath the Lord helped us in 75 years of Conference mission work and 75 years of mission work among the American Indians in Oklahoma.

1-W Portrait

In order to give you as complete a picture as possible of what we are doing in our alternative service work, we are going to try to create a composite, generalized characterization of the average conscientious objector. So then, let me also introduce to you the average consientious objector. Now, the average 1-W man is probably from a farm in central Kansas. He has probably had about one year of college. If he is not married, chances are that he has a girl friend back home. The average 1-W man has a German-sounding name. He is probably named Schrag: Joe Schrag.

Let me say at this point that you will not find this average 1-W man anywhere in the unit. His characteristics are borrowed from all the men in the Topeka unit, and each differs considerably from the average man.

Joe Schrag is an early riser. He is up at 6:30 in the morning and he probably begins his day with devotions.

He looks on his desk and sees there the book his mother had given him a couple of Christmas's ago. This book is a Phillips' translation of the New Testament epistles, and so he thinks, "I'll just read a little from it this morning." He sits up to his desk and takes the book and opens it to the first and second chapters of the Letter to Philippi. He does this because the Apostle Paul always seems to inspire him more than any of the other New Testament writers. It seems to him that the Apostle Paul understands youth just a little better, so he starts reading at the end of the first chapter and goes on into the second.

As Joe was reading this, certain sentences seemed to stand out, and since he still had time to get his breakfast and catch the bus he allowed himself to go back and read and think about them again.

The very first sentence was one that Joe couldn't help but notice. "But whatever happens, make sure that your everyday life is worthy of the gospel of Christ." This made him think of the associations he made every day. How is he benefiting his environment?

Another one he had to think about because of some experiences he had had, was this one: "You are given, in this battle, the privilege not merely of believing in Christ but also of suffering for His sake." This made him think of a few of the patients who had called him a "yellow C. O." several days ago and the fellow employee who didn't like him very well because of his stand. He had not thought of suffering so much as a privilege before but here he thought he saw something positive in suffering — something that one really does not need to be "down in the mouth" about.

". . . But in humility think more of each other than you do of yourselves. None of you should think only of his own affairs, but should learn to see things from other people's point of view." In this connection Joe had to think of the little "squabble" he had with the head nurse the other day. Did he really try to understand what she was explaining, or was he just too set in his ways? He had to think of his fellow 1-Ws, too, and how he could profit more from trying to see things a little better from their "point of view."

" . . . and the death He died was the death of a common criminal." Joe thinks, "Christ did all this for me!"

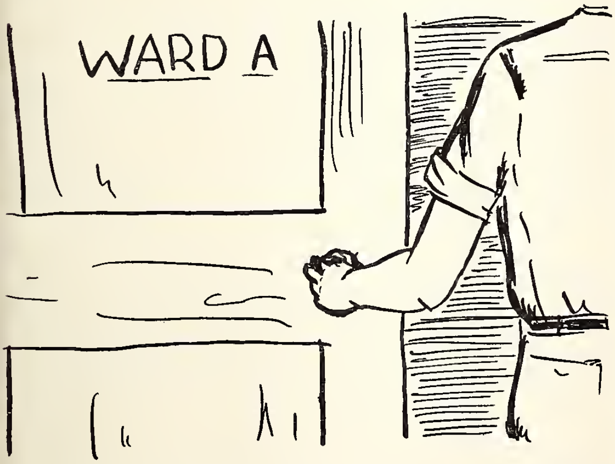
Joe wonders, "Well, how can any person ever live like this?" Then he happens to notice further in what he had just read: "For it is God who is at work within you, giving you the will and power to achieve His purpose. Do all you have to do without grumbling or arguing, so that you may be God's children, blameless, sincere, and wholesome, living in a warped and diseased world, and shining there like lights in a dark place. For you hold in your hands the very word of life." Joe finds here the secret and the challenge to make his life effective today.

He feels the need now to tell God about his problems and so before he gets up from his desk he bows his head in prayer.

Joe Schrag on the Job

Immediately after his devotions our friend Joe runs out to the street corner to catch the 6:50 bus which takes him to the Topeka State Hospital where he is to report to work at 7:00 o'clock. He first receives a report from the night shift concerning the activities which have taken place during his absence. Joe must also count the sharp instruments which inpossibility that some of the patients may have run away or as Joe says, "They may have eloped." Joe must also count the sharp intsruments which include anything a patient might use to harm himself or anyone else. These objects are kept locked and are used only under Joe's supervision.

The night shift has already gotten the patients up so Joe proceeds to hand out the locked safety razors and helps get the fellows ready for breakfast. Depending upon which floor on which Joe is working, he serves breakfast either in the ward, dining hall, or cafeteria style. After breakfast Joe gives medications and shots after which he starts the patients on the day's activities. This includes such things as gardening, arts and crafts, cleaning the ward, etc.



Following lunch are more activities such as ball games or group hiking. At 3:00 o'clock Joe's day is over and he turns his keys over to the evening shift. Occasionally if Joe is on the evening shift, he supervises afternoon activities until supper, the supper hour itself, and all evening activities.

Now let us say that Joe works at the Menninger Clinic. Here he also reports to work at 7:00 o'clock, receives report from the previous shift, counts sharps and then serves breakfast on individual trays except to those who are able to go to the dining hall. Joe is assigned to three or four patients for the day to whom he pays particular attention. He spends much of his time playing cards, checkers, chess, and ping-pong. He frequently helps in administering electro-shock treatments. Joe tries to help each patient to get along and if possible to contribute to the group. On the evening shift Joe may take a small group to the canteen area which besides a canteen includes a recreation room, a small library, and a television room. Most of the patients stay on the floor and Joe is usually there playing games or helping patients with arts and crafts projects. Before Joe goes home he charts the general activities of the day and anything unusual concerning the patients to whom he was assigned.

Now just a few words on Joe if he works at the State Board of Health Laboratory. If he is qualified he may be given work of a technical nature such as food or drug testing. If he has had no training or experience in diagnostic procedures he may be assigned as an assistant in preparing materials for testing.

This then, includes most of the work in which Joe is involved while on the job.

Joe Schrag off the Job

With the change of environment that came with his move to Topeka, Joe found this one thing, at least, outstanding: that he had, at his disposal more time to use in any way he desired than he could ever remember having. He reflected that only 40 hours out of the 168 each week or about 24 per cent of his time was actually being devoted to on-the-job activity. Even with the time needed for rest, personal care, religious activity, he found to his happy surprise that working in an industrial society permitted him extra time to use in any way he desired.

He found, furthermore, some problems arising in the planning of how best to use these hours. For one thing his working shift changed from time to time with the result that off hours were not the same each week. Then too, he suddenly realized, that for the first time in his life, he would have to make basic choices about activities that he had never really made for himself before. True, the unit offered a limited program of activities, but these were not expected to occupy all of Joe's spare time.

Let us watch Joe for a week and observe what he actually does with his off-the-job time.

It is Monday morning. Joe, in the process of waking up, glances out the window. "It's a beautiful day," he thinks, "and it's my day off this week." Mentally planning his day as he dons working clothes he comes to job No. 1, washing clothes. This is just one of the advantages of bachelorhood. So off to the unit house or Polk as he calls it, he goes where for the sum of 25 cents he has access to a washing machine. He trys to convince himself that his time is much too valuable to be used doing such things but one can't live like a king on $130 a month, he tells himself. If it is summer he may then go swimming at the park, play a set of tennis or polish the car. In the evening he may play softball, as the unit team attempts to hold their place in the church league.

It is Tuesday now, and Joe, somewhat longing for good old college days goes to night school. Or, perhaps, this is the evening he writes letters, one to Mom and Dad and one, you guessed it, to Susie back at college. But there are frequent interruptions: time out for a coke and a bull session.

During supper on Wednesday evening at his favorite restaurant he recalls that tonight is Bible study at Polk House. Since Joe has some matters that he wants to discuss with the unit leader, he goes early. Besides he wants to brouse through the reading material in the magazine corner.

Getting back from work on Thursday, he notes that tonight he had a meeting at Polk House. He may be on the Fellowship Council, the Social Committee, Recreation Committee, Capitol Highlight staff, or on some special committee. Before the evening is over he has played a game of ping pong, and developed a roll of film in the photography darkroom.

By Friday Joe has decided that his strictly male existence is not for him. He wants to take a girl to the football game but he doesn't know any. They conclude that Topeka would be a good place for a Girls' Voluntary Service Unit.

Saturday: Joe may be one of those who wants to implement his income by some part-time work. Perhaps he works at a hospital, garage, or is a salesman. Or perhaps he attends a concert, game, goes shopping or just relaxes. Or, this may be the evening for a unit social, one of the few times when Joe has a chance to see most of the unit members.

On Sunday morning Joe sleeps an extra hour or so. But Sunday school begins at 10:00 so finally he rouses himself and begins preparations for worship. Joe and his fellow 1-Ws worship in a church that was used by another denomination the day before, Seventh Day Adventists. Sunday school is taught by different ones of the unit members each week. The worship service is conducted by Robert Vogt, the unit pastor.

The remainder of the day is used for reading, listening to music, or perhaps visiting some of the fellows. There is also an evening worship service.

So a week of Joe's life finishes, a full week, and, for Joe, a rather good one.

Joe in Retrospect

So far we have taken Joe Schrag through one work day and through one week of his off-duty hours. Perhaps I could take him to the point where he has gotten that long-awaited letter from the selective service office saying that he is released. And he looks back on the two-years' experience with ambivalent feelings. He is happy to go home and sorry to leave his friends and the job he has grown accustomed to in Topeka. Some of the people Joe has met and known in alterative service are sorry to see him leave. His landlord, his employers, and his supervisors have been caused to take notice of him, and usually they have expressed approval of what he is doing.

And if the community has expressed approval of Joe's work, Joe on the other hand has become a real part of the community. First of all, Joe has had a job. This is not as obvious as it might seem. The conscientious objector is not exempt from any of the ordinary obligations of any citizen. He is required to take upon himself a real part of the work of the community. Most of the men in Topeka are working in psychiatric hospitals, and since these hospitals are the most important single occupational activity in Topeka, it can readily be seen that the men are contributing to the community in this way.

And furthermore, Joe and his fellow conscientious objectors have become a part of the community by living in it. This is quite different from the organization under CPS during the Second World War. Generally, the CPS men lived in camps isolated from any communities. Now, however, almost all the men are living in apartments, trailer houses, or rooming houses all over the city. Furthermore, many of the men are married and therefore have established even more permanent homes. So the unit is not an isolated cluster of people, but rather it is a group geographically scattered throughout the city and unified by a common background and a common purpose.

Thus Joe, the average conscientious objector, found himself assimilated into a new community that was quit different from his home on the farm in central Kansas. There are many different ways of responding to this new environment. But Joe Schrag, the average conscientious objector, liked the new experience. The new life in the city taught him a lot. It gave him a chance to meet new people and to see new places. It gave him an opportunity to develop intellectually and grow religiously. But now that it is over, he is willing to go back home.

Joe asks himself whether this has been a good experience. Selective Service asks whether this work has followed the stipulation of being in the "national safety, health, and interest." The employers and the country as a whole has been good. By and large, Joe is able to answer "yes" to all these questions.

Our Schools

BETHEL COLLEGE

Some 50 persons from Hutchinson, Wichita, Lindsborg, Salina, Sterling, Minneapolis, and other areas attended a meeting on the Bethel campus Sunday afternoon called to discuss the possibilities of a Kansas chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union.

The group was addressed by the Rev. Rudy Gilbert of Denver, Colo. He stressed the need for an adherance to the bill of rights and the American ideal of freedom, particularly in the classroom.

Plans were made for a future meeting in Wichita. It was agreed that there is a definite need for an organization of a Civil Liberties Union in this area to help define and maintain civil liberties.

Kay Ewert, freshman student from Abilene took first in women's radio speaking at the junior division forensic tournament held at Emporia State Teachers College Friday and Saturday, January 14-15. Carol Gering, freshman from Mountain Lake, Minn., was awarded a certificate of excellence in oral interpretation. Together they participated in the debate tournament in which they were awarded a certificate of excellence.

Dr. J. W. Fretz accompanied Elmer Ediger and W. F. Unruh to the Friedensfeld Mennonite Church, Turpin, Okla., where he spoke on "Great Mennonite Affirmations." On Tuesday, Jan. 18 he spoke at the dinner of the Central Conference at Washington, Ill., and on Wednesday he spoke at an inter-church men's dinner in Burrton.

Dr. Erland Waltner spoke in the Pretty Prairie Mennonite Church, Jan. 16 on values in the Mennonite heritage.

Foreign students continue to meet speaking engagements. On Jan. 12 Harmina Meerdink and Sara Li spoke to the Women's Association of the Congregational Church of Newton while Armenia Urey shared a luncheon program at the First Presbyterian Church. On Jan. 18 the foreign students presented a program to the ladies mission society of the Bethel College Church.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Dr. J. E. Hartzler of Goshen, Indiana, is scheduled to speak at the college lecture series program Tuesday evening, February 8. Topic of his lecture will be, "Human Nature—26,000 Miles."

A former public school teacher, college and seminary professor and president, and lecturer, Dr. Hartzler has recently returned from a round-the-world tour.

Eleanor Weaver has resigned as secretary to the president to accept a secretarial position with the Mennonite Central Committee at the Prairie View Hospital, Newton, Kansas. She will begin her work in Kansas on February 1. For the past five years Miss Weaver has been a member of the college staff.

Two Bluffton College seniors, Don Hostetler and Walter Shelly, were recently accepted into medical schools for the school year 1955-1956. Don, from Sugar Creek, Ohio, was accepted by both Western Reserve in Cleveland and Jefferson in Philadelphia. Walter, from Quakertown, Pa., was accepted by Jefferson Medical School in Philadelphia.

Mrs. Gilbert Suter, of Pandora, Ohio, is scheduled to teach the course on "The Family" at Bluffton the second semester. Mrs. Suter will be teaching this course, usually taught by Dr. I. W. Bauman, to enable him to teach "Political Theory."

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Professor Don. E. Smucker spoke at the chapel services on January 11. In his talk Bro. Smucker told about his experiences of 14 months' work in the evangelization program of the Presbyterian churches of Chicago.

Recently, William Gering, a senior at the Seminary, was the chapel speaker. He gave a comparison of theological training in Germany and the United States. The talk was based on Bill's experience as a student at Mainz University during the school year of 1952-1953.

The missionary film "The Call of the Cheyenne," recently produced by William Zehr under the sponsorship of the Mission Board of the Conference, was shown at the Mission Center on Saturday evening, January 15. Sunday afternoon it was shown at the Woodlawn Mennonite Church, with a third showing at the First Mennonite Church on the evening of January 16.

Dr. S. F. Pannabecker, elder of the congregation, gave the morning message at the Woodlawn Mennonite Church January 16.

The Seminary Women's Fellowship had its monthly meeting on the evening of January 20. The January project was children's clothing for MCC.

MCC News Notes

INFORMATION REGARDING STATUS OF DRAFT AND MILITARY TRAINING

Information from congressional sources at the time of this reporting indicates the Eisenhower administration proposals for the extension of the draft and the establishment of a reserve program with a modified version of universal military training will be introduced separately in Congress.

President Eisenhower has proposed to Congress a four-year extension of the regular draft, a two-year extension of the doctors' draft, an active reserve program, active basic training for National Guardsmen and six months' basic training for teen-agers who would avoid the draft and accept 9½ years in the reserves.

It is thought that the reason for the separate introduction of these proposals is to assure the extension of the regular draft. To include the reserve and universal military training features in the same bill could jeopardize this extension.

The introduction of separate measures makes it much more difficult to defeat all peace-time conscription. This situation also means that efforts to present the position of the peace churches must be made over a longer period of time. All of these developments are being closely observed by the MCC Peace Section with the intention of presenting testimony at the appropriate time.

Also available from congressional sources is word that the Eisenhower administration proposals will likely be introduced as bills in Congress very shortly. This information also indicates that these proposals contain recommendations that provisions for conscientious objectors remain unchanged. There are, of course, efforts to change some of these provisions.

—Butterfield Church, Butterfield, Minn.: "Immanuel — God With Us" was the theme of our Sunday school Christmas program held on Christmas Eve. Participants performed through dialogue, recitation, and song, all of which were centered around the theme. On Christmas morning a stimulating nativity message was brought by Vernon Duerksen, son of our pastor. The next day a brief dedication service was held for the new officers of five of our church departments. Our pastor, Edward Duerksen, read 2 Thess. 5, a chapter which enumerates Christian duties. On New Year's Eve, a watch night service was presented during which time suggestions for the new year were given, and all present were rededicated. We were all inspired by those of our returning students, servicemen, and other visitors, who participated in song, testimony, and devotion during our Christmas and New Year's services. On Sunday morning, Jan. 2, our pastor and audience read in unison our motto for the coming year: "Rejoicing in God," Ps. 86:4, 5. Film Review

More for Peace (16 mm., sound, 45 minutes) Rental $9.00. Prepared for the Presbyterian U.S.A., Evangelical and Reformed, and Congregational Christian churches. Available from Religious Film Library such as 22 West Monroe St., Chicago 3, Illinois, and other local dealers.

This film can be highly recommended to our churches for a family church night for all ages. The title suggests a peace theme. It is this in a very general and local sense. Its main thrust is in the direction of helping Christians in the local community to realize how they can demonstrate Christian love and concern for immigrants against whom some may be prejudiced.

The story is that of a soldier returning from Korea. On the way to his home he becomes acquainted with a German D. P. family who happened to be coming to his home community. Although he is enthusiastic at first he loses the prospect of a good job because of this refugee. The veteran becomes confused, embittered, and hardened. Eventually, however, through the help of a personal witness of a fellow church member he once again accepts a Christian attitude, then helps the community to mobilize itself positively and to overcome some of the narrow attitudes that have existed. The picture ends with a high note of worship when a cross made out of the ruins of Hiroshima is dedicated with a personal representative from Hiroshima in the church service.

The film clearly weighted against war although not specifically pacifistic.

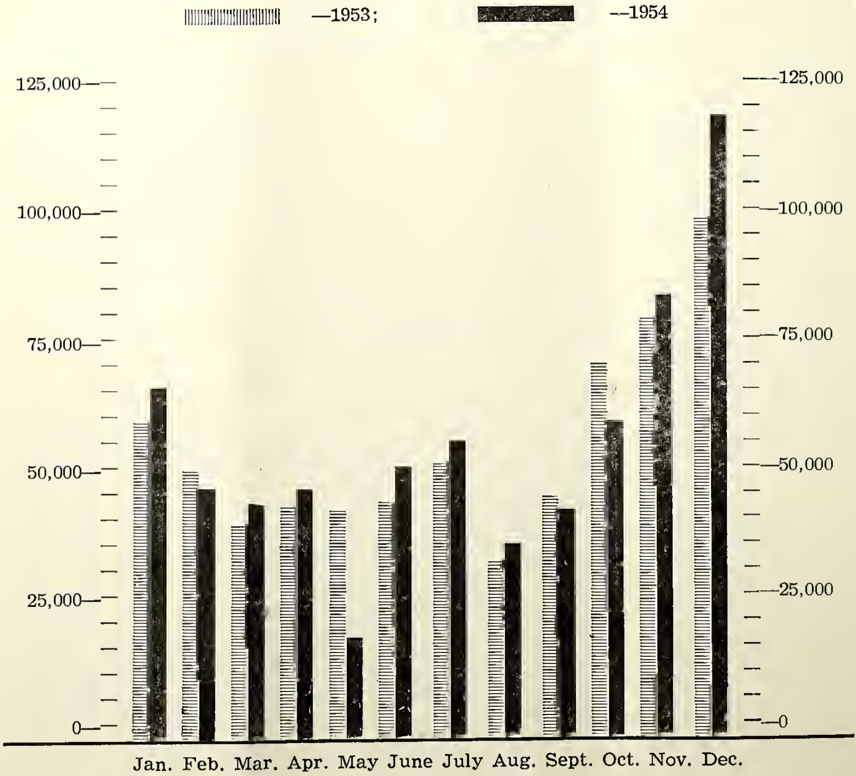
MONTHLY BUDGET RECEIPTS

(Four Boards)



The accompanying chart graphically illustrates the trend in monthly receipts for the work of the four boards of the General Conference. The light lines represent amounts received monthly during 1953; the dark lines represent amounts received in 1954.

It is interesting to note that during 1954 (the dark lines) total receipts in May dropped to an all-time low—$20,136; and in December they reached an all-time high —$122,719.

Regardless of what we believe about the advantages of giving an equal amount each month throughout the year, it seems that giving to church and charity everywhere pretty well follows the average business trend during any year.

A Challenge

We are living today in a world where it seems "the crowded ways of life" are becoming ever more crowded. All about us we see people in need of mental, physical, and spiritual help. How thankful we are that we have found in Christ the answer to our needs. He is also the answer to the needs of those about us. Let us hear again the challenge that comes to all who follow Christ:

"I heard the voice of the Lord saying, Whom shall I send and who will go for us?" (Isaiah 6:8).

"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into the harvest" (Matthew 9:37, 38).

"But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves" (James 1:22).

"Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Though Not Seen, Yet Known

With when, and where, and why and how
We oft before our Maker bow,
As we stand thrilled beneath the Hand
That made the universe so grand,
Convinced its secret, boundless span
Eludes the feeble mind of man;
Yet as we gaze in awe and fear,
We feel His Presence drawing near;
Then in the kindness of His Grace,
We feel the calm of His Embrace.

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

1. To work for a Conference unified in Christ.
2. To teach the gospel of Christ effectively.
3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

RACE RELATIONS

It is gratifying to note improvements in race relations. One of the outstanding events of 1954 was the Supreme Court decision to abolish race segregation in the schools. It may take some time to work this out successfully in certain areas, but in general the plan is bringing good results.

But proper race relations cannot be brought about by legislation only. It must go much deeper than that. It is a spiritual matter. It comes as a result of individuals seeing themselves as humble children of God, no better because of their race, than any one else. To God all children are equally important. If He set them in different races, that does not mean that one race is preferred above another.

A feeling of race superiority comes from pride and selfishness. The proud person is also narrow and conceited. He tries to feel superior and endeavors to force his superiority on others. This causes bitterness and ill will.

But nations are still slow to see this truth. A feeling of national superiority also comes from pride, and wars are fought as a result of this attempted superiority among nations. At this time of tense feeling, our nation should humble itself before God and seek forgiveness for its prejudice and pride.

Perhaps during this period of giving special thought to race relations we may well search our hearts to see if we really are willing to hold all God's children as brothers together in Christ.

WAR ALARMS

At this writing the Congress of the United States is giving consideration to the President's request for the privilege to call out the military power, if he deems it necessary, to defend the island of Formosa against Chinese attackers. It seems to be a critical time in which a small spark could set off an explosion that could throw us into a third world war.

Does it seem futile to call upon our readers to engage earnestly in prayer in these days of crisis? To some it may, but to others who have had high dealings with God in prayer, they sense something of its great power and possibility. Could bombarding our Capitol and the nations with sincere prayers be more effective than bombing enemy cities? If we so believe we should send forth millions of prayers to God, as the President suggested in an address this past summer.

The military stands in readiness to use its power when it thinks the time is ripe to strike. Should the churches lag behind in unleashing the power of prayer in such a time as this? The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man AVAILETH MUCH.

IS LIFE WORTH LIVING?

Some answer, "No," and bring their lives to an end by snuffing it out. Many cannot feel that it is really worth living, but drag on in misery and hopelessness. Others give the matter little thought until they are suddenly faced up with some stark tragedy.

Does it not depend on what kind of life we live? If it is shallow, selfish living we find little satisfaction or purpose in it. If it seems all drudgery we are living only on the surface and missing the best part.

There can be new life in Christ. He came to bring us that new life in the Spirit. He came that we might have LIFE and that we might have it MORE ABUNDANTLY. What a tragedy to miss this abundant living He holds before us.

New life comes by new birth. The world of a child before and after birth is vastly different. So in the spiritual, the new life in Christ is very different from the old life of sin. No wonder those not living this new life cannot understand it when observed in others. It must be experienced to be appreciated, not just talked about.

Life can be noble and worthy and meaningful—with Christ. Alone, it is but a feeble cry in the dark. But it can be lived in the true light. Is it not strange that man should choose to live in darkness when he might walk in the light?

GROWTH TO KEEP ALIVE

Enlarged plans, new undertakings, increased budgets, are, or should be, the experience of each church as well as of our church-wide conference. To stand still, or to go backwards, is to suffer defeat. New occasions teach new duties; new circumstances mean new responsibilities. We should become more mission conscious, more relief minded, more stewardship sensitive. Opening opportunities in Japan, in Formosa, in Chicago, challenge us as witnesses. New obligations to the increasing number of aged people, to our growing number of children, and to the multiplied complexities of living, all demand new concepts of God's will and plan for us.

To grow spiritually, both as individuals and as churches, we need to press forward into new experiences and enlarged visions and opportunities. This year of 1955 should find us farther along in the work of the kingdom than we were in 1954. We need to lengthen the cords and strengthen the stakes.

An Introduction to the Lord's Prayer

FRANK R. MITCHELL*

The Lord's Prayer is found only twice in the Gospels. Matthew has placed it in the Sermon on the Mount, (6:9-13). Luke gives us a few precious details in connection with his briefer account of the prayer, (11:1-4). There are no direct references anywhere else in the New Testament. At first, this seems remarkable. Indirect references to the prayer in James and Paul and the other Gospels indicate that it was perhaps the most frequently used group of the Lord's words. As an important summary of Jesus' teaching, one might have looked for other direct references.

And yet, a second thought makes it surprising that we have been given even these two accounts. The prayer was so familiar that it was no news. The words were deeply reverenced as from the Lord. Every Christian knew the prayer and it was used in every Christian gathering. No one ever thought of the danger of its being lost or forgotten. There was so much to learn of the new doctrine and its application to life that it became necessary to move on. The author of the Book of Hebrews (6:1-5) speaks of "leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ." The Spirit of God has indeed been gracious in giving these two direct accounts, for our own sakes.

The prayer as it has come down to us through the Gospel of Matthew (with the exception of its ending) is almost identical with our own common use of it:

"Our Father who art in heaven,
Hallowed be thy name.
Thy kingdom come,
Thy will be done,
On earth as it is in heaven.
Give us this day our daily bread;
And forgive us our debts,
As we have also forgiven our debtors;
And lead us not into temptation,
But deliver us from evil." (RSV)

The prayer as it is found in the Gospel of Luke is briefer:

> "Father, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Give us each day our daily bread; and forgive us our sins, for we ourselves forgive everyone who is indebted to us; and lead us not into temptation." (RSV)

One discovery which we make immediately is to find that the ending of the prayer which is so familiar to us, is not there. The words "For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen" are not a part of the earliest manuscripts. We shall consider this beautiful and fitting ending of the prayer, later in our study.

It will be helpful for us to consider the differences between the two accounts. First, they seem to differ as to the time when Jesus gave the prayer. But neither really seeks to give information as to when the prayer was given. Matthew is thinking topically and seems to have placed the words in the Sermon on the Mount for emphasis sake, recognizing their great importance. As Luke fits the prayer into his Gospel, he adds some interesting details about an unknown disciple, who, after hearing Jesus pray, asked that he and his companions be taught to pray "as John taught his disciples." Luke, as a careful historian, has given these extra details as he found them in his records. But since both were dependent on records, it is questionable if either had reliable data as to when the prayer was given by Jesus.

Another difference is noticeable. Luke has made certain changes. One of these is quite a revealing variation. He substitutes one word for another. He exchanges the Aramaic word for "debts" for the Greek word for "sins." In this we see him taking into account the needs of the people for whom he wrote. Luke was a Gentile and a master of the Greek language. He presents his Gospel to Gentiles as well as to Jews. The word "debt" would have connotations for Gentiles which could be misleading. He chooses the Greek word for "sins" to take its place. Most interesting of all he leaves the original word "indebted" to stand! Thus we see him actually interpreting the prayer for the sake of clarity to the Gentile converts.

This is also enough to help us understand some of the omissions in his account of the prayer. Does Luke think of "Thy will be done" and "deliver us from evil" as Jewish redundancies not especially helpful to Gentile converts? At any rate he evidently does not intend that his account, as it is given word for word, should be a serious competitor to the prayer which is so well known and on the lips of the earliest Christian believers. He would say as do we that these petitions, which in this case he leaves out, are essential to the prayer.

A brief summary then of the differences from Matthew in Luke are:

1. Omissions
   "Our" and "which art in heaven";
   "Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven";
   "But deliver us from evil."
2. Changes
   The Greek word for "sins" for the Aramaic word for "debts."
   From the more distinctive "Give us this day" to the more open "give us each day our daily bread."
   A difference of tense from "we have forgiven" to the present "we forgive."

Luke's account of the prayer is very precious to us all. We would be much the poorer if we had no knowledge of the spiritually hungry, unknown disciple who yearned to know how to pray. Even his interpretation of a word of the prayer warms our

What's Happened to the German Refugee?

DWIGHT WIEBE*

1945—Germany in Ashes

The recovery of Germany is considered the miracle of the 20th century. Less than 10 years ago the German people were forced to accept unconditional surrender. Every major city was 50 to 80 per cent destroyed before the end of the war brought to a close this mass destruction. Night raids by Allied bombers often demolished an entire city in one night. History has recorded the terrible price of war which time and politics are now trying to erase. Statistics fail to evaluate the cost of war. Already we have forgotten that the bombing of Dresden on February 13, 1945, cost the lives of 250,000 men, women, and children. We have failed to realize that more than 3,000,000 German soldiers were killed during the war. This is approximately one out of three men between the ages of 18 and 30 years old. Among the German survivors of the war were 1,300,000 orphans, 1,000,000 widows and widowers, and 1,500,000 disabled persons. This was the defeat of Germany in 1945.

1954—Germany Revived

Today, nine years after V-E day, Germany boasts of factories which are producing one and one-half times as much as before the war in 1936, business districts with skyscrapers twice as tall as those which were bombed out, universities which turn away ten times as many students as they can accomodate. Through its unification program Germany has reunited its people into a nation which is once again being accepted as a major power in the field of economics and international affairs. No other nation in the world has fallen as low and climbed as high within a period of 10 years time.

In this era of miracle recovery the German nation has placed its greatest emphasis upon prosperity and progress. Free from the tremendous burden of financing a war machine, the German people have focused their attention upon the possibility of restoring their former international prestige and respect. The German people's willingness to work, their ingenuity and their deep-seated desire to recover that which was lost through the war has blended itself into the spirit of the new Germany.

The Forgotten Refugee

Into this world of grinding cogs of industry and political confusion steps the forgotten, poverty-stricken refugee. Before Germany was divided in August, 1945, 4,500,000 refugees abandoned their homes to flee in advance of the retreating Nazi armies to seek refuge in Germany. Since that time an additional 9,500,000 have left everything behind them in the hope of finding refuge in the West Zone of Germany. Today more than 9,000,000 German refugees are trying to find new homes in Western Germany. The Western Zone now has a population of 49,843,000. This means that an area smaller in size than the state of California must find work, food and homes for the same number of people as are now living in the states of Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, North Dakota, Colorado, and Wyoming. During the war more than 5,000,000 dwellings were either totally destroyed or damaged to the extent that they were uninhabitable. On top of this great shortage of housing caused by destruction through the war came the demand for additional housing for 10,200,000 refugees who sought refuge in West Germany. Housing for refugees has created a need for an additional 2,500,000 dwellings. A recent report from the German government states that since June, 1952, nearly 20,000 persons each month have sought refuge in Western Germany. This means that each month Germany must provide additional shelter for approximately 5,000 new families.

Recovery Without Homes

In light of this staggering need for 8,000,000 dwellings since the end of the war, it is not too surprising to learn that a vacuum has occurred in the building phase of the recovery program. Today there are three major barriers to adequate housing for refugees. The first barrier is the priority of materials used in the economic and industrial recovery of the nation. Secondly, the priority of residents of Germany to secure material to rebuild the partially destroyed houses which are now overcrowded. Thirdly, the refugee's lack of funds necessary to make a down payment on a government-financed house.

Approximately 2,000,000 new homes have been built in Germany since the war. During the past six months new dwellings have become available for occupation at the rate of one every minute. However, 1,200,000 more dwellings must be built to accommodate 4,800,000 homeless refugees.

Mennonites Without Homes

There are approximately 12,000 Mennonite refugees in Western Germany today. Of this number several thousand have been able to secure satisfactory permanent dwelling quarters. One hundred forty families have received permanent dwellings through the direct assistance of the PAX program. All of these families securing PAX help were unable to pay the down payment on a government-financed house. In most instances the houses have been occupied by widows with young children or people too old to be able to get work. Through the work of the PAX men the refugees are able to reduce the costs of building a new house by 10 per cent. This 10 per cent saving is equivalent to the down payment on their house.

Today approximately 6,000 Mennonite refugees are still in need of satisfactory living quarters because they are now living in inadequate crowded temporary dwellings.

Highlights of Missionary Observations V

ANDREW R. SHELLY

It is Sunday morning! We are flying at 16,500 feet. We saw the sunrise above the clouds. We finished the first major part of our trip—East Asia. We have been flying all night and soon will arrive in Beirut, Lebanon. We left India last evening after exactly five weeks of jam-packed inspiration, overflowing joy and precious fellowship.

We are experiencing the limitation of expression in words. The keys of this typewriter are not capable of forming the combinations to describe how we feel. We have many pictures which we hope will add to verbal descriptions of the emotions of our souls.

Our major stops so far have been Japan, Formosa, and India. We met all our missionaries in all these fields. We were able to observe the work and participate in many services. We have been asked many times "What are your impressions?" I would like to state three briefly:

Thanksgiving and Praise

Many Scripture verses went through our minds this morning. "For as the heaven is high above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that fear him," (Ps. 103:11). Also, we thought of the many thanksgiving and praise sections of the Bible. For example: "O Praise the Lord, all ye nations: praise him, all ye people," (Ps. 117:1).

Yes, praise for our experience of "oneness in Christ." The Holy Spirit inspired St. Paul to write to the Ephesians "of the household of God," and that there is "one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling," (Eph. 2:19; 3:4). How true! All along the way we have been "feeling" this oneness. Whether in thanksgiving, Christmas, communion, worship or some other kind of service we were deeply conscious of our "oneness in Christ."

Also, praise for what has been accomplished through the years. "What hath God wrought!" The Lord has honored faithful witnessing. The gospel is going forth. We have had the privilege of seeing part of this first-hand. The laborers we sent forth have been faithful. In sacrificial loyalty they have worked. As I said at one place: "The one tenth has never been told."

Further, praise for our privilege of hearing the gospel. The most sobering thought that can come to me is that somehow through the grace of God I was favored with the unspeakable privilege of hearing the gospel. I am thankful for the faithful "heralds of the gospel" who brought the message of redeeming grace to my knowledge.

Responsibility and Challenge

Responsibility because in spiritual things "to have" means "to share." The Commission is clearly given to the followers of Jesus Christ. "Ye shall be my witnesses." Inherent in the gospel is spreading the "Good News."

Responsibility because they are dependent on us. Romans 10 gives us the clear call: "How shall they hear without a preacher?" (v. 14). In the spread of the gospel the "haves" must necessarily share with the "have nots." This applies to believers everywhere —not only those in one country. The "us" refers to Christians everywhere.

Challenge because of the unfinished task. The divine goal is "every creature." In the areas we visited thus far are approximately 1/5 of the human family —about 500,000,000 souls. (In Hong Kong we were within ten miles of communist China. If we include that country the number almost doubles.) What a task awaits the Church of Christ!

Opportunity and Urgency

Opportunity because of increased channels for the spread of the gospel. That there are many problems in world-wide missions is very clear. Never have I seen as clearly what St. Paul must have meant when he wrote: "For a great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries," (1 Cor. 16:9). Yes, there are "adversaries," but the "great door and effectual" is still there.

When William Carey faced incredible difficulties he wrote: "Therefore, Forward." We need this faith and dynamic today!

Opportunity because the world is becoming more and more "religion conscious." We noticed this in

Film Review

Calling of Matthew, 16 mm. sound, black and white, 26 minutes. Association Films, rental $9.00.

This film attempts to portray what took place in Matthew's life as he responded to the call of Christ. It presents very clearly the status of a tax collector and what it meant for such a person to become a Christian. The film will hold the attention of an audience and will present the claim of Christ on the human heart in a fresh way.

In using this film a person should realize: That some of the biblical material is rearranged; that there are a number of incidents in the story which are extra-biblical, and that Jesus is portrayed in the film.

These possible limitations were not hindrances to the reviewing committee, but the committee realizes that these items might conceivably be sufficient reason for not using the film in some groups.

In many of our churches this film should prove to be quite useful and meaningful. The film is produced by Cathedral Films. This company has produced many biblical films.

every country we visited. For example a new Buddhist seminary is being built which will send forth many preachers. In one article I read, a famous person said that Buddhism is the only hope for the world. It was a plea for utter devotion to the spread of Buddhism. In visiting some Moslem places we noticed that there is a resurgence of that religion. Hinduism is re-interpreting its past and is making a new bid for the minds and souls of men.

What an opportunity to find ways to enter this "open door." "We've a story to tell to the nations." We need to meet the "soul hunger" of the multitudes with the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; for "there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved," (Acts 4:12). The blood shed on Calvary's Cross is adequate for the salvation of all who believe!

Urgency because there is no time to lose. In the business world they say strike "while the iron is hot." We must clearly discern "open doors" and move in swiftly to "possess the land." As I write these lines we are flying over Damascus. We just took two pictures. I remarked: "Right down there is where St. Paul walked." How we need his spirit of urgency. "Woe is me if I preach not." "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision."

With the Apostle Paul let us ask the question: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" (Acts 9:6). Let us respond in glad obedience as he did! Yes, let us respond as individuals and as a Conference! He has done great things through us, but much more remains to be done!

Flashes of Thought

Come Ye Apart

Walter Gering

It was unbelievable—this strange silence which suddenly closed in upon us. For hours we had been subjected to the constant roar of speeding motors; the impatient honking of horns as drivers feverisly sought to be on their way with the change of lights. It was beginning to grate upon our nerves. This was a world of noise and confusion.

Now it was all over. It seemed as though we had suddenly been transported into another world. It was dark; so dark that it was utterly impossible to see. It was as though we had gone blind in one moment. Not a word was spoken; silence in the midst of total darkness.

But it was not this which gripped our souls. It was that strange ray of light which pierced the darkness after moments of silence. Like a ray from heaven it revealed this marvelous sight. We were indeed in another world.

You see, we were on a guided tour through the famous Riverside Drive Church of New York. We were soon to come to the end of our tour. As we paused before a closed door we were given our instructions. We would be taken into darkness; there was to be no speaking during those moments. The spirit of reverence and worship was to prevail. With these instructions we entered. The door behind us closed; the confusion and clamor of the outside world suddenly was shut out. There was silence.

Then it was that we saw it. It was a breath-taking, never to be forgotten experience. A little light pierced the darkness and there He was. To be sure it was only a picture. But in that setting it seemed as though He was actually there, kneeling in holy prayer. Completely oblivious to our presence in the shadows He was crying out in agony of soul: "—nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." It was in the silence of that moment, shut out from the world behind us, that we saw Him anew.

Yes, my friend—it is ever thus. It is in moments of darkness, in the silence of a moment apart from the world that we catch new visions of the Savior. It is there that we hear the still small Voice speak to our soul. The call is still: "Come ye yourselves apart into the desert."

LORD JESUS, I COME

One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord and to inquire in His temple. For in time of trouble He shall hide me in His pavilion: in the secret of His tabernacle shall He hide me; He shall set me up upon a rock.

If Christ Had Not Come

WALDO HARDER*

"It was the first Sunday of Advent, and in preparation for the Christmas season I read a story 'If Christ Had Not Come.' Dinner was finished and as is our custom we lay down for a rest—though it seemed rest I could not, for my thoughts before lapsing into unconsciousness and the first upon awakening was always, only the same, If Christ had not come.

"It seemed I was stranded upon a Congo road so I decided to go to the local evangelist to spend the night. But when I arrived at his home there was no chapel and I found him around a fire with the village fathers making medicine to kill the man who had stolen the chief's son's goat. This medicine was to cause lightening to strike the guilty one. I raised my voice in amazement, 'But Paul, what are you—'

" 'My name is not Paul, it is Ntumba' he answered gruffly.

" 'But you can't go back to that because—' Because of what and why not? My jaw dropped and no words came, for I had no message for a man like this—no word—no hope. I reached for my Bible—but there was no Bible. There couldn't be without Christ, and Christ had not come.

"I turned slowly down the road, meditating as I walked, 'Why am I here?' A thousand times I've thrilled with joy to give a message of hope and cheer to men like these in similiar circumstances, but now I had nothing to say, nothing I could honestly tell them. I soon heard the death wail in the forest near by, and went to see what it was all about. In a little clearing I saw an open grave and beside it the corpse of a woman, beside her an infant also dead. Upon asking what had taken place I learned she had given birth to twins, one of them dead and the mother had died shortly after. By then they had placed the corpse into the grave and the dead baby with her, when to my horror I saw them gettng ready to drop the live baby into the grave. I shrieked as I rushed through the crowd, 'Don't put that child in there.'

" 'And why not,' mumbled the father coldly as the wiggling form was lowered. 'Its evil spirit killed its mother and its brother, and it may kill us too.'

" 'But . . . .' But what? But who? There was no reason to give, there was no Savior to show them, for He had not come. I wanted to jump into the grave to save the child, but I could not. There was no love to impell me thus. Strange this was—no compassion, no yearning, just passive resignation, for He had not come.

"I started homeward, only to find that the road sign, 'Protestant Mission—2 miles' with its red bougainvilla bush was gone. I knew the spot, and said, 'It must be there' and stubbornly tramped through the tall grass where there was only high grass—no church, no school, no dispensary, no one with one word of hope, and what was I doing here—no place to live, no work to do, no message, why was I here? I must go home—back to America, back to loved ones, to the home church . . . but wait! If Christ had not come then there would be no America, there would be no home, no church, no Christian friends.

" 'But Christ HAS come to Bethlehem
Let men and angels sing
He gave His life on Calvary
And death has lost its sting.'

"Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift,' 2 Cor. 9:15."

Our Ministry Enlarges

"The New Frontier of the Church: People are living longer today than in the past. Let us allow the facts of population trends to speak for themselves. In 1800 the average duration of life was thirty-five years. In 1850 it had risen to a little more than forty years. By 1900 it was up to nearly fifty years, and in 1940 it had risen to more than sixty-three years. At present a large insurance company estimates the avearge life for the American population at sixty-six years. For the Church this naturally means an increased ministry to older people both in the Church and in society in general.

". . . . Science has added years to life. The Church must assume its responsibility and accept its opportunity to add life to the years, in the name of Jesus who came to give life and to give it more abundantly and to help people grow old in grace and in favor with God and man."

—Bill Dick in United Mennonite Church Bulletin, Toronto

Who Will Remember?

Ten years ago the German refugee was looked upon as a persecuted martyr who left all in search of freedom but today he is often considered an intruder and excess baggage in Germany's industrial and economic spiral to recovery. Time has not eased the plight of the refugees. Many refugees still need our assistance. Many refugees who were at one time wealthy, secure, Mennonite farmers are today unwanted refugees.

Leading magazines and newspapers have printed descriptions about the recovery of Germany. Tourists are impressed by shop-laden store windows downtown. Only the refugee's story remains untold. Christian compassion has made the PAX program possible. Christian love has helped us to serve the spiritual as well as the physical needs of the refugees. One church in a Mennonite settlement is already begun; two others will soon be needed. If the Mennonite refugees in Germany today are to receive a new home and a new place of worship, they will have to depend upon the open hearts of those who remember the forgotten refugee.

Income Tax

The time of year has come again when the citizens of our country will have to pay income tax. The question is sometimes raised, should Christians pay this tax? A large percentage of the income tax money goes for war purposes. A Christian obeying the new commandment of Jesus to love his neighbor as himself cannot possibly be in accord with hatred, strife, and bloodshed resulting from war. What then shall we do about it? Refuse to pay and come in conflict with the laws of our country?

Jesus our Lord has given us a very clear teaching on this subject in Matthew 17:24-27. The collector of the tribute money asked Peter if Jesus paid tribute. Peter answered, "yes." Jesus preventing Peter from telling him the incident, asks Peter "of whom do the kings of the earth take custom or tribute? of their own children, or of strangers?" Peter said of strangers. Jesus answered, "then are the children free. Nothwithstanding, lest we offend them, go to the sea, cast a hook, and take the first fish thou catchest, open his mouth and take out the coin therein and give it to the tribute collector."

The Roman tribute money was used mostly for military purposes. The Roman Empire was then ruling the major part of the then known world. It required large armies to subdue and occupy these many nations. The money consumed for military purposes was a large sum. Jesus asked Peter to pay for both of them.

Some may ask, what about the question of Jesus of whom kings collect the custom and tribute, of children or strangers? The answer was of strangers. The objector to paying income tax may argue that I need not pay. I am a citizen, even one by birth, therefore a child of my country; I need not pay.

Listen my friend. By the new birth you have become a citizen of heaven and a stranger and pilgrim upon this earth. (Heb. 11:13). Yes, we are in this world but not of this world. "Our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, our Lord Jesus Christ," (Phil. 3:20). As strangers, then, it would behoove us to pay tribute money.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE LORD'S PRAYER

hearts. Perhaps the most valuable of all, his abbreviations help us to remember that it is not words that are to be worshiped.

This prayer has been used to meet the needs of every conceivable human experience. It becomes our possession in early infancy. I heard a child of three, recently, repeat it perfectly. We pray it until we die. It satisfies our souls. And yet we must not be satisfied with our knowledge of it until it accomplishes its purpose in our lives.

Our Father grant that we may walk with Thee,
And that Thy Presence to us may be a reality.

A Light Spreads

"As we look back at the experiences of this past year, we can truly say, the Lord has been good to us and we have much to praise Him for. There have been times of rejoicing, and also times of disappointment. However at all times He has been with us. The opportunities to witness for Him have been numerous. With the help of Christians we have been able to conduct many services.

"The number of those who came to seek peace with God has been gratifying. May they continue faithfully to follow our Master and to grow spiritually. Many believers have been strengthened in their faith and have been formed into little church groups in a number of sections of our area. Some new schools have been opened and more villages are asking for teachers. In a large area where the mission had only one teacher to witness for Christ, we now have six teachers."

—Excerpts from letter from Peter Falks, Mukedi, via Kikuit, Belgian Congo, Christmas, 1954.

What New Missionaries See

"On the other hand we wish you could all see, too, the results of sin in the lives of men who have been under the dominion of Satan with no ray of the gospel to reach into the prison-house of sin and set them free. The spiritual darkness is paralleled by the physical darkness in which they live. Almost every non-Christian home has an altar and gods to whom they bow down. Through their power, Satan desires to keep their hearts darkened and their lives as well from experiencing the freedom, joy, and blessing found in the gospel."

—Excerpt from Hugh Sprunger's letter,
Hualien, Taiwan (Formosa)

Christus

Out of the light that's leading me
From sin-sick earth to blissful goal,
I thank my God for Calvary,
Where Christ in love has won my soul.

In many a kind of circumstance,
Closer to Christ I've learned to crowd.
My life was planned by Christ, not chance.
Beneath His blood-stained cross I've bowed.

Beyond this place of death and tears
Dawns the glad day that ne'er shall fade.
Through the uncertain future years
I'll trust Christ, and not be afraid.

Although the pearly gate is strait,
I know my name's on heaven's roll,
For Christ is Master of my fate;
Christ is the Captain of my soul.

VOLUNTARY SERVICE ---- A WITNESS

INTRODUCTION

How many of us took time to evaluate what was done over the past year worthy of the "grace of our Lord Jesus Christ"? We are just getting started as Mennonite youth. We have long had the horse and buggy (doctrine), but we have had no cargo (practical application). In other words, the world has not really felt our message as it ought. Do we lack ways of effective witnessing?

This quarter we are concerned with "Understanding the 1-W Program." We have included under this subject a study of Voluntary Service—for all young people and also as it relates to the 1-W. The 1-W program may end with the draft, but Voluntary Service will not.

Let us ask ourselves as program leaders: Where does our society lack interest? Do we lack an understanding of what Voluntary Service is? Do we lack biblical understanding of our faith as it relates to service? Isn't the fruit of Christianity really how we treat the weaker in society?

One thing we all need is an awakening in our home community as to possibilities for service. Study the suggested service projects for the local community and decide at one of these two meetings on several specific projects your society will undertake this year.

You will notice that we have set up no particular order of service other than a general program development in the presentation of material. From the Suggestions for Worship and Source Materials we felt each society could choose that which will be best fitted to their interests and time limitations. It is important that at least one person become well acquainted with the factual information concerning Voluntary Service, in order that opportunity may be given for questions from the group and that such may be answered accurately. Variations from the usual topic or discussion type of program may be given by the use of special speakers and/or pictures (note Source Materials). If so, you may wish to invite other age groups to the meeting.

—Dan and Marge Graber

THEME: "Every Youth Serving Christ"

PURPOSE:

1. Helping every youth serve somewhere.
2. Helping youth to see a vision for the need of serving outside the local church community in our General Conference Voluntary Service program.
3. Helping youth to see the challenge for a summer, a year, or two years of service with the Mennonite Central Committee Voluntary Service program.

GOAL:

"1 to 5 in '55"—One to five youth from every congregation serving in 1955 in the VS program of the Church.

PROGRAM DEVELOPMENT:

I. "Absorbing the Word"

Just a little over fifty years ago, before we had a mission program, the Mennonite Church looked at the Great Commission (Matt. 28:19, 20) as a command fulfilled by the apostles. That was a misinterpretation of the passage and you and I now accept missions as an important part of our Christian life.

But what do we think about Christian Service? You will notice from passages in both the Old Testament and the New Testament that the Lord wants more than our prayers, our offerings, and our attendance at worship. The Word says in Isaiah 1:17: "Learn to do good; seek justice, correct oppression; defend the fatherless, plead for the widow." John's beautiful gospel says that love must find expression in helping others—"Feed my sheep," "Follow me." (John 21:16, 21)

We ask, "Can Jesus use me somewhere? If I worked in a children's home, would that be serving Christ? (Suggested illustration — "Reaping and Sowing," see Source Materials.)

Christianity is more than our relationship to Jesus Christ. It is related to how we treat fellow members of our church and other churches and it goes out even to those who are outside the Church—to the drunkard, the criminal, the delinquent, the orphan, the helpless; to the Negro, the white, the Mexican, the Oriental.

II. "Experiencing the Word"

The Christian service known as Voluntary Service is only ten years old. Each year the program increases and our witness is enlarged. In 1947 only fourteen men and seventeen women served in the long-term Voluntary Service program of the Mennonite Central Committee. In 1953 eighty-three men and forty-seven women were serving.

A youth who has never been outside of our

Mennonite communities may feel a bit uncomfortable in an atmosphere which may be shockingly sinful, but are we not sufferers for Christ? Furthermore, a person in Voluntary Service is not alone. Usually there are five to fifteen other youth serving the same need, in the same place, and who are united to the same Lord. It is through this group that your Christian life is given strength. "For where two or three are gathered in my name, there am I in the midst of them" (Matt. 18:20).

In order to face the tasks before them, this group meets regularly for prayer, fellowship, and worship experiences which help clarify the vision and to aid in strengthening convictions.

Voluntary Service often begins with some type of physical labor—that is, helping someone in physical need. But service goes deeper than that—it touches "the springs of character—the soul." When this takes place we have really helped.

When a summer or a year of Voluntary Service is completed, every volunteer realizes that all was not pleasant; yet there were times when Christ was exalted; times when you heard a comment that you did the job well; times when you gained new strength and courage from the support of a fellow volunteer. These are fond memories which are yours and which may lead you to a deeper consecration and commitment to your Lord. You will say like others, "It was in Voluntary Service that I again met God." (Suggested illustration—"A Test of Genuineness," see Source Materials.)

III. "Facts About Service"

Every Youth Fellowship should think seriously about having one to five of their group in Voluntary Service in 1955, depending upon the size of the group. Could we not send out of every ten into this type of work? Who will volunteer this year?

Specific needs for 1955 are: (1) More girls volunteering for MCC long-term projects to keep our units well-balanced. The influx of 1-W men into the Voluntary Service program has created a "woman-power" shortage in some cases. There is work for girls of various occupations and skills—secretaries, nurses, teachers, housekeepers. May we call attention especially to the latter, for there is always a need for dedicated "Martha's" who want to cook a meal for Susie, an orphan; or to dress little Johnny, whose parents are divorced; or to place a pillow for bedfast Sam, who is mentally ill. (2) There is a particular need for men in the summer service programs—fellows who enjoy directing recreational programs, telling Bible stories, teaching simple crafts, caring for crippled children, the aged, or the mentally ill.

In order that your skills can be used to greatest advantage apply early. An application does not commit you to service, but it presents important facts to the Voluntary Service directors concerning your choice of service, your abilities, the time when you are available for service. They in turn will present to you the current openings and suggest to you where you can make your greatest contribution.

Each volunteer (for long-term service) attends one of the Voluntary Service orientation schools which are held periodically at MCC headquarters. Applying early also helps the directors in arranging these schools, since plans for them can be made in accordance with current needs and the availability of applicants.

It should be pointed out that there are two distinct programs in which our youth may serve. (1) The Mennonite Central Committee has both long-term projects (one or two years) and summer service projects (approximately 8-12 weeks). Information may be obtained by writing to Voluntary Service, MCC, Akron, Pennsylvania. (2) Our General Conference has a number of summer service projects. Occasionally some of our mission stations (in the United States and Colombia) can use an individual for a longer period or at other times of the year. PROGRAM NO. 2

THEME:

"Voluntary Service Has a Place for the 1-W"

PURPOSE:

1. Informing every prospective 1-W about the opportunities in Voluntary Service.
2. Helping 1-W's to see the value of this type of service.
3. Showing how the local youth group can relate itself to 1-W's.

GOAL:

"1 to 5 in '55"—or as many as may see the vision of serving their 1-W commitment in the direct service of the Church.

PROGRAM DEVELOPMENT:

I. "Heralds of Love"

Of the disciples of our Lord in the early Church we read, "Behold how they love one another." Love was an evident characteristic of the early church. Galatians 6:2 and 10 implies a twofold love. Not only are we to love our brother of our faith but also we are to love those who are outside the Christian faith. Today, through Voluntary Service, the Church has been able to place Christian young men for two years as "heralds of love," making a contribution that no other 1-W can make unless he sacrifices economically as the volunteer does in Voluntary Service.

If you are familiar with the life of the early Church it is immediately evident that the Christian way includes our relationship to wealth. Read Amos, the prophet, and see how economists affected the life of the Israelites. Misused wealth was severely devastating to the true worship of God. (See Amos 2:6-8; 6:4-7. See Amos' answer in chapter 5:4-15, particularly verses 14 and 15.)

To say that you will volunteer for two years of your life on such a sacrificial basis (financially) is not a hardship, but it is testing one's love and devotion to Christ. Our government has looked upon the

C. O. position with a great deal more tolerance than it has been looked upon in the past 400 years. We are now faced with a real problem—that of the ease of our position. Will not this sacrifice that a 1-W makes in VS in a small way compensate for the relatively easy path we are given as C. O.'s?

The Voluntary Service program of the Church has many places for young men each year. In this work you will never grow rich financially, but you are provided adequate room and board and allowance for a normal life, and within the activities of the unit you will find joy in new activities which cost you nothing except your participation and cooperation. These may also help you to develop a new outlook on life which will make you a stronger and more useful Christian in your home community as well as in Voluntary Service. (Suggested illustration—"Voluntary Service Offers Service to Christ," see Source Materials.)

II. "How, Where, and What"

Have on hand factual information concerning types of service projects, present openings, and general information about Voluntary Service with MCC, particularly that pertaining to service for 1-W's. (See Source Materials, Item I.) Either have someone present this orally or make it available to anyone interested.

III. "Using Love in Service and Service in Love"

At some point in this program use the illustration titled "What 1 Corinthians 13 Means to a Volunteer Serving His 1-W in a Mental Hospital." (See Source Materials.)

IV. "Your Part at Home"

Every youth group needs to keep in touch with the volunteer who has left for service. Write him about your youth group's activities. Pray for him daily. Invite him to share his experiences with your group when he's visiting at home. Let him know you appreciate his contribution by a real welcome home at the end of his service experience.

Every youth group can have a part in the 1-W program by: (1) Visiting the nearest 1-W unit. Some are at your doorstep; other youth groups may need to drive 100 miles or more. (2) Inviting a 1-W unit or 1-W men who may not be organized into a unit to visit with you and come to your fellowship whenever possible. (3) Have your pastor or area 1-W counselor suggest other ways in which you can do your share in the 1-W program. It is a program for the entire Church, not only for a few men.

You can exemplify Christian Service in your own group by doing some of the local service projects suggested following:

Youth can be of help in the total church program: (1) The janitor and trustees would appreciate the youth doing the spring house cleaning of the church, or at least assisting. (2) Mowing the church lawn or cemetery (this may be a means of adding to the YPU treasury if such work offers remuneration). (3) Individuals may like to help the pastor by volunteering to type or mimeograph the church bulletin for a year. (4) Each church has its individual needs —giving the church a "new look," sanding floors, fixing benches, renovating Sunday school rooms, repairing hymn books, etc. Investigate the particular needs of your church.

Notice that this list includes group participation. You can't get by just by donating a dollar. Service means participation of all who can.

Youth can serve outside the church in the local community. (1) Singing to shut-ins, whether members of your church or not. (2) Presenting religious services in the county home and other local, county, or state institutions. Most places will welcome a group to provide a religious service, with singing, devotions, perhaps a pageant or play, and fellowship with the residents. You may wish to take along baskets of fruit, cookies, etc. Such expressions of thoughtfulness are much appreciated at "unexpected" times of the year, not only Christmas or Easter.

SUGGESTIONS FOR WORSHIP

I. Scripture Readings

From the Old Testament Prophets: Isaiah 1:2-31 —It is well to go to church Sunday after Sunday and say prayers, but is this a religion of the heart? Isaiah says "no!" Christians must help the weak in society. They must show their love for God by loving others. Upon the fruit of your faith will you be judged. Jeremiah 7:1-15—These two passages from the Old Testament may lead us to face the question, "What are we doing for the Lord?"

From the New Testament: (1) Have you heard the call of Christ? (1 Corinthians 10:24; 11:1; John 13:4-17; Luke 10:29-37); (2) Service demonstrates love (John 21:17, 22); (3) Service is twofold (Gal. 6:2, 10); (4) Service cannot be divided (Luke 16:13); (5) Service brings joy (Luke 10:17); (6) Service brings reward—spiritual (Luke 6:35).

From the above, you may choose various verses or you may speak from one theme.

II. Responsive Readings

III. Slide Sets

Slide sets pertaining to Voluntary Service and various specific VS units are available from Information Service, MCC, Akron, Pa.

IV. Speakers

Former VSer's, perhaps from your own group, or from a nearby community, can give a graphic picture of the work, at least of that part with which they were connected. Many of these volunteers also have pictures (slides or movies) which help you to "see" the work. If you happen to be near one of our Mennonite colleges, you should have no trouble in locating such speakers, as numerous college students give one or more summers in Voluntary Service.

Our Schools

BETHEL COLLEGE

Recent chapel speakers at Bethel College have been the Rev. John Covey, rector of St. Matthews Episcopal Church, and the Rev. C. R. Findley of the Evangelical United Brethren Church of Newton, both of whom spoke on the denominational series, giving the background and characteristics of their respective denominations. Other speakers from Newton have been Police Chief C. E. Patterson and Everett McCann of the Railroad, Saving and Loan Association. Chief Patterson talked about the work of the police, while Mr. McCann talked on the subject of "Water," especially as applied to problems in Kansas related to the shortage of water.

On Wednesday, Jan 18, a 1-W quartet from Denver, composed of Dean Kuhns, Shickley, Neb.; Donald Wiens, Marion, Kan., Ken Kauffman, Albany, Ore.; and Isaac Klassen Jr., Meade, presented a program in chapel.

Holstine Chevrolet Co. of Newton has again made a Chevrolet station wagon available to the department of speech and drama for the special use of the debate squads in traveling to speech meetings and debate tournaments.

"Gianni Schicchi" (pronounced Johnny Skeeky) by Puccini, a comic opera in the English language, was presented Feb. 3 and 4 at 8:30 p.m., under the direction of James W. Bixel with the assistance of W. T. Wilkoff of the department of speech and drama.

The opera is the story of nine selfish relatives who, upon discovering that their wealthy relative has bequeathed his fortune to the church, determine to contest the will. A lawyer, Gianni Schicchi, is hired, who decides to impersonate the deceased and concoct a new will. Complications follow. The opera is cast in the environment of medieval Florence, Italy.

The junior class of the college sponsored this operatic program and handled the sale of tickets.

Rabbi Harry Richmond of Temple Emmau-El in Wichita, Kansas, represented The Jewish Chautauqua Society as lecturer at Bethel College, North Newton, Kansas. He spoke at chapel, Feb. 1, on "What We Jews Believe." He also delivered several classroom lectures.

The National Federation of Temple Brotherhoods sponsors The Jewish Chautauqua Society, which sends rabbis to colleges as part of an educational program to disseminate authentic information concerning Judaism.

The Bethel Fellowship Group of the Denver Area met Jan. 7, in the basement of the First Mennonite Church. Rev. J. W. Nickel was in charge of devotions. Erwin Goering and Harry Martens of North Newton presented information on Bethel College, after which an informal discussion followed. A new fellowship committee was elected as follows: Rev. J. W. Nickel, Homer Graber, and Mrs. Karl Funk. Refreshments were enjoyed by all. Correspondence to the Denver Area Fellowship Group should be sent to the secretary, Mrs. Karl Funk, 1400 Wolff St., Denver 4, Colo.

The Madrigals presented a program at the meeting of the Moundridge Y. W. C. A., Monday evening, Jan. 24. The husbands of the members were guests at the program.

Krahn has spoken on "Trends in the Mennonite Churches" at the Brudertal Church, Hillsboro; Friedenstal, Tampa; Bergtal, Pawnee Rock; and Bethany, Kingman. On Sunday, January 31, he spoke in the Lehigh Mennonite Church and on February 10 he will speak to the Men's Brotherhood in the Hillsboro Church on "Avenues of Service."

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Robert McFerrin, baritone, winner of the metropolitan opera auditions of the air in 1953, will appear as the fourth number in the Bluffton College concert series on Tuesday evening, February 15, at 8:00 p. m. in Ramseyer Chapel.

His many appearances in concert and opera have proven him a convincing singer of German lieder, Italian opera and folk songs and spirituals of his own race.

Two appearances are scheduled for the Vesper Choir during February. Under the direction of Professor Russell Lantz the choir will present a sacred concert at the First Mennonite Church in Bluffton on Sunday, Feb. 13, and at the Grace Mennonite Church in Pandora, Ohio, on Sunday, February 27.

Rev. Alvin Beachy, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Bluffton, and instructor of Public Address at Bluffton College, is scheduled to teach a course entitled "Young Adults in the Church" at the Allen County Leadership Training School held in the Market St. Presbyterian Church, Lima, Ohio. The course will be taught every Monday evening during February and the first Monday in March.

Dr. Paul R. Shelly, professor of Bible, attended the meeting of the Committee on Graded Lessons in Chicago on January 20 and the meeting of associate editors of The Mennonite in Chicago on January 21.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Rev. Max Eisenbraun spoke in chapel recently. He related that he received his education in Russia under the communists and as a result became confused in his religious thinking and for a time became an atheist.

While imprisoned by the communists he met a fellow prisoner who was a Christian and this contact brought him to realize that not the gospel of force preached by the communists, but the love of Christ can change human thought and bring right and justice.

As a fugitive from the communists he came to China where he served as a missionary for six years fleeing to this country when China became communistic. While in China he married a daughter of missionary H. C. Bartel. The Eisenbrauns are living in Mountain Lake, Minnesota, at the present time.

Somewhat different from the usual chapel routine was the program presented by the English IV class. They sang a group of old songs written by well-known British authors. John D. Unruh, Jr., was the narrator giving something of the background of the songs and the authors.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

The second program of the School of Missions series was held on Sunday evening, January 23. At 6:00 the group joined together at the Mission Center for a curry and rice supper. Mrs. Paul Wenger was in charge of the preparation and serving of this meal from India. The 7:30 service included a panel discussion group consisting of the missionaries and missionary children who have been connected with our work in India and who are now living in Chicago. Rev. J. N. Smucker led the discussion.

William Gering led the prayer fellowship on Wednesday evening, January 26. He called us to make a renewed effort to learn to pray and worship—"Lord teach us to pray."

Friday evening, January 28, the teachers and pupils of the weekday Church school of the Woodlawn Mennonite Church presented a program for the parents. The program was followed by a social hour during which the parents and teachers became better acquainted.

Since December, 1954, India now requires visas from all citizens of the British Commonwealth who wish to enter India. It had been possible for citizens of Canada and Great Britain to freely enter India on their passports. They will now need to apply to the consular offices of the Indian government for visas to enter the country. This will have an effect on mission agencies who had been using Canadian citizens as missionary personnel in India.

MCC News Notes

RAINFALL BRINGS RELIEF IN PARAGUAYAN CHACO

Several good rains in January have brought relief to the Mennonite Chaco colonies in Paraguay following a hot, dry December.

Immediately after the rainfalls farmers began seeding crops, some of which should have been planted much sooner but which were delayed by lack of moisture. In spite of the rainfall the peanut and cotton crops will not be average ones because of their late planting, according to a report by an MCC representative in the Chaco.

While December is hot in the Chaco, it is usually not as consistently hot and dry as it was this year. There were very few days when the temperature was below 115 in the shade and many days it was higher. The highest was 122 degrees.

FOOD DISTRIBUTED TO GERMAN FLOOD VICTIMS

PAX men from Enkenbach, Germany, distributed emergency MCC food packages on Jan. 22 to 132 homeless German flood victims temporarily lodged at Germersheim on the menacing Rhine River.

Unseasonal thaws and heavy rains in the Swiss Alps caused the current disaster which took at least 20 lives and inflicted enormous property damage at numerous points along the banks of West Germany's largest river.

D. C. Kaufman, European MCC director; John Mark Yoder, material aid director; and Richard Hertzler, head of the German Mennonite relief organization; investigated conditions in the flooded area and made arrangements for distribution of relief food. The dispensing of emergency supplies by PAX men was a stop-gap measure to give immediate aid until more relief could be sent to the district.

Eighty-seven boxes of food went to families housed in the Germersheim jail and 45 reached other flood-stricken persons who have secured momentary quarters in the town after being evacuated from the Rhine lowlands. Rev. Kohlmann, a Protestant bishop, gave the PAX personnel valuable assistance by helping to organize the relief disbursement and providing a room at the Protestant center for part of the distribution.

Allotted to each person was one 15-pound package containing butter, shortening, beef, rice, beans, and wheat flour.

With their homes and land inundated, the future looks bleak for these small farmers. When the flood peril ends, they face the laborious task of rebuilding with their very scanty resources. In the meantime, living conditions in the cramped cells of the old jail and other crowded quarters are very distressing. One woman said that her family could not have satisfied current needs without the emergency food packs, since she had been able to buy only limited supplies on credit.

Taking part in the distribution were: European PAX leader Dwight Wiebe of Hillsboro, Kan.; Harold Kroeker of Henderson, Neb.; Doyle Basinger of Dalton, Ohio; Carl Smeltzer of Elkhart, Ind.; LaMoine Epp of Henderson; and Robert Schrag of Newton, Kan.

With the threat of continued, and perhaps more serious, flooding in the Rhine valley during spring months, about 14 men of the Enkenbach unit have volunteered to be on 24-hour call to do sand bagging or give other immediate assistance, in the event of new floods.

O love the Lord, all ye His saints: for the Lord preserveth the faithful, and plentifully rewardeth the proud doer. Be of good courage, and He shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord.

Living With Peace of Mind

Give thanks for the church as you gratefully reflect on all that it means to the community. Rejoice in its manifold ministrations through worship and communion, the winning of souls to Christ, the challenge and nurture of sermons, the guidance of children, youth and adults, the visitation of the sick and the lonely, the comradeship of working together in doing God's will. Remember your indebtedness to God and our living Lord, to missionaries, preachers and teachers. Realize, with George W. Russell:

As flows the river to the sea
Adown from rocky hill or plain,
And gave thee harvest of their gain;
And weary myriads of yore
Dug out for thee earth's buried ore.
The shadowy toilers for thee fought
In chaos of primeval day
Blind battles with they knew not what;
And each before he passed away
Gave clear articulate cries of woe:
Your pain is their's of long ago.
And all the old heart sweetness sung,
The joyous life of man and maid
In forest when the earth was young,
In rumors round your childhood strayed:
The careless sweetness of your mind
Comes from the buried years behind.
And not alone unto your birth
Their gifts the weeping ages bore,
The old descents of God on earth
Have dowered thee with celestial lore:
So, wise, and filled with sad and gay
You pass unto the further day.

The sale of comic books and pocket novels has been discontinued in 137 Safeway stores in six western states. It was found too difficult to weed out objectional books. Charles P. Murphy, Code Administrator for the Comics Magazine Association also promises drastic changes in comic books to be put on sale this year.

A lot of good could be done in the world if nobody cared who got the credit for it.

MENNONITE SEMINAR

Rev. P. K. Regier, Executive Secretary of the General Conference, addressed the newly formed Mennonite Seminar at the Rosthern Junior College on January 25. The subject for discussion was, "The Organization and Polity of the Mennonite Church." Rev. Regier introduced a number of timely subjects which then later formed the basis for a lively discussion which lasted almost two hours. Of great interest to the group was the presentation and discussion on such subjects as, the present General Conference Organization and Polity, transition from lay-ministry to professional ministry, relationship between Canadian and United States churches, and Inter-Mennonite cooperation.

The Mennonite Seminar was organized on November 1, 1954, at the Rosthern Junior College, Rosthern, Sask. At the first meeting about 20 members met and organized, at which time a planning committee was elected consisting of Dr. J. F. Janzen, W. Wheeler, Arthur Wiens, and Rev. Arnold J. Regier. The purpose of this Seminar was to promote a study-fellowship (Arbeitsgemeinschaft) in which different subjects or problems relating to our Mennonite fellowship are discussed. Usually a research paper is first given by one of the members or by some outside speaker which then gives direction to the group discussion. It has been impossible to limit these discussions to two hours thus far, including a lunch provided by the ladies.

This undertaking was a new venture on the part of the Rosthern Junior College administration. It required some time before its objectives could be determined and formulated. As these began to develop new interest arose on the part of friends in other centers. Ministers, doctors, teachers, businessmen, and farmers began to participate, some driving as far as fifty miles. These study and discussion periods are conducted very informally, but a very open and frank spirit is manifest. It already has helped different groups to understand each other.

The culmination of this Seminar will be a six-thousand mile tour through Mennonite communities in Ontario, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Indiana during the month of July. These plans are now being made in co-operation with the Thiessen Transportation Co. at Rosenfeld, Manitoba.

The Friedensfeld Church is located four miles north and four miles east of Turpin, Oklahoma. It is a member of the Western District and the General Conference.

The first meeting house was erected in 1908, and was used until 1940, when the present building was purchased and moved to the present site, one-fourth mile east of the first building. Present membership is approximately 100.

Mr. and Mrs. Menno Ediger are serving, while Rev. Levi Koehn is attending Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago.

NURSE NEEDED

The Mennonite Deaconess Hospital of Beatrice, Nebraska, is in need of a registered nurse with the ability to fill the position of superintendent on nursing service. They are particularly desirous of finding a Christian nurse who will be able to further the Christian witness of the hospital.

This should be a challenging position as a new 50-bed hospital is planned for the near future. The old hospital would then be used as a convalescent hospital or home for the aged.

Address:
Mr. Edmund P. Zehr

Beatrice, Nebraska.

OUR PREJUDICES

We do not like to be accused of being prejudiced. Yet no doubt all of us are to some extent and in some areas. Often we entertain certain prejudices without being aware of it, or without thinking it worth-while to re-examine our conclusions. Even while asserting that we are doing serious thinking on a matter, we may be merely rearranging our prejudices.

One very common prejudice is to think that to be mentally ill is much more disgraceful than to be physically ill. The sick of mind are too often thought of as being "off the beam," while the sick of body are held in highest esteem. Yet in many cases physical illness is caused by wrong living. Children who are ill of body are given every consideration, while those who are mentally retarded through no fault of their own are too often considered hopeless and merely to be kept out of sight. Fortunately, as several articles in this week's issue show, our attitude is gradually changing.

Another common prejudice that we frequently entertain is that "foreigners" are on a lower level than we are. We may look down upon them because of their broken English, while at the same time they may be masters of five languages and we of only one. We may have a feeling that because they do not happen to have been born in our country, we are better than they. If they cannot at once understand our customs and ways we are apt to consider them ignorant. It is altogether possible that they are more intelligent than we are.

A third common prejudice is that because our skin is white we are superior to others whose color is dark. Our country is making some progress here. We are trying to put all color of skin on an equal basis. Yet, unless we are on our guard, almost unconsciously we show a patronizing air to those of another color, and even in our over-anxiousness to show ourselves friendly, reveal that we still consider ourselves above them but are trying to come down to their level. This race prejudice dies hard both on the mission field and in the homeland.

To hold a prejudice simply means that we prejudge another and close our minds before all the facts are in. Jesus warned against judging another. His love can disolve our prejudices.

THE ROAD DOWN

Here in Chicago recently the judge was hearing and sentencing the usual daily roundup of skid-row characters who had been gathered off the streets because of drunkenness.

As one disheveled character stood before him for sentence, the judge, on hearing his name, looked at him quizzically and asked if he had not been an instructor in a certain school where the judge had received his training. The defendent admitted that he had been. In amazement the judge declared that this man had been his teacher and given him the instruction he needed to become a judge. Then the judge had a bright idea. He invited the culprit to sit with him at the bench and to hear the next case, which was also one of drunkenness. The man did, and with such understanding and sympathy that the judge invited him to become his assistant and come back each day, promising him pay for his help, but prompt dismissal if he returned to drink. The man accepted his offer.

Alcoholism lays its paralyzing grip on men and women of all walks of life and reduces them to pitiable specimens of humanity. The society is ready to disown them and term them derelects, bums, skid-row down-and-outers. But society is responsible for making available the poison that reduces them to such straits. The socalled "men of distinction" too often become the men of skid-row. When will we wake up?

PRODS TOWARD PERFECTION

The difficulties, reverses, and hardships that may come to us, as they do to all, are not necessarily hindrances to growth. They may serve as prods that urge us on toward a better life. There is danger of becoming too complacent and too satisfied with things as they are that we make no move to improve. Some jolt may cause us to come out of the rut of self-satisfaction and make real progress toward that which is far better.

In fact it may be said that real progress is made by those who are dissatisfied and disturbed about what is and have a vision of what might be. They are not satisfied with the "status quo" (which some one defined as "being Latin for the mess we're in"), and so their very hardships are but prods to urge them to better attainments.

Thus the rough and hard places of life may be the means of urging us to something better. We are not fully content with our church and so keep working for a more active group. We are not content with our world and so have the urge to make it a better place in which to live. We realize our own weaknesses and press forward toward a better life in Christ.

Dissatisfied people may become the prods that lead us to something better. But there must be more than mere dissatisfaction; there must be burning conviction that life can and should be better and more meaningful.

Toward Mature Thinking About Mental Illness

B. J. BRAUN

(This address was presented at the dedication of the new activity therapy building at Kings View Homes, Reedley, Calif. The author is pastor of the Mennonite Brethren Church, Dinuba, Calif.)

Mental illness and its treatment is often shrouded in ignorance and superstition. Strong subjective feelings obstruct realistic and constructive thinking and lead to unchristian attitudes toward the mentally ill. Misunderstanding of the nature of mental illness also contributes to unwholesome attitudes.

In the field of mental illness, health and therapy we recognize much childish thinking and see a tremendous challenge in the words of I Corinthians 14:20: "Brethren, be not children in understanding: howbeit in malice be ye children, but in understanding be men." In the Williams' translation, part of this challenge is put this way: "As to evil keep on being children; yet as to intelligence be men of maturity."

1. To begin with it, it is childish to think that mental illness is the misfortune of only such who have a hereditary propensity for insanity. You hear it said: "That could never happen to me." We do well to remember the words of Scripture: "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall" I Corinthians 10:12. It could happen to you or to yours—if you don't take proper care of your body and soul.

2. It is equally childish to adopt a fatalistic attitude and maintain there is nothing you can do about it when or if mental illness comes. That is not true, especially not for a Christian. As mature men and women we need to become "men" in our understanding of the causes and preventatives of mental illness as well as of the facts of mental health and therapy.

3. We do not act very maturely if we choose to stigmatize mentally ill people by calling them "crazy" and the place where they go for treatment, "nut-house." Mental illness and institutions for its treatment have little, if anything, to do with one's intelligence quotient. It is rather a lack of intelligent understanding on our part to classify all such who may need psychiatric help as insane. As men of maturity we will find we are much safer in leaving all classification to experts in the field.

4. One of the greatest injustices we can possibly do anyone who is mentally ill is to speak of his condition with a manifestation of a sense of shame. Ashamed that our son or mother has polio? Ashamed that a brother is down with the flu? Shame might well flush our face if due to promiscuous living we should contract some social disease. But even then we should blush much more over our moral laxity than over the disease itself. Any disease as such is neither moral or immoral: it is amoral and needs speedy treatment by a competent specialist. Even so mental illness: it does not need our apologies; it needs our mature understanding and immediate best help.

5. It is very thoughtless to say "let relatives of the mentally ill or the state cope with that problem." Some day you may be "the relative." Some day you could even be "the patient" without any relative able or willing to take care of you. Or some day you might have to commit some loved one to a state institution and experience the cutting chill of the impersonal treatment characteristic of mass institutional life. No, that is not the answer. The only answer which can possibly satisfy the Christian conscience is that which would adequately answer the divine interrogator when He asks: "Where is my brother?"

Mental health is not merely a social or psychological problem; mental health is a spiritual challenge calling for the best of which the Christian conscience, Christian manhood and the Christian service potential is capable. Therefore, the mentally ill are the responsibility of the evangelical church as much as the spiritually lost are the burden of Christian missions. We want to continue to do more and more missionary work in order to bring "light' to those in spiritual darkness. We want to continue to do relief work in order to alleviate physical suffering at home and abroad. But we must discontinue to be children in regard to the problems and potentials in the area of mental health. Rather, we must pray that in our understanding of it and dealing with it we may become men who need not be ashamed, rightly dividing our attention, energies, finances, and devotion among those in physical, mental and spiritual need. Let there be a balance so that none is forgotten: to the hungry, their bread; to the naked, their clothing; to the homeless, their homes; to the spiritually sick and dying, their gospel of redemption; and to the mentally ill, their healing, understanding and restoring through the application of Christian methods of redemptive love.

In Ephesians 4:13 (Williams' translation) we read: "for the ultimate building up of the body of Christ, until we all attain to unity in faith and to perfect knowledge of the Son of God, namely, to a mature manhood and to a perfect measure of Christ's moral stature." And we remind ourselves of our introductory challenge: "In malice be ye children, but in understanding be men."

These exhortations pose a problem for us and are a constant challenge: to us because none of us ever attains to perfect manhood. Paul tells us here that an ultimate goal of redemption is not immediately attainable. Dr. Leon Saul writes: "Within every grownup lives a child he once was." Dr. Edmund Bergler says: "Neurotics are never as old as their birth certificates show them to be." R. Lofton Hudson says: "The time was when people said 'Thou fool'; now we say: 'Thou neurotic.'" Then he goes on to extenuate that statement by conceding that "labels are deceptive and unfair. Who is not a little neurotic at times if he is worth his salt?"

That is what the apostle Paul, the theologian, and Dr. Leon Saul, the psychologist, have to say on the subject of immaturity on the part of grown people. We accept their authoritative judgment. We admit there are varying degrees of immaturity about all of us. All of us, without exception, act or react childishly at times. Paul, the theologian, challenges us to keep on bringing our attitudes into full conformity with real manhood, "in understanding be men"—act like grownups. That may not be simple but we ought to keep on working at it.

There is a gratifying amount of "growing-up" that we have already done during the last decade or so with regard to mental health and illness. But there remains a great deal more to be accomplished before we will come to view and to treat mental illness with all the understanding which becometh mature Christian men.

In conclusion I would like to say five things, summarizing the need for an inner dedication of ourselves to the challenging task in the field of mental health.

1. Seeing we have those who are mentally ill among us, let us accept the facts. Let us be men and face things as they are.

2. Considering the strain of the mad rush of modern living—let us be thankful that there are not more who break under the load.

3. Remembering that in many respects we are all "men of like passion" let us not boast ourselves of tomorrow nor rely too presumptuously on a strong ancestry. Let us rather pray God that we may remain strong in spite of weaknesses and pressures.

4. Relying fully on the grace of God and drawing heavily upon such understanding as we already have of the problem of mental illness, let us put aside all sense of false shame and every idea or stigma or frustration. Those are attitudes, actions, and reactions of children—not of men. Let us rather view mental illness as a modern challenge to our Christian manhood and let us meet it with faith, charity, and hope. Too long we have been busy counting Christians; henceforth let us busy ourselves with making Christians count. Someday they may put an epithet over your life that you were "a good soul"; make certain they will also know what you were good for.

5. Being we still have our composure, balance and strength, as of this moment, let us dedicate ourselves in this hour afresh to the task of helping those for whom life's burdens have become too heavy, who temporarily are in need of our understanding in the form of material, moral, and spiritual support and who, with the proper application of that understanding, can be restored, if we, like Simon of Cyrene, will lovingly allow ourselves to be "compelled to bear his (that is, the other's) cross."

Retarded Children Can Be Helped

Elaine Sommers Rich

"I plead guilty! I am the father of a retarded child." These were the words of Dr. Comstock, a teacher at Wichita University, to a Newton, Kansas, audience recently. He explained that over and over he and his wife have been stigmatized because one of their children is a mongoloid. "We have lost neighbors. Other children cannot catch our David's mental retardation. It isn't like measles or mumps. Our child is good. He is innocent. He needs friends. Yet other parents do not want their children to associate with him."

This father recalled feelingly the day the doctor had advised them to "make a clean cut," to put this child away in some institution and forget about him. "Parents cannot do that," he said simply.

For every 1,000 children, approximately 30 are retarded. Seven or eight of these 30 will have IQ's of 50 or below; the others, from 50 to 80. The causes of this condition in children are not yet definitely known. Very high fever during the early weeks of pregnancy and some glandular deficiency in the body of an older mother are possible causes. For many years severely retarded children have been considered hopeless. But more and more emphasis is being placed on helping them to learn to do simple things they can do. "Retarded children can be helped!" is the slogan of this movement. A national organization to help parents of such children publishes a quarterly paper, Children Limited. Kansas now has two local organizations which promote the interests of retarded children at the community level.

My husband and I once had as guests in our home a family that included a little mongoloid girl. Her attention span was short. She was quick. She required constant watching. As I noted the infinite love and patience of the parents toward this child, I caught a glimpse of the infinite love and patience of our Heavenly Father. For are we not His retarded children?

CORRECTION

Errors do creep in. In two recent issues of The Mennonite, these errors took the form of omissions. In the January 25 issue page 50, a line was omitted from the letter of the Alfred Wiebes. In the third column, fifteen lines down, it should read: "So we went home rejoicing that another soul had started her heavenward journey. L. has been very faithful in attending the services and is always ready . . . ."

In the February 1 issue, page 67, the last paragraph of the editorial THE CHURCH BULLETIN should begin: "It may not be necessary for the pastor . . ."

We apologize for these omissions.

The Place Whereon Thou Standest Is Holy Ground

WALTER and MARTHA DYCK

God needs to remind us from time to time, that, when He appears to work out a marvellous deliverance for His people, He always wishes to bring us into a better land.

To the Israelites the wilderness wanderings came as a matter of their own choice. Had the Lord not said to Moses, "I have surely seen the affliction of my people. . .and have heard their cry. . .for I know their sorrows; And I am come to deliver them . . . and to bring them up out of that land into a good land . . . flowing with milk and honey" (Exod. 3:7-8).

The Danzig Mennonites have experienced such a leading of the Lord. They have reason to be deeply grateful that Uruguay is a good land. Not only does it provide milk and honey, but also vegetables, fruit, meats, and grains in a wide variety. It can be a holy land to them.

Our first view of the Uruguayan countryside was an impressive one. We had just crossed the Rio de la Plata from Buenos Aires, Argentina, to Colonia, Uruguay. It had been a short 15 minute flight in a large four-motor seaplane. The ONDA (a modern Greyhound bus) was waiting to take us into the capital city.

It was December 14 but it seemed to us like a day in June. Small combines were busy in the fields. For miles small palm trees graced both sides of the highway. We had to remind ourselves that the climate in southern Uruguay is not unlike southern California or Georgia, or as we have been told, the land in which Jesus walked. Uruguay lies in the same latitude as Capetown, South Africa. It does involve an adjustment for people from Danzig with its 54 degrees north to be brought to 34 degrees south. But it is here where over a thousand Mennonites are now happy to be and feel at home. Uruguay is a good land for them.

Of course, this pioneer life has its inconveniences. For two weeks, over the Christmas Season and New Year, we visited El Ombu and Gartental, two thriving pioneer communities. Whether you go by ONDA (Organizacion Nacional de Autobuses) or by "camion" (meaning "truck" in the Spanish), the trip of 185 miles to El Ombu and 225 miles to Gartental can be a trying experience. On the ONDA it takes four to five hours. On the "camion" it takes twice that long.

With the peso(the Uruguayan unit of exchange) being about as hard to earn here as a dollar is in the United States or Canada, one can see why many make the round trip by "camion" for five pesos per person rather than paying 25 pesos or more for a round trip by bus. Still more economical is to go by "Anhalter" (hitch hiking) and many get around this way. We did it once, too, not because the billfold was empty but because we missed a bus connection, and would have had to wait five hours for the next bus.

But one cannot get a true picture of Mennonites in Uruguay unless and until one gets out into the wide-open spaces farther inland. We are happy to make our first visit during harvest time. El Ombu was reaping its fifth wheat crop; Gartental its third. Wheat yields have been increasing each year. Fields and gardens had been getting dry. Several good rains fell during the Christmas holidays. Though much wheat was still in the straw, and was beginning to go down, we heard many expressions of gratefulness to the Lord for his bountiful provision for them.

Do you know that from five to seven years there had been no harvests for the Danzig Mennonites? How keenly they remember January 24, 1945, ten long years ago, that their refugee life had begun. So, for January 23, 1955, services of praise to God had been arranged in the respective congregations in Uruguay. They are happy and grateful to be and feel at home again.

It was on Christmas morning in El Ombu. Services were held as usual, in the south end of the long granary. Wheat sacks were "looking down" over a temporary partition at the worshippers below. It is hoped that before long a separate place of worship can be erected.

Our thoughts inadvertently went back to Kansas. With the constant threat of Universal Military Training in the United States, which also led to the trek of our fathers from Europe to America nearly 80 years ago, one wonders whether some Mennonites, specially young married couples, might not wish to give serious consideration to helping our brethren here in Uruguay by joining hearts and hands (hoes and purses in hand) with young people here in a new settlement venture.

It would be no rosy beginning. You might have to draw water from an open well, watch the beetles unexpectedly take the tomatoes and potatoes (they grow again) or the red spider web down the peanuts in the field. Temperatures can go up to 113 Fahrenheit as they did one day early in January.

Where some of you will be going to the state of Washington or western Canada others may like to farm, and rear their families, and serve their Lord in rural Uruguay.

When you take the Lord with you, the place whereon you stand can be holy ground.

Why Not U.M.T. ?

Following is an excerpt from letter by Guy W. Solt of the Friends. EME

Consider what this would mean to the young men, our country, and peace. The 10 years of military influence would dissipate much of the spiritual attainment, initiative, and character qualities nurtured in their homes, churches, and schools. They would be under military influence 10 impressionable years, and during these 10 important years their education, occupation, and marriage would be subservient to military demands. It would also encourage the men to rely principally upon force for security.

This policy would establish professional militarism here such as Germany had. The arrogant national spirit which accompanies such a policy would make the United States more warlike and destroy democracy and Christian ideals as we know them. We believe this modest beginning of U.M.T. is only the first step toward its complete establishment. No country that adopted U. M. T. was ever able to throw it off. Those who opposed it had to move to other countries, principally the United States.

As long as there is one chance of preserving this kind of military policy those of us who oppose it should do all we can. Individual and organizational efforts have in the past been very effective.

Film Review

The Parable of the Ten Talents, 16 mm., sound, black and white or color, 16½ minutes. Association Films. Rental, black and white—$5.00; color—$7.50

This film is the presentation of the story of the talents by means of marionettes. It shows three people doing three separate tasks in a pottery shop.

They hear Jesus tell the story of the talents. They apply it to themselves seeing that each of them has his own ability but that all of their abilities are needed to fulfill the total work of the pottery shop.

The reviewing committee was not enthusiatic concerning the use of marionettes to portray biblical truth. The issue was also raised regarding portraying Christ as a marionette.

The color is exceptionally good, and the story of the pottery shop helps to make the story real. The film is adapted for groups from juniors through adults.

The divorce rate is at its lowest point since the end of World War II, according to Surgeon General Leonard Scheele of the USA Public Health Service. From an estimate from incomplete returns this would represent a total reduction of about forty per cent from the postwar peak reached in 1946, according to Dr. Scheele. This continues a trend that has been in progress since that year.

Flashes of Thought

The Master's Touch

Walter Gering

In my hand I held a priceless jewel, snow white in its glistening beauty. The longer I held it in the palm of my hand the more I was thrilled by its beauty. Long after it had been returned to its owner the lesson lingered on. It was one of those experiences which grip the imagination and stir the soul.

To be sure, in terms of dollars and cents it was worth little. As an object of trade it could have been purchased at the village grocer for a few pennies. It was not the actual cost which meant so much. Neither was its beauty in the perfection of its lines. In fact, it was definitely not to be considered as a work of art in comparison with professional work. Nevertheless, it was a priceless jewel from the imagination of a creative child.

I would never have seen it. To me a bar of soap was nothing more than an object of convenience. Coming in from a day's work it was a means of cleansing from the activities of the day. With constant use it gradually disappeared. Another came to take its place. But it was this young creative mind which had seen beyond the surface. With loving touch she began to release from that bar of soap a priceless jewel of art. Slowly but surely as the shavings fell to the table its dim outline appeared. Sometimes it was by means of a few firm strokes of the knife; then again it was by the soft touches of an ordinary tooth pick. But each movement of the fingers made its impression.

The next Sunday morning I stood with a sense of awe and reverence. In the palm of my hand I held it; a spotless, white little angel. It had been released by my little friend—a beautiful testimony to the worth of an ordinary bar of soap. Never again would I be able to carelessly handle such a bar. There were priceless jewels within every bar, waiting to be released by some imaginative mind.

I thought of the words of Jesus: "Follow me and I will make you . . . " Who would ever have thought that this humble fisherman would one day become a pillar in the church of God. There was nothing about him which would have suggested that his name would go down through the ages as a priceless jewel in the crown of the King. Yet Jesus looked beyond the surface; in His heart He saw that which was waiting to be released. And so it was that this ordinary fisherman was transformed.

He can do the same for you, my friend. The little white angel, released from a bar of soap is but a symbol of that which He seeks to do with all of us. As we yield to His tender hands He molds a work of beauty which is indeed divine.

MOLD ME, O LORD DIVINE

What Will Happen to Foreign Missions?

A. STAUFFER CURRY*

During the past six months I have thought many times of the present problems and developments in foreign missions. In a recent article of a leading denominational publication, a noted professor of foreign missions states: "So long as we (the United States) adhere to our present policy of resort to the threat of quick retaliation with atomic weapons, and so long as we make political weapons of our food, our economic aid, and our technical assistance, we shall run the risk of losing the very things we seek. . . ." One of these "things" which we risk losing, it seems to me, is the opportunity to do effective missionary work. The article states further that the success of missions "will depend in part on what our churches do to influence America's political and economic life." It seems clear that a major challenge to our churches, regarding foreign missions, is to urge our government to follow such policies as will create a world climate conducive to the growth of foreign missions. What such policies should be is not easy to determine. It seems to me the churches need to study carefully the problem of foreign relations, if indeed our missions are to survive. In turn, the church needs to express to the government continually its best thought on the Christian approach to international relations—toward the objective of effective missions, to say nothing of the objective of world peace itself.

The New Nationalism

Missions also face a new national self-consciousness on the part of countries where missions are located. In 1776 the United States wanted to be independent of Britain. While yet a young nation we propounded the "Monroe Doctrine"—no foreign interference! Just so, "young" nations in the Middle and Far East today want no foreign domination or interference. Mistakenly, some of them tend to look on missions as "foreign interference." Therefore, foreign missions must accept the burden of proof that their activities are not under the influence of the government of countries from which the missionaries come. Missions must demonstrate its deep interest in the total welfare—moral, economic, physical, social, political, and spiritual—of the countries in which missions operate. The greater the extent of misunderstanding of missions by foreign countries at this point, the greater is the risk that missions will be banned by some countries. The recent refusals of visas to missionaries by some countries are somber evidence of this possibility. More effective liaison between the church in mission lands and the governments of those countries may provide a partial answer to the situation.

Closed Missions

A bitter fact in the current missions picture is that of closed missions in some lands, with the threat of a similar fate in others. It is reported that mission schools have been taken over by the government in Iran, with a threat to further curtailment. And good authorities report that—in spite of the principle of religious freedom—some officials of Pakistan regard conversion away from Mohammedanism as treason, since Muslim is the state religion. Can there be any good in such a situation? Conceivably it could lead the church behind such closed doors to greater devotion and courage. It certainly should, it seems to me, lead the church here at home to more sincere prayer for those cut off thus. How many of us pray daily for missions? It should lead the church to expand missions in other lands where the door is still open. It should lead to most serious prayer and thought about means to prevent future closings.

Another development in missions is the growing need for technical, medical, and scientific development. A caption of a missionary picture in a national religious magazine read: "Throughout India today evangelical missionaries are not as welcome as missionaries engaged in education and agriculture." Since this is true, it seems obvious the church should supply the types of missionary service the recipient countries can best use. The chances are we'll win just as many, or even more, souls in the end. The desire for agricultural and technical help indicates all the more, it seems to this writer, that the work of service and relief agencies must go hand in hand with missions. More and more I wonder if missions may not perish unless they are supported by spiritually-motivated service, rehabilitation, and technical assistance programs. On the other hand, the latter must always have as their ultimate objective the redemption of the souls of men, as well as the improvement of men's physical welfare.

Other Religions

Another situation facing missions is the growth of other religions and social systems. Christianity is called upon to demonstrate its superior ethics, more effective love, and deeper spirituality than other religions. To sharpen the problem: Does the average Christian congregation in Washington, D. C., live a better corporate life than the Mohammedan congregation which just completed a new mosque on Massachusetts Avenue? If not, a nonbeliever can logically ask why he should become a Christian rather than a Mohammedan. Similarly, the church must demonstrate to non-Christians its superior way of life to that of the other living religions.

An African leader at Evanston said: "The advance of Islam (presents) the churches with a twofold challenge: to witness so truly to the Lordship of Christ that pagans exposed to Islam and Christianity will be convinced—by Christianity and to witness so truly that Christ rather than Mohammed will lead them to God."

Likewise, Christianity must convince potential believers that it has more to offer than Communism. Both Communism and Mohammedanism, for ex-

Ye Are the Salt of the Earth.

"Greetings with Psalm 138:1 'I will praise thee with my whole heart: before the gods will I sing praise unto thee.' This verse took on a new meaning for me recently. It was one of the Hindu festival days. All day we had been reminded of this fact because not many patients came to the hospital for treatment. In the evening I was walking outside from our house to one of the other houses on the compound. In the distance I heard the beating of drums, singing, and shouting which always accompanies a festival. Again I was reminded of the futility of worshipping false and unknown gods. Then as I walked on, I approached the homes where some of the Christian nurses live who work in our hospital. Suddenly, I heard a different and familiar strain of music; it was the nurses singing some hymns! A real joy came to my heart as I realized the precious truth that Christianity has made its inroads here too. Amidst the worshipping of gods, a group is worshipping the true and living God! After I came back to my room I opened my Bible and these words were before me, 'I will praise thee with my whole heart: before the gods will I sing praise unto thee.'" ample, are highly "evangelistic" and skilled in propaganda techniques. Can Christianity, to use a practical term, "compete" successfully with these forces? With God's help it can. But it may take a new consecration and devotion of millions of Christians.

Native Leadership

A long-recognized need of missions is for native leadership. To dramatize this need, let us turn the tables. Suppose an Oriental came to any small community in the United States to propagate the Confucian system. He would get much farther if he first converted, then trained, local native Americans to help him; and the more capable and devoted the better. Similarly, the more natives of ability and devotion who can be secured to carry on mission work, the better it will be for the cause. Especially is this true if more countries close their doors to missionaries. Should not the colleges and seminaries of Protestant churches be overflowing with African, Asiatic, South American, and other Christian youth brought here for the distinct purpose of training for church leadership? If visas continue to be denied missionaries, this may be the time to spend more money in bringing here for Christian study more capable youth from the mission fields.

It seems to me, furthermore, we may never lose sight of the compelling motive for missions—as well as all phases of the church program. This motive is rooted in two basic assumptions: (1)That Jesus Christ is Lord of all creation, and (2) that men can be redeemed through the saving power of Jesus Christ, and that all men should know about this saving power. When this is kept uppermost, missions will never die.

Witness Bearers

"I'm sure that if I were to speak to you personally each one would ask, 'Since you have started your work at the hospital at Champa and have been there several months, how do you like the work?' This is my answer: I do enjoy the work, but the part I enjoy the most is the afternoon or late in the morning when the work is not so pressing, to make leisure rounds about the wards and become acquainted with the people and, where possible, to give a personal testimony of what the Lord has done for me and means to me, and try to tell them what the Lord will do for them. Of course I realize that my language ability is still somewhat limited, but it is a joy to use what I have and trust the Lord to bless His Word as it is given out. Often I have been encouraged by the verse in Isaiah 55:11 'So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper whereto I sent it.' Even though our speech is sometimes rather stammering, if the Word is given out, we can expect fruit."

"I would like you to meet a little girl. Her name is Sally. She is the one who in that family enjoys going to church and does hate to miss Sunday school. Some of her brothers and sisters often come with her. I often wonder if she will not be the one who will have to bring the others back to the Lord. They are often on our minds. They have backslidden and realize it but are not doing very much about it. I know it was this Sally who cried one day when she wanted to go to Sunday school and was supposed to stay at home and watch the children so the others could go to the cotton patch. And the father said, 'If Sally wants to go to church that badly, there is no need for us to go to the field and keep her at home for we will not make anything anyway.' She is one who always knows her verse in Sunday school and one it is a pleasure to have in our classes. She is usually the one who rounds up all the new children in the camp too."

"The work in leprosy, medically, becomes increasingly challenging, especially as the opportunities of repairing damaged hands and of full rehabilitation of helpless people present themselves, and of course these phases of leprosy treatment have only recently become possible through the more effective control of the infection itself by modern drugs."

Something to Think About

We are all in agreement that the major work of the church is missions—to evangelize the world. Why are we asked to pray for and financially support mission work among people of whom we know very little except that we call them heathens? Christ gave us the commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." Why should this commission have been given? What does this gospel of Christ do to a person? It might be well to also ask ourselves another question. Are we trying to teach men and women the way of Christ as we find it in the Gospels or is it a matter of teaching them how we as Americans do things? Many people do not find a difference between the Christian way of life and the American way of life. Is there a difference? Are we sending missionaries to foreign countries to teach them how we as Americans do things or is the emphasis the way of Christ? As young people we should think hard on this question.

MVS in Europe

The Why of It All

Voluntary Service in Europe since its beginning has been operated under the relief section of the Mennonite Central Committee. It had its beginning for a very practical reason in 1948 when the first Voluntary Service camps were conducted to provide an opportunity for the fifty American students, who toured Europe for four weeks, to contribute some help in a tangible way to the need which existed in such great measure in Germany at that time. These camps were conducted at Hamburg where a war-damaged utilities hall was re-erected for a mental hospital and at Ronneberg where renovation work was done on a castle used for Protestant youth work.

However, besides this practical reason, and the fact that the prevailing need constrained one to help, there were several other reasons for the beginning of Voluntary Service in Europe at that time, reasons of a more ideological nature. For was it not true that the war years and the following years of physical, mental, and spiritual deprivation had left their mark on the people in a way far more devastating than physical decay? Was it not true that young people who had been disillusioned in their hopes for the future were totally embittered and "fed up" with life and all it held for them? Was it not the case that nihilism was filling the vacuum left in the lives of hundreds of thousands of young people by the failure of their god to carry out his promises? You looked back over the years during which material aid had been distributed in vast quantities, when school children were provided daily supplementary rations, when university students queued for handouts of meat and apple butter—and you realized that through this work a new door was opening—a door which led to illness of the soul from which they had not recovered when their bodies were clothed and fed.

The second ideological reason for Voluntary Service was a conviction of the need of a demonstration of Christian faith in practice. When one has a Christian experience, it follows that there must be consequent action. Exercise in the Christian life is as food to the body. Since this aspect of Christianity was practically unknown in Germany, even among professing Christians, a need was felt to introduce the idea of service. Voluntary Service was envisioned as "the" service through which this extra help could be given, at least to the young people. It was to be a proving ground for the Christianity which we had to sell. Theory was not lacking and long hours of discussion without result were customary. Not more theory was needed, but a demonstration of the validity of biblical Christianity. Young people, even agnostics, skeptics, and atheists were to be given the chance to join in a service project and to observe Christian faith in action. In an early publicity folder appeared the following: "This movement is rooted in the belief that the true confession of the Christian faith issues in Christian discipleship, in a way of life dedicated to active love and service, which negatively implies rejection of coercion and war in human relationships."

Each year since 1948 four-week summer camps were conducted. Members of the American student tour and MCC personnel always formed the core of campers. Camps were always international in character. From 1948 to the present 43 summer camps were conducted in Germany, Italy, France, Belgium, Switzerland, and Holland with an approximate total of 1,000 participants. Projects included the erection of a building in a girl's home in Frankfurt, erection of one house in a refugee settlement in Westhofen and helping families to homestead in Zweibruecken. The latter was the first "caravan" camp. This was an experiment with a continuing camp, i. e., one which stayed intact throughout the year and moved from place to place according to needs. The caravan moved to Holland during the tragic flood conditions and is still there on a clean-up mission.

During 1951 the Voluntary Service administration made a change. If Voluntary Service was to become something permanent in Europe, it must be turned over to indigenous leadership. If it could capture their interest and support, it would be a substantial boon to Mennonite youth work in Europe. Consequently, deputation visits were made to the churches in Holland, France, and Switzerland, as well as Germany, with the result that a new organization was formed under the name of Mennonite Voluntary Service with an administrational council composed of one representative each from Holland, Germany, Switzerland, France, and America. These representatives took upon themselves the responsibility of promoting the Voluntary Service concept among their young people and also soliciting support to carry through the medium of the VS secretary (appointed by the council), who plans and directs the Mennonite Voluntary Service work in Europe.

At Kiel I was present for the dedication of the chapel. I was stirred by these words: "May the spirit of love and sacrifice demonstrated by the young people who built this chapel always remain among us as a living tribute to those who came from far and near in the name of Christ to render us this help.

MVS Excerpts

A Working Hope

An international camp is certainly an excellent tool for world understanding. Hope for world toleration is being expressed in these camps. They are such a great success because of one common fellowship in God. This common belief is not a static force; it is working in the hands and minds of the individuals present.

A day's activity usually began at six o'clock in the early morning. If we listen very closely we can hear the rustling of hay and straw. Then, a yawn or so with good morning being said in many languages. Just take any language. . .that's right; you have the idea of an international camp. After a few mad struggles with the cold water by two's, three's, and four's you cautiously find your way through the woods and meadow to a skating cabin where breakfast is served. After a loaf of bread, more or less, you walk quickly through the business section of the village to the site of the church. Then the shovels, saws, hammers, and trowels begin to sound through the misty atmosphere. The clapping sound you hear is the sound of bricks as they fly through the air from one set of hands to another. The bricks moved very rythmically; they had the beat of many melodic tunes. Occasionally there was a thud or splash of mud because of a lost chord or an absent-minded player, but work continued.

When the dinner bell rings at 12, you slip out of your muddy boots into dry shoes, then to the skating cabin for lunch. After a few echoes of "Pass the hail stones and baby paste," "May I serve you?" "This is good for your eyes," and "May I use your knife?"... You were off to work again. The work began after Bill, the Dutch master, rang the bell. The sound of work was so great it usually attracted the attention of many community people. If it was not this, it could have been our appearance. They would stand around the site of the church with astonished looks on their faces, wondering how a group of strangers could accomplish so much. The greatest amazement was the idea of international people working so happily together. The town people usually gave many helping hands, too.

After another four hours of work and a few snaps of shutters, a line of two's, three's, and four's could be seen weaving their way back to the barn and the skating cabin. There a greater struggle was enacted because longer time was spent at the water faucets. When the mud and mortar had been removed many would sit mending blisters and worn-out finger tips contracted during the day's activities. Then Jan said, "Everyone take a seat"—he's our camp leader. Oh! a nice, hot meal!

Now evening devotions are through, dishes washed, and water carried. We are either playing games, singing, discussing, or preparing for an evening party. As the old refrain of "Good Night, Ladies" is sounding through the cabin, the fellows find their way back to the hayloft. The day has ended. Everyone is sleeping, dreaming pleasant thoughts. You see, it was a happy day.

It was a very enriching experience to have witnessed such a relationship. The campers from various countries gave us a broader scope for world understanding. The Mennonites from Holland certainly appreciated our laboring, giving a part of their thankful heart in appreciation. As all campers, I am sure we also left a part of our heart in the church and community. This voluntary work camp is a great organization for a workshop of international citizenship. God has certainly worked through us in making it more than an idea.

Mainz Summer Camp

Dear Friends,

We are very glad that we can tell you something about our work on the project in Mainz. In this town is an Evangelical building organization which is constructing a settlement of about fifty houses for refugees. We helped by building some of them. First we helped dig a basement. All digging was done by hand and the dirt removed in wheelbarrows. One of our boys said that these wheelbarrows dated from the Romans because they were so old. Later on we used a conveyor belt. We also helped build the basement walls.

We are now so far that the whole cellar is finished. In about two-and-one-half weeks the roof will be finished and usually when the roof is on the house there is a celebration. The building organization gives a supper in honor of the workmen who built the house. We are invited to this supper, too.

Since the project is large, the group is working now at several places. Some of us are laying sidewalks, several are working in a neighborhood church and the rest have started to dig another foundation. We find it very interesting as students to work with our hands because this type of work is new for us and this is another way to help our fellow men "in the name of Christ."

From the Austria Camp Diary

Sunday, August 29

Indeed, I was thoroughly impressed at the willingness of you boys and girls to undergo almost any hardship for the good of a really excellent cause. I'm sure you all come from homes where there is at least some degree of comfort. It has always seemed to me that the religion of words is pretty meaningless unless backed up by the religion of deeds, and here I saw practical religion at work.

For what it is worth, my opinion is that you lads and lassies will never do a more worth-while job than this if you all live to be ninety. I'm considerably older than any of you and I've been around quite a bit. I've seen a cynical and skeptical attitude toward life in many places, even among young people, a kind of mental sickness for which most folks cannot be blamed.

However, bad times have existed throughout history but, as always, the future is in the hands, not of the skeptic, but of the dreamer, the idealist; the man who, despite every setback, maintains faith in himself and his fellow men; the man who refuses to despair. It is on such people as these—and you, my friends—that the fate of an unborn generation depends.

When man really ceases to hope, he'll be a dead letter, a lost cause, a parasite in a world which challenges the right of any species to supremacy. Divided he becomes weaker and weaker, united he has it within his power to create a world of love and harmony. And this he can only do by following the lead of such as you twenty-two young people in a mosquito-ridden backwoods of Alpine Austria where nationality is of no consequence and kindness is the dominating factor.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Harry Martens, business manager of Bethel College, returned Wednesday evening, Jan. 26, from a trip to Mennonite communities in the Pacific northwest.

Martens and Erwin Goering, public relations director of the college, visited churches in Montana, Idaho, Washington, and Oregon in the interest of Bethel College, with emphasis upon the building and development program. Besides visiting in churches and homes, the men also attended the Pacific District Mennonite Ministers Conference in Portland, Oregon, and took occasion to visit the University of Washington at Seattle where they observed a men's residence hall, recently completed. Mr. Martens was highly pleased with the interest in Bethel College evident in these communities.

Erwin Goering continued to California where he is meeting with church groups of the General Conference Mennonite Church in presenting information and needs concerning Bethel College.

Pleading with his hearers to work for a more effective United Nations with responsible power, Norman Cousins, speaking at Memorial Hall, said that the role of the United States in world affairs is crucial today.

"We are challenged to become the champions of the human family," said the editor of the Saturday Review.

Speaking in a seriousness indicating his missionary devotion to the cause of strengthening world government as the only alternative to anarchy Mr. Cousins emphasized that "our crisis is a total crisis. We have today no agency to act in behalf of the human race. The nation fully sovereign has become the enemy of man with the result that we are facing total annihilation."

Drawing from his experiences on his many world tours and his personal contact with the tragedy of modern war in Korea he pointed out that the crosses in Korea might not have been planted there had the United States not vetoed an effective United Nations in 1945.

Referring to the present Formosan situation in the question period following the lecture Mr. Cousins said that any action by the major nations today may lead to war because we operate in a framework of anarchy. He would not admit China into the present U. N. but after such chartered revisions as would make it effective, he said, "we will have difficulty persuading it to come in."

The speaker emphasized that in developing the U. N. as an instrument of world law each individual citizen has a responsible part to play. Our lawmakers must know that the United States will accept the same legal sanctions as we expect of other nations and individuals."

Mr. Cousins was introduced by Pres. D. C. Wedel of the college. Dr. H. A. Fast pronounced the invocation after which the college a cappella choir sang. Following the lecture students and faculty of the college were hosts at a reception and tea for Mr. Cousins in the student union room.

Dorothy Maynor, the internationally famous soprano, will be heard in concert at Bethel College, Feb. 17, at 8:00 p. m. as the third number in the current Memorial Hall Series.

Miss Maynor made her European debut in Rome, March 31, 1950. In Copenhagen she sang a series of three recitals, while in Holland she was heard as soloist with the Municipal Orchestra in Maastricht and in recital in Amsterdam and the Hague. In Holland the comment was made that "You forget what she is singing so transfixed are you by the beautiful tones, the temperament, and the dramatic clashes of expression and interpretation."

She also sang a series of concerts in Stockholm and in Oslo as well as in Paris. Here her critics said, "The audience, at first astonished, then captivated, next conquered, finally bowed before such perfection."

Music was a part of Dorothy Maynor's life from earliest childhood. She knew the spirituals and folk music of her people before she could talk. One of three children of the Methodist minister in Norfolk, Va., she helped her father build his struggling parish by singing in the church choir.

As a student in Hampton Institute she sang in the celebrated Hampton choir. From here she went to Westminister Choir School where she studied under John Finley Williamson. She has since filled engagements with the New York Philharmonic, the Chicago, Philadelphia, and Cleveland orchestras and made many trans-continental tours.

Millions of people have heard her through radio broadcasts, while RCA-Victor has recorded many of her songs.

In private life she is the wife of the Rev. Shelby Rooks, pastor of New York's St. James Presbyterian Church.

Dr. W. H. Hohmann is spending a week at the Canadian Mennonite Bible College, Winnipeg, where he is conducting music clinics and advising C. M. B. C. on various phases of music in the college curriculum.

Dr. H. A. Fast left for Winnipeg, Friday, Feb. 4. He spoke at various churches and attended the meeting of the Canadian Mennonite Relief Committee at Winnipeg.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

A Men's Quartet from the Denver 1-W Unit gave a musical program in chapel last week. Those participating were Dean Kuhns, Ken Kaufman, Isaac Klassen, and John Wiens.

A group of Christian Youth Volunteer Students gave two programs in Minnesota, Sunday, January 23. They appeared in the Gospel Mennonite Church of Mountain Lake and in the Mennonite Church at Butterfield. The same day a second group gave a program in the Zion Mennonite Church of Bridgewater.

Choir, a 60 voice group under the direction of Paul J. Christiansen. The program will be given in the Auditorium of Pioneer Hall, February 19 at 8 o'clock.

President von Riesen attended the meeting of the South Dakota Council of Churches which met at Sioux Falls January 26 and 27.

An invitation was extended to the Board of Directors to visit school for a day. They accepted and spent January 24 visiting classes in the morning. At noon they were luncheon guests at the Dining Hall. They spent the first part of the afternoon in the business office and the latter part they sat in at a faculty meeting where a discussion of the school's testing program was held.

The College Dramatics Department is working on a 15th century morality play "The Summoning of Everyman." The play will be given February 23.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Stanley Bohn gave the morning message at the Woodlawn Mennonite Church, January 30, 1955. This was another in the series of Sunday morning sermons given by members of the graduating class.

The Sunday evening service was again devoted to the School of Missions series. The 6:00 o'clock sandwich hour was followed by a discussion on "Nationalism and the Indigenous Church." The discussion was led by Edward Burkhalter, missionary to India, now on furlough. Mrs. Burkhalter spoke at the 7:30 service. The meeting closed with the showing of films on the work of evangelism done in India by the Burkhalters and the native workers.

Mrs. S. F. Pannabecker led the Wednesday evening prayer group. Her meditation and the prayers offered to our Heavenly Father concerned our mission activities in the Americas and throughout all the world. A special prayer of thanksgiving was offered by the pastor of the Woodlawn Mennonite Church, to express our praise and thanksgiving for the final payment on the indebtedness of the church which was made earlier that day.

The Women's Missionary Society met at the Mission Center on Friday, February 4, in the afternoon.

A Convocation Service is being planned for Feb. 18. Professor Howard Charles of Goshen Biblical Seminary will be the guest speaker.

MCC News Notes

MCC PRESENTS TESTIMONY OPPOSING DRAFT EXTENSION

A statement of concern expressing opposition to the extension of the draft was presented by the Mennonite Central Committee to the Armed Services Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives at a public hearing Feb. 2.

The testimony was presented by C. N. Hostetter, Jr., MCC chairman. The Peace Section, which made arrangements for Mennonite and Brethren in Christ Church testimony to be represented, recognized that such a statement would not necessarily prevent extension of the draft but felt it necessary to express the concern of nonresistant people regarding this principle.

Hearings on this bill which would extend the draft for four years were held by the House Armed Services Committee Feb. 1 and 2. Opposition testimony was presented on the afternoon of Feb. 2. Other groups presenting testimony opposing the principle of the draft extension included the Brethren, Friends, the National Council Against Conscription, and the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

Testimony presented by government officials favoring extension of the draft brought out an interpretation of the universal features of the present draft law. It was pointed out that the intention of the law is to require service of every physically able man.

Following the hearings, the House Armed Services Committee approved the amendment to extend the draft for four years and sent the bill (H. R. 3005) to the House. A roll call vote on the bill was expected on Tuesday, Feb. 8.

Hearings on the reserves and UMT bill (H. R. 2967) were scheduled to begin Thursday, Feb. 10. This bill proposes a series of amendments to the present draft act and contains the Eisenhower Administration proposal for a six months' basic training program for young men between 18½ and 19.

The Peace Section is making arrangements to present testimony objecting to the passage of this measure. Plans are for H. S. Bender, chairman of the Peace Section, to present this testimony.

Persons concerned about the passage of H. R. 2967 are urged to express their views to their Congressmen as soon as possible. It appears that this bill will be moved through the House rapidly. It should also be pointed out that the most effective opposition to this reserves and UMT bill must be made in the House where there is more opposition to this measure than in the Senate.

Neither the House draft extension or reserves and UMT bill offer any amendment to the present provisions for conscientious objectors.

At the time of this reporting no action had been taken by the Senate Armed Services Committee. There were indications, however, that hearings would soon begin and that they would possibly be based on an American Legion bill containing UMT proposals introduced in the past. This bill proposes that conscientious objectors be required to perform civilian training or work in lieu of basic training. Information from reliable sources indicates that this latter proposal does not have the Eisenhower administration support nor is it likely to have support in Congress. This bill contains no proposal to change the present provision for conscientious objectors who come under the 24-month draft.

The Peace Section is also planning to persent testimony to the Senate Armed Services Committee when this group considers the draft extension and reserves and UMT bills. At this reporting bills containing the Eisenhower proposals for these two matters had not been introduced in the Senate.

Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in His holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully.

Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, my strength, and my redeemer.

Jottings

—First Church, Upland, Calif.: The significant part of our Christmas program was the dedication of our special offering for the purchase of surplus food released by the government under special legislation last summer. The food will be distributed abroad by our Mennonite Central Committee. This project, called "Operation Now," in co-operation with the local community effort, was started in our church by the Sunday school. Classes, other organizations, and members gave a total of $1,567.25. This money will pay for the release and distribution of four and a half carloads of food worth $31,000. The first guest speakers of the new year were our MCC VS workers from Coalinga, Carl and Marilyn Wohlagemuth, and Kathleen Janzen. New officers and board members elected at our annual meeting were installed during our worship service Jan. 13: Fred Yoder, pres.; Paul Schowalter, v. pres.; Frieda Schmidt, sec.; G. Schmidt, treas.; Leonard Wiebe, deacon; Albert Lichti, trustee; Dorothy Hirschler, board of education member; Esther Evers, C. E. supt. Our pastor attended the Pacific District Ministers' Conference at Portland.—Corr.

—First Church, Aberdeen, Idaho: "I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and fortress: my God; in him will I trust" Ps. 91:2. On Dec. 1, we had our annual church business meeting. The Men's Brotherhood rendered a program on Universal Bible Sunday. In connection with our communion service on Dec. 26, the ordination of the newly elected deacon, Waldo Friesen, was also held. Many of our students home for the holidays could share with us the blessing of these various activities. Harley King of Filer, Idaho, was the speaker at the young people's banquet. He had an inspiring message for all present. Recently our missionaries to Japan, Paul and LaVerne Boschman, served us in our evening worship service with a tape recording and some pictures, giving us an idea of the work there. John Thiessen, Executive Secretary of our Board of Missions, spent three days with us, and laid on our hearts the pressing need of our prayers and gifts for this great work. Erwin Goering and Harry Martens, traveling in the interests of Bethel College, had charge of our evening service, Jan. 9. Mr. Goering spoke at the Bethel Fellowship banquet held Monday evening. Our pastor, Rudolf Toews, attended the ministers' conference at Portland, Oregon. Alvin Funk, newly appointed trustee, also attended the committee sessions. Mrs. Agatha Toevs commemorated her 90th birthday Jan. 8. She is the oldest member of our congregation and a charter member. Two of our members have been hospitalized recently: Mrs. B. A. Burge suffered injuries in an auto accident, and Miss Wilma Harder, returned missionary from Africa, underwent a major operation. We are glad to report that both have recovered.—Corr —North Star Church, Drake, Sask., Canada: Funeral services for the late David P. Bartel were held on Jan. 26; Paul Schroeder officiating. The Sunday school and young people have purchased a projector and screen.—Mrs. Milton Ewert, Corr.

—First Church, Nappanee, Ind.: William Keeney spent Jan. 16-18 here in the interests of Bluffton College. He spoke in morning and evening services, Jan 16. On Jan. 23, Gerald Stucky preached the morning sermon and in the evening he showed pictures of the work in Colombia, South America. On Jan. 30 the Youth Fellowship gave the evening program to which they invited the juniors and adults. The program was followed by a period of fellowship. The finishing of our building is slowly being accomplished. We much appreciate its facilities.—Elva May Schrock, Corr.

—Tabor Church, Newton, Kans.: Farewell services for Miss Elma Voth, missionary to South America, were held Tuesday evening, Jan. 11. Elma showed pictures and brought the message. An offering was taken and sent to the Gospel Missionary Union, the board of missions under which Elma has been employed. A social hour was enjoyed, following this program. A Voluntary Service group, composed of approximately 25 young people has been organized. This group has spent several Sunday afternoons presenting programs in white and colored children's homes and convalescent homes in Wichita.—Mrs. Roland Schmidt, Corr.

—Lorraine Ave. Church, Wichita, Kan.: We welcomed the new year with reverence and prayer at twelve midnight, following a watch night party held in the church basement. Jan. 2, our church observed the Lord's Supper, after consecration services for five children and reception of five new members. Our new members are: Mrs. Kenneth Andrews from Immanuel Baptist Church of this city; Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Frey; and Mr. and Mrs. Adam Mueller, all of the Bethel College Church. This brings our total membership to 344. An illustrated lecture on the subject of European MCC work was presented on the evening of Jan. 16, by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Loewen, who have been worshipping with us since moving to Wichita. They spent two and a half years with the MCC in Switzerland. It is customary in our church to announce the birth of new babies in our families with rosebuds placed on the piano the following Sunday morning. On Jan. 2, a rosebud announced the birth on Dec. 23, of a daughter, Sharon Kay, to Mr. and Mrs. Alton Penner. On Jan. 16, a rosebud welcomed the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Franz; little Sherrill Lynn was born on Jan. 10. The Jan. 30 rosebud was for Randy Joe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Waldo Pankratz, who was born Jan. 29.—Mrs. Emry A. Ruth, Corr.

—Grace Church, Lansdale, Pa.: On Jan. 16 we celebrated the 25th anniversary of our church. It was a wonderful day in the life of the church. We not only reviewed the past with all its blessings but had the privilege of laying the cornerstone for our new church building. Daniel J. Unruh, our first pastor, who is now living in Kansas, came east for the occasion and preached at both the morning and evening services. At the evening service several of the charter members took part, refreshing our memories regarding the way God had led in the early days of the church. The laying of the cornerstone, which took place at the new building, was in charge of our new pastor, Elmer R. Friesen. He was assisted by Daniel J. Unruh and A. S. Rosenberger, president of the Eastern District Conference. On Jan 23 five new members were added to the membership, by transfer from other churches.—Corr.

—Deep Run Church, Bedminster, Pa.: The Youth Fellowship presented a program at the Upper Milford Church Sunday evening, Jan. 9. The Excelsion Class sponsored a Pennsylvania Dutch program recently with Rev. Wilbur Trexler, Perkasie, Pa., as speaker. The Eastern District Conference Workshop sponsored by the Young People's Union was held here Jan. 22 and 23. A special offering was taken for the Northeast Philadelphia Project Jan. 30. Irene Bishop, a relief worker in Europe for seven years, spoke at the Women's Missionary meeting for January, showing pictures of her work. Flowers were placed on the altar Jan. 30 by the family, in memory of Willard Atkinson who was killed in an auto accident one year ago.—Corr.

—Hebron Church, Buhler, Kansas: Our congregation has donated money to buy 120 CARE packages. We have also given $480 to buy blankets for relief, all of which has been sent in to the General Conference Headquarters. Quite a few want to adopt their "CARE" families without telling them so in advance and send them a package every month and correspond with them regularly.—Mrs. Arthur D. Neufeldt, Corr.

—Calvary Church, Barlow, Oregon: The men's quartet presented a program at Meadowbrook Jan. 9. The Missionary Society met Jan. 12 and Jan. 26 for all day quilting meetings. John Thiessen spoke Jan. 17. Harry Martens spoke Jan. 21. The first teachers' training class was held Jan. 15 at 2 p.m. with 30 present. These are based on the Moody Bible Institute filmstrips. These meetings will be held the second Sunday in the month through August. Our boys are playing in the Canby Church basketball league. Pastor Roth attended the ministers' conference in Portland on Jan. 18, 19, and 20. The young adults monthly party was held Jan. 28 with Ronnie Camps and James Howards as hosts.—Mrs. F. J. Kauffman, Corr.

1-W's Support Conference Work

As a Conference we support 1-W's. About three-fourths of the $40,000 budget supports those in VS and PAX, one-fourth is for pastoral visits and helping those in Alternative Service.

Not only do 1-W's in Denver, Topeka, and elsewhere generally pay for their own activity expenses but many of them give heartily for missions, relief, and education. Last Thanksgiving we wrote some of our 1-W's for special help on Conference needs. Twenty-five responded immediately with contributions averaging $25, to be divided proportionately for the different causes.

"All 1-W's support all of Conference work," "all Conference congregations support PAX, VS, and Alternative Service through '1-W' offerings." This is the hope of the Board of Christian Service which is responsible for 1-W work in our Conference.

The Reader Says—

Dear Editor:

Your editorial on missions in the February 1 Mennonite impressed me greatly. I wondered how we could better meet our responsibility for these many souls. It came to my mind how a small church carried on its mission program. Their plan helped to support a large number of missionaries.

All members, and children as well, knew every missionary by name and where they were stationed, because in the church was displayed a large world map lighted by small electric light bulbs; red bulbs for full time missionaries and green bulbs for those receiving partial support.

Every member in the church was asked to sign up for which missionary they wished to help support, and I believe also how much they would pledge. These groups then banded together for prayer. They kept in close, personal contact with their missionary, caring for and praying for every need.

This plan might present some problems but I believe they could be worked out. A certain per cent may have to be taken out for office expense, etc.

Maybe a similar plan could be worked out in our Conference. It appealed to me and I offer the suggestion for consideration.

Take from us, O God, all pride and vanity, all boasting and forwardness, and give us the true courage that shows itself by gentleness; the true wisdom that shows itself by simplicity; and the true power that shows itself by modesty; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

1. To work for a Conference unified in Christ.
2. To teach the gospel of Christ effectively.
3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

THE PERIOD OF PENITENCE

Ash Wednesday ushers in the Lenten season. The day had its origin sometime before A.B. 1000, and was designated as a day of penance. The palm leaves blessed on the previous year's Palm Sunday were burned and the ashes used to mark a cross on the forehead of each worshiper as a mark of repentance; hence "ash" Wednesday.

While we no longer repent literally in "sackcloth and ashes," yet it is fitting to have a season of repentance in which we are quite willing to admit our sins, and to ask God's forgiveness. Such confession should go deeper than to simply say, "Sorry, Lord." We are a proud people and not very willing to admit our errors and sins.

But as we enter the season of Lent and consider seriously the suffering Christ endured for our sins, we need to become very humble and very penitent. For our sins hurt God. They also hurt us and bring damage to our souls. By various ways, the Lenten season should bring us to deep repentance and cause us to cry out "God, be merciful to me a sinner." Then Easter will again mean for us renewed life in the risen Lord.

Churches have various ways of preparing worshipers for a deeper spiritual life. One of the common practices is a week of special services to direct the thoughts of the worshipers to Christ, and to their own need of forgiveness. This penitence should first be personal, but also a church, community, and world-wide experience. For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God. But there is forgiveness through Jesus Christ our Lord.

SEEING IS UNDERSTANDING

From the series of articles, "Highlights of Missionary Observations," by Andrew Shelly (who with Mrs. Shelly and Harry Detwiler is on a world mission tour) we note again and again the sentiment expressed that it is simply impossible to convey an adequate picture of what they see and experience. This is the usual experience of those who travel into strange lands.

The descriptive word helps in giving an impression; the picture makes it still clearer; but it is the first hand experience that sets the picture in its proper focus. We may hear about a certain place, see pictures of it, but the actual seeing is still different.

All life is like that. Firsthand experience is different than just hearing someone else tell about it. To the one who is not a Christian can never be fully conveyed what it means to be a Christian; it must be experienced firsthand. The claims of a Christian seem foolishness to one who has no personal experience. To experience is to know.

THE WORLD DAY OF PRAYER

The first Friday in Lent has come to be recognized in the churches around the world as the "World Day of Prayer." The theme this year is "Abide in Me," certainly a very fitting theme for this troubled age. The prayers during the day will be backed by offerings for the support of missions. Last year this day was observed in 119 countries throughout the world. It is encouraging to be a part of this chain of prayer reaching around the globe.

We remember the words of Jesus near the close of His earthly career: "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." So before praying for missions there is the supreme need to abide in Him. For unless we abide in Him and His words in us we have no assurance that what we ask will even be heard, let alone be accomplished.

Might it be that we have been feverishly praying for missions without having put ourselves fully into His hands? The words may have been beautifully framed, there may have been an apparent fervor, but if we were not abiding in Him and He in us our interest has not been sincere.

"Lord, teach us to pray."

LET THE CHURCH BE THE CHURCH

The church needs to declare the full gospel. It is not a sounding board for all sorts of passing ideas or temporary reforms. It is not to spend its major time trying to change political trends, nor is it to take all its energy to tell only of some happy state after death.

The church needs to proclaim the gospel for the kind of world in which we are now living. The good news of the redemption through Christ, and of the new life in Him, must get through and influence the whole activity of man. The spiritual need and emphasis must ever be uppermost. But the church must also proclaim the ways in which this new life in Christ will express itself in the lives of individuals.

The church must be a Voice and not an Echo. It must proclaim and not merely criticize. It must tell forth the glad tidings in Christ and not merely talk of the present dismal outlook. It must challenge to action and not merely advise people to relax. It must ever deal with fundamentals and not mere surface trends. It must deal with the eternal and not only the temporal. But it must relate the eternal to the present; the ideal to the actual; the basic depths to the daily life.

In short, it must touch life at every point with the joys and absolute claims of Christ upon the total life. To do less is to fall short of its great task. The church must be the CHURCH.

What's Happening on UMT?

CURTIS JANZEN

Raymond Wilson, Washington representative of the Friends Committee on National Legislation, reported to a group of interested Christian people in Chicago recently on the current proposed legislation having to do with conscription and military service. Separate proposals to be presented before the adjournment of the present session of Congress would indicate that the objective of the military in America is to gain control of the life of every young man for a period of six to ten years. Of the three proposals to be presented, the bill extending certain sections of the current draft law will be the first to come to a vote. Although Selective Service as such does not expire, its authority to draft would expire this June if the law were not renewed. It is proposed to extend this authority four more years and to extend the doctor's draft for two years.

A second bill to come before Congress will be one intended to put more compulsion in the sections of the law having to do with reserves. This would require reservists to attend drills and failure to participate in these reserve activities would subject the reservists to re-induction in the regular military forces.

Approximately 100,000 men each year would be given the opportunity to enlist for six months of basic training plus a seven and one-half year reserve period. From the requirements of the conscription act or the UMT provision there would be virtually no deferments or exemptions. One law or the other would take each young man sometime after reaching the eighteen and a half year age. Variations would include such provisions as a shorter period in the reserves for a longer initial period in the regular services. The laws with regard to the reservist requirements and UMT will likely come before Congress in latter April or May. At this point no mention has been made of change in regard to CO status. Presently the CO has no requirements to fulfill above and beyond his initial two year period of service.

As a commentary on the attitudes of American people, one Congressman had reminded Raymond Wilson that certain of his constituents were more concerned about the price of corn than whether their sons were drafted. This might be a key to many of our feelings. We certainly all profess that we want peace. Yet how much does our interest cool when we are reminded that the price of corn may drop or that wages would be lower and jobs and business harder to find.

Brief mention was made during the meeting of several recent national polls which have indicated that 63-78 per cent of the American people are in favor of UMT. It was noted that in all these polls the alternatives as far as draft-age men were concerned were between the uncertainty of conscription and the certainty of UMT provisions. There is good reason to believe that young people would have accepted another alternative, aside from the two military ones, would it have been presented.

In line with this the consensus of the group was that it should be the work of the peace churches and peace groups to confront the American people with the facts of how far the U. S. has gone in becoming military, and reminding them of the consequences if further steps are taken in that direction. There should be peace education directed at the grass roots level, to young people's and adult groups, discussing militarism and its effects as well as some positive programs for peace.

Raymond Wilson felt that none of the peace groups or churches was well-enough organized to hinder the extension of the draft law. Letters, phone calls, and visits to Congressmen might, be effective in determining how each one will vote on the issues.

Between now and the time these proposals come before Congress, we as a Conference and churches and individuals need to be alive with a program that will confront our fellow Americans with the issues. Action need not be and should not be confined to the particular issue but should be a call to remind Americans of American ideals and principles, and particularly here whether we want military training to become part of the accepted way of American life. UMT would mean that any plans a young man makes would be subject to the overriding demand of the military. A New York judge in trying several young men for assault and murder raised the question whether training for killing in war was not a first step in training for murder at home. Those who attended the Chicago meeting committed themselves to further activity along this line. They volunteered to contact community leaders such as school superintendents, PTA chairmen, labor and business leaders, ministers and youth group leaders with the hope of organizing discussion meetings on approaches to peace. Others will go out to show one or both of the Quaker films dealing with the subject. "A Time for Greatness" has already been used by several Mennonite groups.

Thus, action is needed on two levels—at the grass roots an idealistic campaign to get people to see the issues; and contacts with Congressmen to influence their vote. If we really want peace, we need peaceful methods to obtain it. If we really want peace, we need to put forth ceaseless effort in working for it. This is not our time to be silent.

Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile.

A Christian Adventure

MRS. CARL KREIDER*

After almost three years of being introduced as the wife of the College of Liberal Arts Dean at International Christian University in Japan I can anticipate the question which invariably follows the introduction. Facing me the inquiry is made, "And what do you do?" My husband's title defines the nature of his work. But mine? That was less obvious and needed explaining.

At first the question made me uneasy. What was I expected to do? Soon I discovered that most missionary wives taught English classes or at least had a conversation class or two. And I had neither. But the question wasn't meant as a criticism; it was only making conversation. I was doing what was expected of me. As a newcomer to Japan it was my first duty to help establish our home.

During those early months I was little more than a shock absorber for my husband and our three energetic children. Everything was different for all five of us. During the day that role seemed demanding and all-important. But in moments of evening reflection I was almost ashamed of that limited task at ICU. Did it really help achieve the big things if each family tackled new situations with a sense of humor and adventure? Not being entirely sure that the answer was affirmative I sought comfort in the events of the day. Yes, I had friendly "conversations" with the meat man, the vegetable man, with Sashida-san, the carpenter, and with several students who happened to pass my porch. For in spite of our language handicap I was sure they knew I liked them. That made our relationship warm and creative.

But my art fell too short. My reach seemed confined to the four walls of our apartment. Then one day Mr. Awaji, a Japanese public school teacher, startled me by remarking that he frequently observed our children on the train on their devious route from the campus to the American School downtown. I gasped. I knew they were conspicuous—blonde, blue-eyed children always are in the Orient. He sensed my motherly apprehension and hastened to assure me that they were buoyant and polite—a credit (at least when he saw them) to the University and our home. Perhaps my reach had dimensions I wasn't aware of.

This sort of vicarious reaching served the early days on the campus. Then, subtly as a child outgrows his clothes, I found my way directly to students who enjoyed coming to our house for the sharing of ideas on a great variety of topics. Whether we discussed politics, religion, science, or literature I was amazed at the serious reading they had done and the articulate way they presented their impressions. Others come to sing by the piano and another group has learned to love our modest collection of records. We have been inspired by our mutual sharing. But these students came in response to a specific invitation. The question in my mind remained—would they ever feel free enough to ask to come? Or still better—just to come?

That question was answered several months ago when three girls, a Japanese, a Chinese, and an American, dropped in to return a book one had borrowed. Without hesitation they asked if I would have time to pray and study the Bible with them each week. I was delighted with the idea; in fact, I had been waiting for just that sort of opportunity. The fact that I wasn't a Bible teacher didn't seem to matter; actually, they wanted a layman's thoughts. As we read the Psalms they asked each other repeatedly, "What does this say to you?" "How can this help me with my problems?"

In perfect frankness two girls told of the lonely experience of being the only Christian in their family. They long for spiritual fellowship to strengthen their difficult choice "to walk in newness of life." I will be happy if I can help them realize the truth of Donald B. Aldrich's declaration that "the right choice may be the lonely choice, but it never leaves one altogether alone."

They also find fellowship and guidance in our home library which is open to them. In addition to our books of general interest we have one collection which was sent especially for them by a friend in Indiana who influenced her cell group to make this practical love offering to ICU students. One student tells another and the books keep moving. Some are devotional classics. A number are various translations of the Bible. Others are biographies of Christian heroes throughout history. Some are introductions to practical Christianity. All are nontechnical but intellectually respectable. In these books (this type is rare in Japanese) they find the replies to their deepest questions and the answer to their inner cravings.

These friendly encounters with students are often casual and brief. They rush off to a class, a committee meeting or the tyrannical late bus which starts them on their several-hour trip home for a late meal. But fortunately it isn't like that for all students any more. Just two days ago two new dormitories were opened permitting 140 young people to experience their long-hoped-for dream of living in a dormitory where democracy and Christian brotherhood can come alive. Their eyes are bright with anticipation. Only one thought blights their joy. They know that 210 other worthy students are denied this privilege because there aren't enough rooms. In moments like these I encourage them to keep their candles of faith burning brightly. Surely there are dedicated people in America who will make dormitories for ICU one of their major "concerns."

Sharing in One Thousand Challenges

ELDA SPRUNGER

Suppose you had never seen a printed item of any kind. Then someone handed you a black covered book. How would you react? What would you do with it? Turn it upside down perhaps, then sideways and every way looking at it with a curious expression. Then with a blank look you might hand it back indicating, "What is it? What's it for?"

Stretching a story for emphasis? No. We told the experience of a missionary Bible translator with an illiterate Mexican tribeswoman. And no doubt similar stories could be duplicated.

Wycliffe Bible Translators play a vital part in reaching the one thousand tribes that have never heard the Word of Life. In Africa alone some four hundred dialects have not yet been reduced to writing. What a challenge to become a Bible translator!

From our General Conference, Loren and Mary Johnston Nussbaum have accepted a share of this challenge as their life's work. In May, 1954, they sailed for Liberia, a small Negro republic in West Africa, to open a new work as Bible translators.

As most of you already know, Loren and Mary have been loaned for the time being by the General Conference Board of Missions to the American Bible Society. The Society assumes all their expenses and personal allowances. The tentative plan with the American Bible Society is that the Nussbaums may be sent to our Congo field periodically to advise on Bible translation work in our field.

Their going to Liberia added a new endeavor to the work of our denomination, one in which we do well to participate in order to advance the cause of missions.

Since arriving on the field the Nussbaums have received a shipment of two tons of Bibles with the responsibility to distribute them. Another shipment included 170 Bible Talking Records. These records are released daily over a radio broadcast, of fifteen minutes duration, for the benefit of the blind and those unable to read.

Mary and Loren Nussbaum

A recent news letter from Loren and Mary includes the following interesting paragraph. Quote: "We live in a part of town where many of the Native Peoples from all the different tribes (over 20) have thrown up temporary homes; they've come to the big city to seek their fortunes! In the paths that skirt our house on four sides practically every language is heard. So it is easy to find informants whenever we need them. It's not likely that we'll get to work on any one language enough to learn to speak it, but we will become somewhat acquainted with those where Bible translation work is in progress. A sizable population speaks English and so we are launching a distribution program to reach these people. Just as in the States, there are many who have Bibles but don't read them, and so another part of our work is to encourage the use of the Bible. We have been presented to the President, Wm. V. S. Tubman, and he assured us of his keen interest and concern that more Bibles be circulated and read in Liberia.

"We covet your prayer assistance. We can't do the work alone. Your part is just as important as ours. In the past years as you have prayed there have been definite answers." Thus stated, and while still in the States, Loren gave the prayer challenge to his home church.

The Prior Claim, 16 mm. Color, 45 minutes. Rental $20.00. Moody Bible Institute, 820 N. LaSalle St., Chicago 10, Illinois.

By comparison of the activities of man with those of some of the insects, fish, birds, reptiles, and mammals this film shows that in God's creation lower animals are performing activities that it took the genius of man centuries to discover. In excellent color photography the film shows insect traps of plants, the trap door spider fashioning its door, the chameleon catching food with its long tongue, spiders catching their food, fish shooting living things for food which are above the water, etc. Good views are shown of a diver establishing a new record of 4,500 feet below the water, and then a spider is shown taking bubbles of air below water and building its nest there. At the close the commentator remarks that God has a claim to man through creation, but also through the giving of His son for man's redemption.

This is an unusually good film, one of the best. While definitely Christian in tone, it is also an excellent nature film. While younger children will not grasp the full significance of the message, the picture will interest them. It is an excellent presentation for young people and adults.

There is a 192 page book The Prior Claim available for 75 cents which discusses the material in the film. This book would be helpful for a discussion following the showing of the film.

Is the Negro Happy?

"A happy person is a satisfied one. The Negro is not happy. He is far from being satisfied with his lot in life. He has his glad moments, and he makes the most of them, but they are only moments. He can never experience normal happiness as long as he lives within the shadows of racial prejudice and discrimination. He can never be reasonably happy until he is fully accepted as a man among men," wrote the editor of "Ebony" magazine, a Negro publication, under the title, "Is the Negro Happy?"

In another paragraph the editorial continues, "Everything the Negro does, everything that he has is predicated upon his race. That which his white brothers take for granted is always a question mark in his mind. When he takes a vacant seat in a streetcar where there is no law against Negroes sitting where they wish, he is wondering to himself if the White person beside him is going to get up and leave. When he applies for a job he is not only afraid that he may not be qualified or that there may be no openings, but whether or not the employer is prejudiced against Negroes. He knows from bitter experience that if his color counts, his qualifications will not. If he is driving cross-country and stops at a motel for lodging, he knows that the vacant sign does not mean that he will be accommodated. Nor does going into a restaurant mean that he will eat. Having the price of a home is no assurance that he can buy the house that is for sale. A jobless man, a tired man, a hungry man, or a homeless man is not a happy one."

The writer concludes the article by pointing out what it is that will make the Negro happy. Again I wish to quote.

"Although the common conception that all Negroes are happy is a preposterous one, the saying that it takes very little to make them happy is quite true. All the Negro wants from his fellow American is to be treated like other men; to be given the same opportunities and to be accorded the same courtesies enjoyed by members of other races. He seeks neither favors nor charity.

"He wants to be allowed to exercise the same rights of citizenship exercised by other native-born sons and given to naturalized persons from other countries. He wants to shoulder his share of the responsibilities that attend citizenship.

"To make the Negro happy is to allow him to cast his ballot in all 48 states, to give him the privilege of sending his children to schools his taxes help to support. He wants to be free to walk in city parks and swim at city beaches. He wants to be able to worship God in the First Baptist Church as well as in the Second and Third.

"These rights were given to him by the 14th and 15th Amendments. He asks only that he be allowed to exercise them."

Flashes of Thought

A Common Experience

Walter Gering

It happened right here in our own state, just a few miles from our very door. Had some one told me that it had occurred out in some far-off country I might have expected it. But surely not here in our own area. And yet—it was true!

For over six years they had lived in the same section of the city, only four blocks apart. They walked the same streets and often passed each other's home on their way to and from work. They conducted their business affairs at the same community bank, one was a teller, the other a depositor. The same grocery store supplied them with their daily needs: one of them was a clerk the other was the customer. Even the same church touched their lives; the one was a teacher in the Sunday school, the daughter of the other was a pupil. So it was that for six years their lives criss-crossed in numerous ways. Yet in all those years never once was there anything more than a mere casual passing of the day. Each went about minding his own affairs.

Then suddenly it happened. In one moment everything was changed. Excited visits were made; family experiences were shared and a bond of love was established which thrilled their souls. What once had been mere casual recognition now became intimate fellowship. The whole world had suddenly changed for both of them. You see, they suddenly discovered that they were brothers. For thirty-six years they had lived without any knowledge of each other, separated by many miles. Six years they had lived in the same block, utterly ignorant of the fact. Now came this breath-taking experience; they were brothers.

So it was in those ancient days as the great old saint of God looked upon his kinsman. Strife, bitterness, and resentments were causing divisions within the household. Sooner or later the smouldering flames would break forth in the open. In those moments there came those divine words: "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between thee and me — for we be brethren."

How often we have the same experiences. For years we go about our affairs, rubbing elbows with our neighbors, totally unaware of our kinship. Then in some soul stirring experience we see them for the first time; we are brothers indeed. And in that moment all is changed. With Abraham we cry out: "Let there be no strife — for we be brethren." How foolish we have been — how shortsighted in the presence of our fellow man.

ANDI

To the East, to the West,
To the North and the South;
We must go, we must go
With the Gospel of Light:
To the White, to the Black
To the Yellow and Brown;
We must go, we must go,
With the Gospel of Light.

These words of the popular missionary chorus have been coming to my mind repeatedly during the past weeks. Indeed "into all the world" is the goal of missions. Nothing short of the gospel for everyone is worthy as an aim.

As I write these lines we are nearing our first stop for active missionary observation on the great continent of Africa. One could put all of Europe, China, India, and U. S. into this area. Africa is big! We will soon land at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, where we are expecting Mr. Clayton Keener, Mennonite Missionary under the Eastern Mennonite Board, to meet us. Next week we go on to Kenya, Tanganyika, and to our major Africa stop, the Belgian Congo.

But, before I write about Africa, I would like to record something of the past thirteen days spent in the Near Eastern area. The area around the Mediterranean Sea is generally referred to as the Near East. It will at once be recognized that this includes the territory of the Bible. In a brief article I can but touch on our busy, fruitful stay in this significant part of our world—historically and in present day life.

Three Near East Countries

My last article was written early in the morning as we were approaching Beirut, Lebanon. This is being written immediately as we leave the Near East area.

I. Lebanon. We spent thirty hours in this small country of 1,250,000 people. It was our first experience in the Arab world; so will long be remembered. The high light of our stay here was a trip to Baalbek, about thirty miles away to see old Roman ruins. What we saw is hard to describe. And it is still more difficult to record our impressions. We saw the ruins of an ancient splendor. The ancient architects who designed the structures must have been men of great skill. It has been said that 100,000 people participated in the building of the temples in the Baalbek area. Giant columns can still be seen. Stones weighing four hundred tons each were used.

Lebanon itself is an interesting country. The mountains and valleys provide an everchanging panorama of beauty. Arab costumes add color. Lebanon has been an independent Republic since 1946. It is composed of about sixty per cent Christian (mostly Orthodox) and forty per cent Muslim. It is perhaps the only government in the world elected on the basis of religion. The president must be a Christian, and the next two presiding officers must be of the two kinds of Muslim faith. There are an estimated 20,000 protestants. Protestant missionaries first came to Lebanon 100 years ago and there are about 100 in the country now.

II. Jordan. We spent a full week in Jordan. Upon arrival Dale Kaufman, of MCC, met us. A few brief sentences cannot describe our joy in being in the land where our Savior lived. We visited the places of greatest interest as our time allowed. This included such places as: Jericho (including the walls), the Jordan River, Dead Sea, Bethany, home of Mary and Martha, tomb of Lazarus, Bethlehem, Hebron, Mount of Olives, Garden of Gethsemane, Temple area, the garden tomb, and many other places.

We saw another thrilling chapter in the amazing MCC story. In another letter I want to write about MCC observations. I for one did not realize the true character of the "Jordan Chapter" of our work. We only saw the work at Jericho and Hebron although we did meet personnel from other points of service. Let anyone who doubts the witness value of our MCC work visit a place like Jordan! I hope my pictures turn out well; so we can show a bit more clearly what is being done.

III. Egypt. We spent three and a half days in this ancient land of the Pharaohs. We really did not see Egypt since our time was spent in and around Cairo, a large, modern city of about 3,000,000. In all of Egypt some 22,500,000 live in an area about half again as large as Texas.

Primarily we did three things in Egypt. We visited the Egyptian Antiquities Museum. We spent fifty-five minutes here which was all too short. It was long enough, however, to get a little "feel" for the history portrayed. Excavators have done an amazing job unearthing the hidden mysteries of bygone centuries. One gets quite an insight into life in the various periods of history.

Of course we visited the pyramids. And, we rode on the camel. Although enjoyable, one would not want to stay perched on the back of the camel too long! The pyramids cannot be described. The Great Pyramid of Cheops is 446 feet high, 740 feet long on each side at the base and covers 12 acres. It contains over 2,000,000 blocks of stone averaging two and a half tons in weight. (I wonder who weighed them all and averaged the weight!)

Then, we wanted to learn all we could about missions and the spread of the gospel in Egypt. Primarily we visited the Bible Society, Nile Press, and the American Mission, a United Presbyterian organization.

Observations on the Arab-Moslem World

1. The Arab-Moslem world is much larger and wealthier than I knew. Very rapidly this area is becoming a power of world significance. Even while we were in Egypt the prime ministers of the Arab League countries were in session at Cairo. They comprise a large area and population. It is true that the countries are very poor, but potentially they are rich. In Jerusalem we met some vacationers from Arabia who told us of the fabulous oil wealth. It appears that in time to come these countries will develop very rapidly.

There are many problems existing in the Arab world. Only one of these is the Israel-Jordan tension.

2. The Bible and Ancient History is more real. In Egypt we saw the results of the excavations of the scientists. The museum includes items going back 5,000 years. In Lebanon and Jordan we saw old temple ruins which spoke of a bygone era.

But, best of all we saw something of the work of the archaeologists in Palestine. In India we met Mr. W. J. Beasley, F.R.G.S., president of the Australian Institute of Archaeology. He showed us charts and specimens of the work of his organization. He referred to the amazing discoveries of the past decade. He made the very sweeping statement that all the work verified the accuracy of the Bible one hundred per cent.

It seems the Lord raised up the science of archaeology in recent decades to answer the onslaughts of unbelief. It is still amazing to me that so many will still hold to theories other than the total inspiration of our Bible. Although I do not profess to know much about the science of excavating it was a satisfaction to be in Jericho while an archaelogical expedition was at work in the area of the ancient walls. In one section alone about 25 were working on many levels. It is an exacting science. I have preached and believed in the inspiration of the Bible for many years: it was a thrill to see some of the proofs first-hand.

3. Missions in the Arab-Moslem World. We often hear of the difficulty of working with Moslems. This is true. However, we scarcely realize the power and outreach of this faith. It is not a static religion. A book I saw advertised was entitled "Moslem On The March." Moslem leaders are not satisfied with 315,000,000 adherents: they want to spread as far and as rapidly as possible.

But, a significant missionary chapter has been written in the Arab-Moslem world—and is now being written! We visited the Bible Society headquarters in three countries and plan to visit in Ethiopia where there are many Moslems. At each place they report a hunger for the Word of God. At Cairo the Bible Society catalog has about 450 listings. They produce various parts of the Bible as well as the whole Bible. And, since many languages are represented in the area they have the Bible in many tongues.

Also, we visited the Nile Mission Press, Inc. This year they celebrate their 50th aniversary. On one of their pamphlets their purpose is stated as follows: "The Nile Mission Press is an interdenominational missionary society for publishing, printing, and distributing Christian literature in Arabic for Moslems." Over one hundred titles are listed in their catalog.

The United Presbyterian church appears to have had the biggest work in the areas we visited. We called at their Cairo office. They have been in Egypt for one hundred years. They now have fifty missionaries. Mr. Allen with whom we spoke expressed his concerns. Not only is the Moslem problem to be considered, but also communism among the students and such groups as Seventh Day Adventists and Jehovah's Witnesses.

The MCC work is significant. The work being done right now is wonderful and like many other places may lead to full scale mission work. MCC has missionary implications which is difficult to comprehend until one visits the fields. The spiritual plus values are very real.

I am finishing this article in Nazareth, Ethiopia, where we are visiting the work of the Eastern Mennonite Board.

One Thing Lacking

GLADYS J. PETERSON

Last August Brooklyn police found that they had a series of the most senseless crimes in modern history on their hands. In the space of 16 days an old derelict was slugged and dumped into the East River where he drowned before help arrived, another old man was beaten to death and three others were beaten up, two teen-age girls were horsewhipped, and one man was severely burned when gasoline soaked cotton was tied around his legs and set on fire. The only clues the police had was that four young men were involved in three of these atrocities, and that one of them had red hair.

Finally a patrol car cruising the neighborhood of these crimes was stopped by two vagrants who ran out of a park to say that some boys were molesting them. "Has one of them got red hair?" asked the policeman.

"Yes," they answered.

The two cops in the squad car ran into the park, pistols drawn, and arrested two teen-aged boys; later that same evening the other two were picked up. They ranged in age from 15 to 18.

U. S. crime reporters usually have cliches to explain why such crimes occur, but this time not one of the usual categories seemed to fit. Poverty? None of the victims were robbed, and it was proved that all of the boys had adequate spending money. Environment? All of the boys came from good homes; they belonged to the old respected element. Neglect? All had parents who were genuinely interested in their children's up-bringing and well-being; and none were from broken homes. Ignorance? All had good school records and were contemplating entering college. Organized crime? None belonged to the hoodlum gangs which are the preliminaries for entering the New York underworld. Three of the four had been summer camp counselors; they liked athletics, played ball with various groups, swam at neighborhood pools, had numerous hobbies and leisure-time activities, and liked books and music.

Yet these boys "went bad." How can we explain it? By all the rules of social behavior, they should have been growing up into good solid citizens. Instead they were partners in shocking crimes that aroused the entire nation.

There is only one explanation, and that lies in the fact that these teen-agers did not know God. The one thing that was lacking in their backgrounds was scriptural training. The Bible describes their state in these words: "There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way . . . there is none that doeth good . . . . Their mouth is full of cursing and bitterness: Their feet are swift to shed blood: Destruction and misery are in their ways: And the way of peace have they not known: There is no fear of God before their eyes" (Romans 3:11-18).

The lesson in this is that the very best upbringing that leaves out knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ is not sufficient. The Word of God tells us that the unregenerate man is victim to the flesh which produces among other things "murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like" (Galatians 5:21), but if he is living in newness of life, his heart will be full of the fruit of the Spirit which is "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, and faith" (Galatians 5:22), and there will be no room for evil. The person who fears God is not likely to commit any great crime.

You Never Can Tell

Elaine Sommers Rich

How did the Good Samaritan know that the man lying by the wayside wasn't just pretending to be in need? How did he know he wouldn't be robbed himself if he stopped to help the injured man?

I thought of the Good Samaritan recently when I read of the Minnesotan whose car slid over an embankment. In spite of a broken leg, he managed to climb up to the highway and tried to get help. Car after car went by. But no one was interested in his plight.

I think of the Good Samaritan when I hear people giving good, reasonable reasons for not helping people in need. Hitchhikers carry knives, you know. And motorists who seem to be in trouble are probably really intending to stage a holdup. Lending money to a stranger is just plain folly. His hard luck story is probably a lie. And taking care of a baby on the train while the mother goes to the diner is quite dangerous too, You never can tell. You never can tell.

No, you never can. Lee Jordan in These Found the Way (Westminster Press, 1951) relates a chain of incidents leading to his conversion. One was having been picked up as a hitchhiker by an unnamed man and woman near Hutchinson, Kansas. Another was having been lent four dollars by a ticket agent in Belleville, Illinois.

I say, blessings on all Good Samaritans. Although he may have less wine and oil and fewer denarii, one Good Samaritan has more joy than a dozen cautious, self-calculating priests and Levites put together.

Summer Voluntary Service

An Invitation to Summer Voluntary Service

Now is the time for interested young people to make arrangements to participate in the 1955 summer Voluntary Service program.

Summer service like the long-term VS program is an opportunity for young people to express the love of God experienced in Christ and an opportunity to do something for Christ. This short-term program is a convenient length of time for young people who wish to give such an expression but are unable to serve longer. Summer service is also geared for college students who wish to supplement their training with such experience.

Opportunities for summer service will be available in projects set up by MCC and Mennonite and Brethren in Christ conference groups. Young people may obtain information about these possibilities by writing to MCC or their conference headquarters.

Folders describing MCC summer service and listing the projects will be available early in February and interested persons may obtain these folders and other information by writing to MCC or their conference headquarters. Persons in the United States should write to: Voluntary Service, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Penn. Canadian young people should write to: Voluntary Service, Mennonite Central Committee, 10 Union Street East, Waterloo, Ont.

The complete scope of summer service possibilities will be presented to most Mennonite and Brethren in Christ college students in February and March by MCC and conference representatives. Students should look for presentations at their schools on the following dates. Goshen College, Feb. 23 to 25; Bluffton College, Feb. 28 and March 1; Eastern Mennonite College, sometime during the week of March 21 to 25; and Messiah College, sometime in March.

A total of 100 volunteers are needed to fill the openings in the MCC summer service projects in the United States. An equal number are needed in the MCC summer service projects in Canada. A new feature of MCC summer service is a $15 monthly allowance in non-earning projects. It is felt this small allowance will provide certain transportation costs and enable some persons to participate who otherwise would not find it possible.

These projects range in length from 6 to 16 weeks. Volunteers will be working with migrant laborers, crippled and handicapped children, the mentally ill, underprivileged children and in sanitoria.

New MCC projects this summer include the National Institutes of Health, Bethesda, Md.; a child-care center to be arranged in a metropolitan city; a community service camp in Mexico; and a youth caravan in the central states. More information about these projects is available in the summer service folder.

General Conference VS

OUR RELATION TO MCC

Both the General Conference and the Mennonite Central Committee operate summer service programs. Why this dual program?

As a General Conference we have certain areas of work which are uniquely related to our church. The units on our mission fields, retreat grounds, and at the Mennonite Youth Farm may be cited as examples. It is our policy to supplement, not duplicate each other's programs.

At the same time there are areas in which we work more effectively with other Mennonite groups to give a corporate witness. Thus the MCC offers units in mental hospitals, schools for delinquents, community service projects and others.

In addition to summer units the MCC also offers year-long or longer service opportunities for those who can give more time. The General Conference fully supports and underwrites these MCC long-term projects.

Numerous openings for service are now awaiting you. For further information about MCC projects, either for the summer or for long-term, write to the Voluntary Service Section, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania.

AMERICAN INDIAN MISSIONS

Volunteers teach summer Bible school, do home visitation, serve as cooks, painters, plumbers, farmers, camp leaders, and counselors. Living with missionaries and sharing all that mission life holds is one of the significant features of this work. Those fields supported by the Foreign Mission Section are: Arizona—dates, June 1, for six weeks or more; needed, six or more people. Montana—dates, May 30 for six weeks; needed, six or more Bible school teachers. Dates, middle of July for six weeks; needed, four general helpers to do repair work, interior housework, gardening, Sunday school and young people's work. Oklahoma—dates, May 30 to June 24; needed, five Bible school teachers and retreat leaders. Dates, June 6 to July 15; needed, two Bible school teachers.

CITY MISSIONS

In Chicago, Illinois, the unit works in the three General Conference churches—Woodlawn, Grace, and First Mennonite—serving as summer Bible school teachers, assisting in the camping, drafts, and recreational programs carried on by each church. Some home visitation is done. Two-day orientation is held for workers before unit work begins. This work is supported by the Home Mission Section. Dates, June 22 for six weeks; needed, seven or more people. Dates, July 1 for six weeks; needed, two men, two women.

In North Topeka, Kansas, work is carried on in areas once damaged by flood and where MCC reconstruction work is now being carried on. Volunteers will work in trailer camps and with Negro churches of the city, teaching summer Bible school, conducting religious surveys, directing recreation. This is sponsored by the Western District Youth Organization and Home Mission Committee. Dates, June 1 for four weeks; needed, four people.

The Columbia Basin irrigation development has increased Moses Lake, Washington, population from 600 to 14,000 people in seven years. With the stress and strain of such pioneering comes a tremendous opportunity for a spiritual ministry by summer volunteers. Our Menno Mennonite Church, only 26 miles from Moses Lake, feels challenged by this need and invites your help. Are there volunteers for Bible school teaching, youth service activities and survey of future possibilities? Dates, June 15 for six weeks; needed, six people (men, women, couples).

FOREIGN MISSIONS

In Colombia, South America, the unit will assist in work at our mission home for children of leprous parents. Construction work, farming, clearing land for gardening, teaching English, recreation, sewing, and assisting in spiritual ministry make up the work. A real insight into the nature of foreign missions is obtained. Travel by air from Miami to Bogota is necessary. Maintenance is supplied by the Foreign Mission Section. Dates, June 1 to August 31; needed, two women, two men; minimum age, 20 years; expenses, round trip plane ticket from Miami to Bogota is about $240, plus travel to Miami. Other personal expenses will be encountered in Colombia.

MENTAL HOSPITAL

At North Battleford, Saskatchewan, volunteers will serve as attendants making beds, bathing patients, feeding and otherwise caring for mentally ill. A real opportunity to witness to the way of love and to receive experience in this needy field. Dates, May 1 for 16 weeks; needed, about 15 people; wages, regular attendant's wages minus unit fee of $25 for the summer period.

EASTERN DISTRICT

At Paint Rock, North Carolina, volunteers will assist with work on the mission station, do construction work and teach summer Bible school. This is sponsored by the Board of Missions and Eastern District Peace and Service Committee for Eastern District and other volunteers. Dates, June 13 to July 2; needed, five men and women.

RETREAT GROUND UNIT

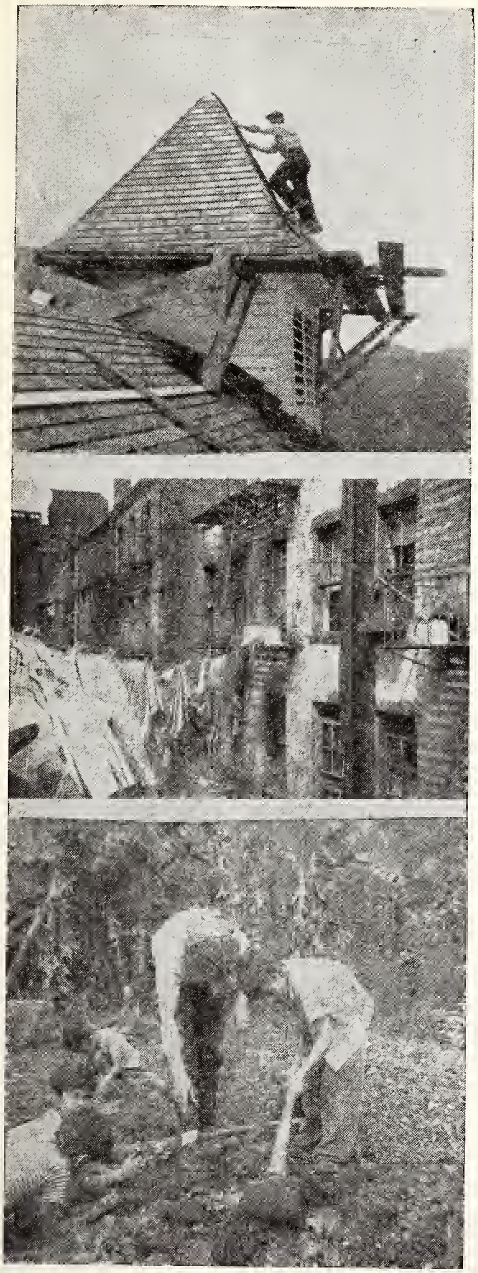
Camp Friedenswald is located near Cassopolis and Union, Michigan, in a beautiful wooded area. Volunteers will serve on camp staff as cooks, maintenance workers, assist with recreation, serve as cabin counselors, and in other ways help provide facilities for retreat programs. Support comes from Central and Middle District Retreat Committees. Dates, June 20 to August 31; needed, 10 women, five men.

DELINQUENTS

Volunteers work with the girls in the Manitoba Home for Girls located in Winnipeg, Manitoba. They

YOUR LETTER COUNTS

In November the YPU Council went on record opposing any form of compulsory military service. At this time the U.S. Congress is again considering extension of the draft until 1959 (H.R. 3005); also a UMT Reserve bill (H.R. 2967). Now is the time to register our opposition to these bills by writing to our Representatives and Senators. Our letters have prevented the passage of UMT laws on previous occasions. Let's continue to write.



give recreational assistance and help with general maintenance of the Home; work together with trained social workers. Dates, about the middle of June for six weeks; needed, two or more women; minimum age, 20 years.

MENNONITE YOUTH FARM

The Saskatchewan young people have established an Invalid Home, Home for Mentally Ill, and two Children's Homes on a farm near Rosthern, Saskatchewan. The unit will help care for patients, assist in construction work, farming, cooking, gardening. There is opportunity to participate in retreats held on the farm and to go to other areas in Saskatchewan to teach Bible school. This is supported by Saskatchewan Mennonite Youth Society. Dates, June 1 to August 31; needed, eight to ten people.

GENERAL INFORMATION

Volunteers are taken from age 18 and over except for Colombia and the Manitoba Home for Girls units where they must be at least 20. Young married couples and older people are encouraged to take part. If you cannot remain on the project for the entire length of term, volunteer for the length of time you can serve.

Workers will receive a weekly $5 allowance, except in mental hospitals where workers receive a salary and Colombia, South America, where travel scholarships of $50-$100 are available. Maintenance is provided on the field of service by the sponsoring agency. Local churches are urged to help volunteers with their traveling expenses. For further information write to Leola Schultz, Director; General Conference Voluntary Service; 4614 Woodlawn Ave.; Chicago 15, Illinois.

"What Ye Have Done Unto These Least . . . ."

"The Toronto Young People have seen the need at their very doorstep, and for the second year are sponsoring a Christmas party for 25 underprivileged children in a slum area of our city, within a mile of our church.

"Opportunities to give to the needy—either near or far—are open to all of us if only we will allow ourselves to be used of Christ to act as He did. For a more blessed experience in giving gifts, let us remember Christ's words, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive . . . . What ye have done to the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.' "

—Excerpt from an article in the Toronto United Mennonite Church Bulletin written by Bill Dick, December, 1954.

Since December, 1954, India now requires visas from all citizens of the British Commonwealth who wish to enter India. It had been possible for citizens of Canada and Great Britain to freely enter India on their passports. They will now need to apply to the consular offices of the Indian government for visas to enter the country. This will have an effect on mission agencies who had been using Canadian citizens as missionary personnel in India.

The annual oratorical elimination contests for Bethel students in the peace and temperance oration contests will be held in the college chapel, Tuesday, Feb. 22, at 7:45 p.m., as announced by W. T. Wilkoff of the department of speech and drama.

Students entering the peace oration contest are Horton Flaming, Reedley, Calif.; Willard Stucky, McPherson; Arlan Kaufman, North Newton; Ray Frey, Newton; and Lowell Teichroew, Mt. Lake, Minn.

Arthur Dick, Waterloo, Ontario; John Bertsche, Pontiac, Ill., and Dale Mueller, Freeman, S. D., will enter the contest sponsored by the WCTU.

The Student Christian Fellowship of the college sponsored a Voluntary Service workshop on the campus Feb. 14-15. The chapel periods on Monday and Tuesday morning were provided for by the workshop with an evening meeting in the Student Union Room on Monday, February 14.

Miss Leola Schultz, of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary presented service opportunities in General Conference summer Voluntary Service of which she is the present director.

Gordon Dyck and Harvey Toews, Akron, Penn., also were on the campus, representing such areas as PAX, 1-W service, and MCC Voluntary Service.

The program on Monday evening was a panel discussion, with members including students who have been in Voluntary Service, as well as the guest speakers.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Dan West of Middlebury, Indiana, leader in the Church of the Brethren peace and relief work, is scheduled to be the speaker at the annual Bluffton Peace Institute to be held February 23, 24, and 25. This Peace Institute is sponsored by the Bluffton College Peace Club which meets to discuss problems concerning the part college students can play in helping to maintain peace.

Second semester classes began on February 3. Two hundred twenty-one students have enrolled for this semester including eighteen new or returning students.

The cast for the junior class play, "You Can't Take It With You," to be given on March 18 and 19, was announced recently by Mrs. F. T. Lauriat, play director.

Members of the cast include: Barbara Hobart, Penelope Sycamore; Mary Hilty, Essie; Fyrne Miller, Rheba; Homer Gerber, Paul Sycamore; Jim Steele, Mr. De Pinna; Don Schartzentraub, Ed; Bob Coon, Donald; Alton Shelly, Martin Vanderhof; Shirley Shelmadine, Alice; Sam Diller, Henderson; Bill Schantz, Tony Kirby; Ike Qutub, Boris Kolenkhov; Glen Hefner, Mr. Kirby; Carol Hause, Mrs. Kirby; Jane Nyce, Olga; and Wallace Yoder and Wilmer Sprunger as Two Men.

Business manager of the play is Sam Diller, with Jack Earl, chairman of stage, Karl Klassen, chairman of properties and John Rogers in charge of lighting.

The Men's Gospel Team quartet, composed of Ronald Ropp, Wilmer Sprunger, Bill Schantz, and Bob Coon presented a program at the Mennonite Church in Topeka, Ind., on Sunday morning, February 6, and at the Mennonite Church in Middlebury, Ind., on Sunday evening of the same day. Speaker at these meetings was Ted Rollins, sophomore from Fremont, Ohio. Professor Howard Raid accompanied the group.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Several field trips were recently made by academy classes. Members of the junior civics class spent a day in Pierre, visiting various departments of state government and attending sessions of the state legislature. Dr. J. D. Unruh, Paul E. Hofer, and Harold Hartman went with the group.

The home economics classes and Miss Erna Friesen and Miss Phyllis Mueller made a field trip to Sioux Falls, February 3. They attended the home makers meeting of the Sioux Empire Farm Show. The agriculture class and Leland Voth attended the dairy program at the same event.

The boys in the agriculture department plan to participate in the judging contests sponsored by the Freeman Community Achievement Days. In preparation they have been studying and practicing crop and grain judging.

Members of the college dramatics department are busy with rehearsals of the play "Everyman" which will be presented in Pioneer Hall, February 23, at 8:00 p.m.

It is based on a 15th century morality play. Acknowledged as the best play of its type, it should be produced wherever people are seriously interested in our literary and religious heritage. It has an extraordinary visual appeal, and the sonority of the dialogue is truly compelling though it was written by an unknown author in the 15th century. It has been rewritten by Hugo von Hoffmanstahl, and translated by George Sterling. Its well-handled conflict will hold the attention of modern audiences surprisingly well.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Rev. David Habegger gave the morning message at the Woodlawn Mennonite Church on February 6. His message was entitled "Fools for Christ's Sake." Rev. Habegger and family are now living in Chicago while he is serving as MCC regional director of 1-W work in this area.

The final service of the School of Missions service was held Sunday evening. Following the 6:00 o'clock sandwich table, Rev. Paul Wenger led the discussion on "The Indigenous Church in India." Rev. J. D. Graber of Goshen, Indiana, spoke at the 7:30 service. Brother Graber, who is head of the board of missions of the (Old) Mennonite Church spoke on "The Nature of the Church's Task in the World."

John Boehr was in charge of the Wednesday evening prayer service on February 9. The hour was spent in prayer and meditation centered on thanksgiving to God.

February 13 the young people's choir of the Bethel Mennonite Church of Chicago, presented a special program at the Woodlawn Church. Rev. Lark, pastor of this colored church, brought the evening's meditation.

MCC News Notes

FIVE MORE PAX MEN TO PERU

Plans are to make five more PAX men available to the R. G. LeTourneau industrial-missionary project in Peru.

These five 1-W men are being supplied by the Mennonite Central Committee to the LeTourneau Foundation which has been well pleased with the services and Christian contribution of the first 10 Mennonite and Brethren in Christ PAX men in Peru. Five of these men are continuing land-clearing and road-building in Peru while the other five were transferred to Paraguay in December to assist in the construction of Mennonite colony roadways.

The group of five going to Peru is currently being selected and processed. Before going to LeTourneau Technical Institute in Longview, Texas, for approximately two months of training, they will spend a week in orientation in Akron, Penn.

The first 10 PAX men arrived in Tournavista, Peru, around Aug. 1. The men continuing to serve in Peru are Harry Bert of Newburg, Penn.; Willard Ebersole of Warren, Ill.; Paul Fry of Manheim, Penn.; William Nofziger of Wauseon, Ohio; and Cloy Roth of Milford, Neb. In addition to project construction work, these men have actively participated in the church and service activities of local Christian groups.

Jottings

—Butterfield Church, Butterfield, Minn.: On Sunday, Jan. 16, Rev. and Mrs. Albert Neufeld, Gospel Missionary Union candidates for Panama, were with us. In the morning Rev. Neufeld led in devotions, and in the evening he brought the message and showed colored slides of Panama. Our Sunday school officers and teachers met in the basement room of the parsonage on Tuesday evening, Jan. 18. Guest speaker was Orlando Schmidt, assistant pastor of the Bethel Church of Mountain Lake. Rev. Schmidt conveyed many stimulating thoughts which he gleaned from the National Sunday School Union held in Indianapolis, Ind., last October. On Sunday evening, Jan. 23, Willard Unruh and a Christian Youth Volunteer group of fourteen students from Freeman Junior College and Academy, Freeman, S. D., presented the worship service. The group brought objective vocal and instrumental music, poems, and the message, all of which were centered around the theme, "Faith." Many felt the service was one of "decency and order" (1 Cor. 14:40). On Tuesday evening, Jan 25, missionaries Ross and Shirley Godall, co-directors of the Ontario Hebrew Mission, the House of Friendship in Kitchener, Canada, presented a challenging work through colored slides and messages. We are thankful that the General Conference is now helping this mission in witnessing to the Jewish people of Ontario through the tract ministry and the summer camp program.—Corr.

—Walton Church, Walton, Kan.: The Bethel College A Cappella Choir presented a concert of sacred music in the Walton Community Building on Jan. 16. It was sponsored by the Walton Methodist Church and the Walton Mennonite Church. On Jan. 23, our young people were hosts to the young people from the Burns, Emmaus, Grace Hill, and Zion Churches. The young people from these five churches meet once a month. The program is planned by a committee of representatives from all five churches. After the program there is opportunity for refreshment and fellowship. The February program will be in the Emmaus Church.—Harold Peters, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Perkasie, Pa.: John Thiessen, executive secretary of our Board of Missions, and retired missionary, and Vernon Sprunger, conducted our midweek service recently. Mr. Sprunger showed beautiful pictures of the work among the Negroes of Africa. A conference on "Prophecy and the Jews," conducted by Chester Webber, featured a film, "I Found the Messiah," and an authentic portrayal of the Jewish Passover. This event inaugurated a tract distribution program to the Jews of this area. Our nursery is now equipped with table, chairs, rug, and a public address system. We thank God that we received into our church during the year seven new members. Our pastor, Lester Janzen, taught a class of "Types in the Tabernacles," at the Leadership Training School held in Souderton Church. Dick Knox showed very fine pictures of the Holy Land. Raymond Detweiler, Jr., graduated from Grace Bible Institute, and later passed the examination for evangelist's license. Our church observed Holy Communion four times instead of two in the year 1954.—Fannie E. Landis, Corr.

—Arlington Church, Arlington, Kan.: Since the beginning of the new year, our pastor, John F. Schmidt, is teaching a catechism class of seven young people. Jan. 16, Mr. and Mrs. Hans Schneider were welcomed as members of our church, and their four-month old son Steven, was consecrated. Mr. and Mrs. Schneider came from Germany in the fall of 1953. He is working for a farmer in this community. Their coming to America was a result of previous contacts made while Mr. Schneider was a farm exchangee.—Lois Kopper, Corr.

—Friedensfeld Church, Turpin, Okla.: Jan. 23, we had a Gideon worker from the Hooker church in our midst. Our church gave eighty-some dollars to the Gideons for the placing of Bibles in motels and hotels. We were happy to have A. J. Dyck in our midst Jan. 30. He brought the morning message, "God Upon the Floods." He was here to conduct the funeral service for Henry A. Wedel. We pray for God's nearness to the bereaved family. We were happy to have Marie J. Regier, MCC worker in Paraguay, in our church the evening of Jan. 31. Feb. 1, Abe Dyck was called back to conduct funeral services for John J. Epp. In less than a week's time God saw fit to call another one of His children from our church to his heavenly home. We pray God's richest blessing on the bereaved family.—Mrs. Chester Windsor, Corr.

—First Church, Mountain Lake, Minn.: The New Year was begun with three nights of prayer service. Theme: "Glory for the Church by Christ Jesus." The portable cannery is expected here in February. A goal of 10,000 cans has been set for this community. The Robert Kampars are awaiting their visa for their return to India. The Albert Neufelds are preparing for the Panama Mission field. Rev. Neufeld and Mrs. Kampars are members of our congregation. We pray that they may be sent forth speedily to proclaim the gospel to those yet without Christ. Jan. 9, after the morning message, "The Lord's Leading of Our Lives," our pastor L. R. Amstutz, read his resignation. He feels the Lord has called them to work in the Emmaus congregation at Whitewater, Kansas. He will leave us in June to take up the work there. As our pastor was called to Ohio upon the death of his father, Wesley Jantz served in the pulpit on Jan. 16. Rev. Jantz is new in our community, having recently come to serve as administrator of the Bethel Hospital and Eventide Home. The new film, "The Call of the Cheyenne," was shown under the sponsorship of the young people's group, on Jan. 9, in the evening. There was a good attendance. The main topic of the senior C. E. on Jan. 16, was "The Power of Prayer." As it was a consecration program many responded with words of testimony, poems, or Bible verses. Mary Bargen was the leader. A musical quiz by John Janzen. The men's chorus brought two numbers in song. The message on Jan. 23, "A Revival in Samaria," by the pastor. In the evening Rev. Neufeld reported on the Panama mission field and showed pictures of this mission. Ross Godall, from The House of Friendship, Kitchener, Ont., brought the morning message, Jan. 30. In the evening he showed pictures of their work. Mrs. Godall gave her testimony.—Katherine Derksen, Corr.

—Apostolic Church, Trenton, Ohio: Jan. 9, following the worship service, a covered dish dinner was served in the social room of the church and an hour of good fellowship was enjoyed. In the afternoon the annual congregational meeting was held, Earl Gingerich, presiding. All reports from the various organizations showed a most successful year and splendid co-operation. Jan. 26, the pastor and his wife celebrated their golden wedding anniversary with open house. Pastor Amstutz was minister of the Mennonite Church, Halstead, Kan., for ten years. He has been pastor of the Trenton church for 33 years. Each church remembered him with a substantial check. Two hundred cards and other gifts and floral tributes were received. Jan. 30, Jake Duerksen of Paraguay, student at Bluffton College, gave a most challenging message during the worship hour, on conditions in Paraguay. Mr. and Mrs. Bixler, Miss Kirchhofer, Miss Edna Ramseyer, and Miss M'Della Moon were also visitors from Bluffton. The young people served them a dinner in the social room, after church. The Women's Christian Service group met at the home of the pastor with Mrs. Amstutz and Mrs. Gingerich as hostesses.—Edna Kinsinger, Corr.

—East Swamp Church, Quakertown, Pa.: Betty and Leon Schanley described their experiences at jungle training camp at our watchnight service. Refreshments, a Bible quiz and film followed. In conclusion our pastor gave "A Message At Midnight" that of rejoicing at all times. Prayer services were held the first week of the new year in various churches co-operating in Christ for Upper Bucks Co. The interior of our church is being brightened with paint; reminding us of needed daily cleansing, thus radiating Christ. Family prayer and Bible study was begun Jan. 19 with groups of adults, young people, junior, and nursery. A Youth Fellowship was organized Jan. 30. On the same evening Miss Adeline Fast, missionary to the Congo, related experiences how she was led to Congo and showed slides of her first term there. Our choir has begun work on the cantata, "The Triumphant Hour," to be presented with slides. Lord willing, pre-Easter evangelistic meetings will be held April 3-10 with Rev. Harold Burkholder, president of Grace Bible Institute.—Corr.

On the evening of Dec. 25 the choir, directed by Roland Krause, presented a cantata, "Carols of Christmas." On Jan. 1 the annual business meeting was held and everything was arranged for another year. Peace of Mind

Peace of mind is a pearl of Great price, its worth is Beyond measurement. It can Never be found by seeking,
It comes as a consequence.
When the heart is sound,
When attitude is right,
When relationship is proper,
Peace of soul is found.
It is not dependent on Health and vigor,
Comfort and safety,
Possession and station.
It may be won in Sickness and pain,
Privation and bereavement,
Frustration and defeat.
Peace of mind flows from Appreciation of beauty,
Dawn, sunset, midnight,
Stream, lake, ocean,
Forest and mountain,
Painting and sculpture.
It surges from
Piano and violin,
Symphony and oratorio.
It is discovered in Library and study, in Poetry and prose.
It is created by the Reading of biography and Sharing intimately the Experiences of others.
Peace of mind springs from Friendship and comradeship.
It wells up from a Ministry of mercy and the Religion of loving kindness.
It runs like a living stream
From the Bible, from Psalm and gospel.
Its breath is prayer,
Adoration and thanksgiving,
Confession and commitment.
It is incarnated in the Meekness and boldness of Our Lord Jesus Christ.
Peace of soul is a gift
From the grace of God.
It is calmness of spirit,
Serenity of being,
Unification of self.
In the New Testament it is Called the peace of God
Which passes understanding.
For peace of soul a Person does well to Sell everything and buy it.

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

1. To work for a Conference unified in Christ.
2. To teach the gospel of Christ effectively.
3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

"I BELIEVE IN GOD THE FATHER ALMIGHTY"

The Lenten season is a good time to restudy the Apostles' Creed. It is of tremendous importance what we believe, for what we really believe shapes and determines our character and our destiny. So to start the Apostles' Creed with the mighty statement, "I believe in God the Father Almighty," is both to make a mighty choice and to proclaim a great commitment.

The matter of divine choice is deeply important. Though we scarcely wish to admit it, yet we are still worshiping many gods: Venus, the god of pleasure; Mars, the god of war; Mammon, the god of wealth; Caesar, the national god; as well as gods of self, of wisdom, of power, of greed. It has been declared that polytheism, the worship of many gods, is still far and away the most prevalent religious attitude in the world. Every day many altars within us smoke of incense offered to false gods. These many gods are constantly battling within us for our loyalties until we are torn and frustrated as we seek to give allegiance to them. So the greatest choice in all of life is to choose definitely the One True and Living God, and to say as with trumpets in our souls: "I believe in God the Father Almighty."

Note the words "Father," and "Almighty." They belong together. God is so near to us that as a loving Father He watches over us and meets our every need. But He is more than a kindly Father; He is Almighty; all wisdom and honor and glory and power be unto Him. He is so far above us and beyond us, so wholly "other" that He seems almost beyond our reach. Yet as a Father He is very near. His beyondness and His nearness blend. There is nothing greater that human lips could declare than to say with deep conviction and commitment: "I believe in God the Father Almighty."

THE FELLOWSHIP OF LOVE

A fellowship is a group of people having similar tastes and ideals. The Christian fellowship of love would be the Christian group motivated by love for one another and supremely to God. The church should be such a fellowship.

The common love of God unites and draws together. Great patience and understanding is exercised when differences occur. The fellowship of love proves so strong a bond that petty differences and selfish desires cannot break it. A church bound together by such a divine fellowship does not fall apart or break up into factions.

But this divine love reaches out to all men even as does the love of God. Iron curtains, hate curtains, divisive curtains of all kinds cannot check the divine beams of love flowing out from the Christian fellowship. As the love of God is broader than the measure of man's mind, so His love in us refuses to be limited but expands far beyond its own small circle. A sure defeat for any iron curtain is a new birth in the fellowship of God's love. Such love can melt iron.

THEY AREN'T FUNNY

It is well that people are becoming aroused against the so-called "comic" books for children. Most of them aren't even funny. On the contrary, their suggestiveness, their frequent brutality, their lurid accounts of horror and crime no doubt have stimulated in many a child's mind the desire to commit similar crimes. The desire gives birth to the act.

Parents generally did not seem to be aware of the contents of many of these paper-bound "funnies." But now that interested groups and educators have taken the time to study their contents and the effect they have upon the child, there is generally worldwide awakening to the potential evils they contain. Where determined groups become really aroused they can do wonders in controlling this evil. Publishers are becoming alarmed and making hasty promises to delete many of the objectionable features. Some defenders argue that if we take away these comics something must be substituted in their place; to which it may be answered that when diphtheria was banished from childhood it was not thought necessary to substitute something in its place.

No doubt some comic books have real educational value. But there is no excuse for allowing money-hungry publishers to feed upon innocent children by putting out material that tends to destroy their innocence. As the twig is bent so the tree inclines.

ENERGETIC LAYMEN

It is gratifying to note that laymen in general are becoming increasingly active in the work of the church and the kingdom. The article on Evangelism shows a very important field where laymen may do a fine piece of work.

The day should be past when laymen expect the minister to do all the religious work of the church. More and more they are assuming greater responsibilities and an increasing share in the church activities. Fortunate is the minister who knows how to stimulate his laymen to work without feeling that he must be their dictator. Laymen are equal to the responsibilities granted to them as they keep themselves in the center of God's will.

Evangelism, the Layman's Task

HAROLD W. BULLER*

An earlier article presented evangelism as the layman's challenge. But to realize that one has a duty is not enough. We must get down to work and do something.

I. Organizing an Evangelism Committee.

The very thought of setting up an evangelism committee needs to be preceded with this unalterable fact; actually, the entire church is the evangelism committee. In other areas of church work we have specific interest groups such as youth groups, sewing circles, and men's brotherhoods. Even deacons and trustees carry duties that are not everybody's responsibility.

But the evangelism committee, when thought of as a small group of persons selected for this task, must always be considered a group of leaders to guide, instruct, and co-ordinate the larger group in the most basic task that we have as the Body of Christ.

Therefore the personnel is important. The philosophy which this leadership to people who are neither interested in, nor able to help in other areas of the church does two things. (1) It shows that the church does not appreciate the importance of evangelism; (2) It consigns this work to the sidelines and to oblivion from the start.

The membership of the Evangelism Committee should represent, as nearly as possible, both the various age groups and the interest groups in church and community life. This is important, both for later over-all co-operation, and effective outreach into the various areas of spiritual need.

It should be taken for granted that the minister will work very closely with this committee because it affects all areas of church life, needs his inspiration, and will come to him for additional names of people whom he meets in pastoral duties who need attention. Also, the minister finally will be the person who works intimately with those who have been won to Christ and the Church. The committee should, however, have its own chairman outside of the pastor who, in our day, can hardly be considered a "fixed" member of the community.

This committee may be appointed by the same means as other church committees and be responsible to the church board or church council.

II. Areas of Action.

One could list endless things in which the evangelism committee needs to provide leadership. In this article, however, one can do little but suggest areas that will need attention. A more detailed explanation of what most of these things involve may be found in the books listed under "III" below, especially the one by Sweazy.

A. Lay visiting in homes of the local community for the following purposes:

1. To encourage and obtain decisions for Christ. This is a task for anyone who is a Christian. The pastor and committee may, however, want to select a group of people from their own number and other members who may be challenged to give a certain amount of time in some special week (or any week at any time), for this. These could then be specially trained for evangelistic calling.

2. To invite to church attendance and participation in Sunday school and other group activities. Care must be taken, however, not to confuse a general, friendly invitation with a genuine call to become a dedicated disciple of Christ.

3. To invite to church membership by transfer of letter.

B. Evangelistic outreach through (1) an outlying Sunday school or other mission type of project, which the church supports and in which its members work, and (2) witnessing in jails, programs, and tract distribution.

C. Education of the church members regarding (1) the why and how of evangelism, and (2) the responsibility of individuals and groups to help new members feel at home and become active.

D. Promote and check on assimilation of new members, seeing that they find a secure place in the church family.

E. Meaningful evangelistic challenge through the Sunday school. Children need to be challenged to take a positive stand with regard to Christ. Some churches help teachers plan for a "day of decision" on which children, within the context of broader Christian teaching throughout the year will be invited to accept Jesus as their Savior and dedicate their lives to Him. We need to be articulate about salvation and dedication if this is to be meaningful to children and youth.

F. Attainment and maintenance of a high spiritual level within the church. The Evangelism Committee needs to work together with pastor and deacons to prepare the membership for a series of Christian life, or revival services as these are planned. Thereafter much can be done to maintain a Christian consecration by promoting personal and family devotions, prayer services, and a consciousness of our united spiritual responsibility.

III. Helpful Books.

In almost any religious book store we can find books that attempt to challenge us to do evangelistic work. But frequently after giving an inspiring challenge they fail to instruct either pastor or layman on what to say and do when he enters a home. One of the greatest hindrances to doing evangelistic work is our timidity that results from being unfamiliar with it. The following very practical books are written in answer to the "how" question.

*Pastor, Bethel College Church, North Newton, Kansas.

1. Effective Evangelism: The Greatest Work in the World,, written by George E. Sweazy, (284 pages, Harper and Brothers, New York, $3.50). This book is both inspirational and instructive, dealing with almost every phase of evangelism. It discusses, for instance, why evangelize, goals, whom to win, what to say, care of new members within the church organizations, organizing for evangelism, evangelistic preaching, and using the means of mass evangelism. This is an excellent book that stays close to the Spirit of Jesus. One can highly recommend this book for your library.

2. A Workable Plan of Evangelism by Dawson C. Bryan, (160 pages, Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, $1.50). This book covers most of the above-mentioned phases of evangelism, but less adequately. It seeks to present a specific plan of lay evangelism (which may, of course, be used in connection with a series of evangelistic services). Even though one does not always agree with every detail of how to do it, since communities differ, such a plan helps us to think concretely. Ministers especially will want this book because Part II presents four very practical and carefully planned successive periods of instruction which challenge and instruct people who are doing evangelistic calling.

3. A Handbook of Evangelism for Laymen by Dawson C. Bryan. (96 pages, Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, $.50). This is a very practical little book which deals particularly with the layman's aspect of an evangelistic call. Ministers and evangelism committees may want the first two books while laymen who commit themselves to do something about their faith receive this handbook.

IV. How to Get Started.

A. Set up a committee of interested persons (experience comes later) who will help to pull the church out of its "evangelistless" lethargy, and plan courses of united action.

B. Decide on something to do. We must start somewhere. If you wait till everybody is "revived" nothing will ever happen. Let the Spirit use such spirituality as already exists and dedicate yourself to God for a deeper spiritual life.

C. Plan for education of the church members regarding the work of evangelism and their individual and united responsibility in its various areas. Such a program of education should be carried on unobtrusively, but persistently, over a period of months and years. A well planned one-day Evangelism Workshop carried on Sunday morning (through sermon and Sunday school), Sunday afternoon and Sunday evening would be an excellent aid. The Conference Committee on Evangelism, District Field Workers, and other pastors will be glad to help plan and conduct such a day.

D. Spread out into new areas of evangelism as fast as you can, utilizing as many church members as possible.

Mennonite Iron Curtains

J. O. Schrag*

We are living in an age of iron curtains where nations surround themselves with barriers called "iron" but which really are only the ancient sins of ignorance, misunderstanding, prejudice, hatred, and a preconceived notion of the intent and character of one's neighbors.

We Mennonites, too, have our iron curtains. We have erected barriers between groups and conferences to the extent that only a few brave souls venture across the boundaries. A few more courageously gaze across the fence—mostly through the cracks which always appear in man-made barriers. We are more separated than we are united. Could it be God's will that the different Mennonite groups should unite—perhaps some of them in the next few years?

I invite a union of minds, "come let us think together," a union of hearts and a union of prayer. For if our hearts are united in earnest prayer we will be brought into such an attitude and lifted up to such an altitude that, looking down, we will fail to see our own differences, those elements which tend to divide and separate and will see only a beautiful landscape of Mennonite unity held together by bonds of love not curtains of iron.

The need for unity is clear. The need is to increase our witness that Christ is Lord without dissipating our resources in a divergence of individual efforts. We could, if united, give a united witness without sacrificing our cherished customs and without compromising our convictions. We have been looking across the boundaries to see our differences and have failed to realize that often the differences between conferences is less than that of one single congregation.

We are uniting. MCC, World Conference, Disaster Units, Inter-Mennonite Summer Sessions, Mennonite Tours, and other efforts. That is a good beginning and has come about in such a manner that few have been aware that God was leading us toward each other.

As though we had planned it our physical resources, such as schools, colleges, publishing houses, and mission outposts are such that an amalgamation in these fields could be accomplished almost overnight. A splendid example of this is our seminary work—no one conference is large enough to maintain a seminary—here is where we could combine to an advantage to all. Surely our ministry is not divided. Our publication efforts would likewise lend themselves well to amalgamation. At the present time there is much duplication of efforts in many areas. As a reader of both magazines I'd welcome a combined Gospel Herald and Mennonite. The area of Sunday school material is another example where our combined talents should work together.

Pioneering Is on the Ground Level

WALTER and MARTHA DYCK

Have you ever wondered where you would begin as a pioneer farmer on uncultivated soil in a new land, with no tools and no bank account, but only a family, a faith in God, and a determination to succeed? Whether you begin with a pick or a spade (which someone has to make) in digging sods for a house or digging a well—you begin on the ground level. Whether you walk or hoe or rake you are on the same level with others laboring with you.

Did you ever realize that what to us seems so natural—walking steps—can be new to children who remember barracks enclosed by barbed wires in Denmark, then camp life at Arape, and now several years at El Ombu? Since then they have been helping, probably a widowed mother, to get a relatively small tract of land into cultivation, still on the ground level.

Recently a "camion" (truck) full of children, with two mothers for supervision, were brought to Montevideo by the grade school teacher at El Ombu. The 185 (300 km) trip took a full day. Dusty and tired the twenty-seven children arrived at the MCC headquarters. They had come to see the city. How eagerly they looked forward to seeing the zoo, the botanical gardens, the airport, the harbor (including a tour of a ship), and, of course, the bathing on the beach. They stayed at MCC for the three nights and most of the meals. We had 63 around the table at one noon meal.

Even at MCC they saw "something new." The girls were to stay on third floor—39 steps above the street. The boys had to (rather "got to") sleep on fourth, another 25 steps higher. From there they could go another 38 steps into the tower. Some tried "jumping the steps" with both feet together because they got so tired lifting their full weight on one leg at a time. These were three strenuous days for this "younger set" of pioneers.

They have again returned to their homes—off the sidewalks and pavements—to resume their simple way of life. We have learned that people can live without electricity or running water, without kitchen cabinets or refrigerators, without radios or record players. They live without heating stoves in the winter or window screens in the summer. But we have found them happier, more grateful, and more hospitable than many people we know "in the North."

They rejoice in the simple thrill of achievement, working for themselves, rather than for others, but working together—the wife handing bricks to the husband who never laid bricks before. It is gratifying to see the prairie being changed into fields of wheat, peanuts, sugar beets, sunflowers, and vegetable, fruit, and flower gardens. This should make any heart sing. Had you seen this with us you would know that God has done great things for them.

How often we heard words of sincere appreciation for the help they received when they were "down." That package came when the need was so very great, in answer to prayer. Just to think that someone was thinking of them helped them to continue their trek to freedom. Many names (maybe yours) will be held in grateful remembrance for the help received.

But we are letting them down by not continuing our personal contact with them. Years ago they needed relief; now they need fellowship. If you could visit in a home which you once helped, you would find that they love and serve their Lord as sincerely as you do. You would find souls desiring spiritual fellowship.

Have you an unanswered letter from Uruguay or Paraguay in your desk? Dig it out. The least you can do as a brother or sister in Christ is to spend an evening with them, telling what the Lord has done for you, how you feel about this or that. If you have misplaced the address of your Mennonite friend in another land, write the MCC center for the new address. They will do what they can to bring you together.

In a coming issue we would like to tell something of the conference of the three Mennonite congregations which met in Montevideo recently.

Live Simply

"Live simply," Christ, in essence, says,
"Be anxious not about your life,
Or clothes, or food, or meat, or drink,
Or earthly goods that men may steal."

Yet how my will rebels at this.
For what is life today apart
From cars that glitter as they sit
In places they no longer fit,
Or television with its maze
Of empty, nauseating plays,
Or wash machines that growl and groan
While housewives "work" o'er telephone?

Still life must someday close its doors
On all that I've been working for;
Except the things I've done for Christ
By helping some poor, struggling soul.

Receipts in January for the work of the four boards, which includes missions, Christian service, education-publication, general treasury, ministers' aid, and radio subsidy, were $68,846—very near one month's total budget requirements. Missions and Christian Service, which constitute about 90 per cent of the budget, together received a little more than their budget requirements. The other causes received less than their budget requirements. It would be well if the churches would contribute just a little more for these last four causes during the remaining months of the year.—Treasury Department.

Film Review

Rim of the Wheel, 30 min., Association Films, B and W. Rental, $8.00. Produced by Family Films.

The Rim of the Wheel is the story of Mrs. Virginia Sutton, a young wife and mother of two boys, who spent her time participating in many clubs and activities of the community. This constant round of activities caused her to neglect her home and her church and did not bring her peace and satisfaction.

The film tells how Mr. Dickinson, an old man who lived with the family next door, helped Mrs. Sutton get off the Rim of the Wheel and closer to the axle—closer to God.

The film speaks to a need which all of us have to a greater or lesser degree, the need to keep God at the center of our lives and to choose activities in keeping with this center. The film is well done and could be used either in a worship setting or in a situation in which a discussion would follow on the issues raised.

The Light Shines Through

"God has a way of providing blessing and encouragement just when things look blackest. Saddened by the vicious results of increasing drunkenness and delinquency, we are cheered as a stalwart young man testifies to the help Christ has given in overcoming drink. With many Christians indifferent it is a joy to see others start in service for Christ as teachers in the Sunday school.

"We found it difficult to leave our three year old Rebecca in a Chicago hospital to be treated for tuberculosis. But God has heartened us through the wonderful love and concern shown by brothers and sisters in Christ. Latest reports say that she has shown marked improvement and may be released before too long. Aunt Adah Wenger who visits her frequently finds her well adjusted to her surroundings and happily playing with her friends in the ward."

Is Joy Always Unmixed?

"We speak so much of the joy of Christmas. But, have you ever wondered. . . . Was there perhaps a moment of quiet desperation when Mary heard the words, 'No room,' knowing her time was near? Was there bitterness at the circumstances that forced her to wrap the babe in swaddling clothes and lay him in a manger? Could there have been fear as she learned of the murderous plans of Herod? Was there an uneasy foreboding when Simeon foretold hostility to the child and a sword that would pierce her own heart?

"And yet the angels sang for joy and promised peace. And they were right! They saw God's plan to bring redemption and real joy through sorrow and suffering. If there is a shadow on your life this Christmas, may you see God's hand working in His way to bring joy and blessing."

Flashes of Thought

Steadfast Though Opposed

Walter Gering

Subzero weather is hardly the time to be standing out on the ice at the break of day. But the thrill of watching that little cork sink under the water is enough to compensate for all inconveniences involved. Cold hands and feet, piercing winds—all is forgotten in that moment of excitement. Who would not gladly endure all these for such thrills?

It was one of those days when the lake was almost deserted. Long before break of day we had loaded our equipment in preparation for the journey. The thermometer showed below zero readings; an ominous warning that this was to be a chilly experience. But with the heater in the car pouring out its welcome breezes we were on our way.

It was while we stood out on the lake that my companion dropped a remark which registered in my mind. The holes through the ice had been chopped; the poles were set and the hooks baited. Just as it was ready to be lowered into the icy waters he warned: "Be sure that your cork is light enough." Light enough — what difference did that make? To me, as an amateur fisherman, a cork was a cork. Often I had gone fishing using the same cork. Why should there be any question about it now?

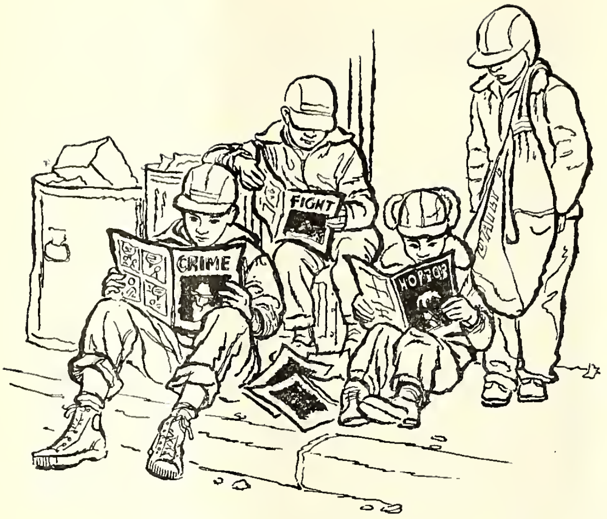
One look at the line convinced him that I needed a lighter cork. As he made the change I learned my lesson. That morning we were fishing for crappies. The report had come to town that crappies were being caught at the lake. So it was that we were fishing for them. The crappie, I was now informed, is a peculiar fish. Some fish plunge at the bait, grab it and rush away. Not so the crappie; it gently takes the bait and slowly draws it down. The least resistance and the hold is released. So it is that the cork must be extremely light; just enough to keep it from sinking when lowered into the water.

That thought intrigued me tremendously. The crappie will let go at the slightest sign of resistance. I thought of another fisherman who had gone out with two companions. He too was an amateur. First they went to the isle of Cyprus and fished there. Then they went to the coast of Asia Minor. They were fishing for men—missionaries of the gospel. Then it was that Mark let go. The resistance was growing. The way was becoming rugged and Mark, feeling the pull of resistance, let go and went home.

How often we too allow ourselves to be frightened by the resistance as we fish for men. Like the crappie we let go and swim away. God give us grace that we may be "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

BE NOT AFRAID OF THEIR TERROR

Horror and



By a Staff Artist, "The Christian Science Monitor." Used by permission.

Willy comes here to our church on Wednesdays for an hour of what he calls "Religious Instruction." He comes from nearby Shakespeare School, shuffling in with his buddies, taking a seat as far back as possible. Then he pulls from his pocket a dirty, well-worn comic book until someone takes it from him.

Willy reads a lot of comic books. He has a collection of fifty which he trades with the "other guys." Willy isn't too different from many of the other boys and girls who come to our church irregularly. He is a veteran movie goer, watches much television and is an avid comic book fan. Willy already has a record of lying, fighting, cheating in school and small thefts around the neighborhood.

Recently in a class I wrote a paper on "The Ethics of the Comic Book." In preparation I asked Willy and his friends to bring their comic books so I might read them. They were glad to—on one condition—that I return every one.

I am writing only about crime and horror comics because 98 per cent of the books the children brought were in this category. Some of the examples I use are taken from the book, Seduction of the Innocent, by Fredric Wertman, M.B., a New York psychiatrist who has studied carefully the relationship of comic books to juvenile delinquency. Other examples come directly from the books I read.

What adults don't know!

- 60,000,000 comic books are printed each month. Some estimates run as high as 80 million.
- 2,500 children are learning to read from Superman work books in the classroom.[1]
- Some children spend two or three hours a day reading comic books.
- Not only delinquent children, but children from Christian homes and parochial schools read comic books.
- In a survey made in a Catholic school, boys gave the following reasons for reading comic books:[2]

excitement	fighting
facts	killing
crime	airplanes
war	westerns

- In 1949 comic books featuring crime, violence and sadism made up one-half of the industry. What about 1955?
- Crime and horror comic books ARE NOT FUNNY!

Crime and horror comic books lay false standards

As I read through the books I found a disgusting potpourri of crime and sex. The atmosphere is unlike anything else in children's literature. It is a world of viciousness. The hero is the torturer or the thief. There is no trust, loyalty, confidence, sympathy, or charity. Everybody is selfish. Crime does pay. Sex is cheap and splashed across many pages. It is a world of gangsters.

In one story an old man was killed in a holdup. The murderer said, "It was not right to kill . . . that man couldn't have obeyed me. That man was stone deaf!" . . . And what if he hadn't been deaf?

Another: "If you kids wanna learn to be like me you gotta be tough. Never give the other guy a break! You always have to slug them . . . ."

An "expert" writing in favor of comic books says, "In general we have offered the strip writer the following advice: 'Actual mutilation should not occur . . . unless the situation can be morally justified.' "

Comic book women

The women portrayed in comic books are hard and ruthless. They shoot as quickly and easily as men. They are not homemakers, do not bring up a family. There is nothing feminine about them. Typical of the kind of woman is one pointing a gun and saying, "You swine trash! I should have killed you."

Adolescents receive a false standard of love. Everything is based on immediate passion and should be taken where it is found. A man stands at the grave of his wife whom he has just murdered. He says, "Goodbye, Mabel, your life is ended, but MINE is just beginning with Jondra." In one comic book all three stories centered around men who had murdered their wives for other women. Titles of the love comics are suggestive: "Fallen Woman," "Runaway Passions," "Price of Pride," "My Foolish Mistake," "Forbidden Love."

for a Dime

Racial prejudice in comic books

Dr. Wertham maintains that comic books help promote racial prejudice. In jungle books the white people are always blond, athletic, and shapely. The natives resemble something between apes and humans. Foreigners are depicted in stereotype, often ugly, misshapen creatures with thick accents. The foreigner is usually the villain.

Superman and horror comics

Superman mixes the human and super-human, defying all laws of gravity. He gives children completely wrong ideas of basic physical laws. Dr. Paul A. Witty, professor of education at Northwestern University says, "They present our world in a kind of Fascist setting of violence, hate, and destruction."

The horror comic portrays human beings as gruesomely as possible. It is a world of the dead—where men feed on dead people, where murdered wives come to haunt their husbands. Is this the concept of death which children shall retain? Likely they will.

Comic books create ethical confusion

In church, at home, in school children are taught basic moral laws. Christian parents and the church try especially to bring children into Christ's way of life. We teach: do not lie, do not steal, do not covet, do not kill, do not commit adultery, love God, love your enemy . . . Yet CRIME AND HORROR COMICS TEACH THE DIRECT OPPOSITE!! Everything is refuted!

How is a child to distinguish when the comic book attracts and pulls for his loyalties? In the parochial school survey used in Dr. Wertham's study, the children confessed to this confusion: "Some are dirty, some give you bad thoughts," "I think they're bad, but good to read," "Some comic books lead us to sin . . ." they said.

Crime comic books give know-how

In the psychiatric clinic in which Dr. Wertham works, many juvenile delinquents told him they had gotten their ideas for crime directly from the comic books. Quoted are but a FEW examples:

> "I got my ideas from the comics—stabbing, robbing, stealing, guns and that stuff."
> "I read about a perfect robbery and used part of it . . . ."
> "I learned to rob cars from the comics . . . ."

Poor reading—poor art

I spent a whole afternoon reading the sordid assortment of comic books my class brought. By the end of the afternoon my eyes burned. The print is too fine, too close. The lines are short and stuffed into "balloons" coming from people's mouths. Compare comics to schoolbooks!

The pictures are stereotyped, crowded, repetitious. The colors are gaudy and cheap. A former illustrator of comic books says of the art work, ". . . very poorly done from the standpoint of the child. They are unimaginative and lacking that freshness and simplicity that characterizes a child's outlook on life . . . . The artist is a machine . . . ."[3]

Willy and the comic books

What about Willy? There are a dozen Willys in our church and a hundred more in the area around. His parents DO NOT CARE. His mother lives with another man. She is glad when he is at church or a movie (it doesn't matter which) or in a corner reading (it doesn't matter what). What will crime comic books do for Willy whose temptations are greater at eleven than most college students face at eighteen? What about his tendency to lie, his calm conscience when he cheats, or the petty thefts already on his record. Will this kind of entertainment help him find THE WAY? Will it help his sense of insecurity? Will it build abiding values? What about his relationship to his Heavenly Father?

I feel a helpless surge of defeat each time I see Willy and his friends going regularly to the movies, or sitting absorbed in crime stories on television, or huddled in a corner reading the comics. It seems like a steady tide coming in to wash away everything we have tried to teach during the one short hour he comes to our church. If Willy goes to a detention home, people will say, "Oh he was bad anyway. You couldn't help him."

Your child and the comics

Children in our Mennonite homes may not be influenced like Willy, for they have a strong mooring in a Christian background. On the other hand, they may be like the parochial school children who find themselves confused.

Regardless of the background, your child's or Willy's, entertainment like comic books subtly and surely helps in conditioning children to godless moral standards, to cheap art and a satisfaction with trashy literature. Does anything which claims so much attention from a child leave him uninfluenced?

What you can do

Movements by lay groups are underway in many cities to remove crime and horror comics from newsstands. Many foreign countries have forbidden their import. A Senate sub-committee on juvenile delinquency has investigated comic books but has given one verdict that "lurid horror books are insignificant as contributory to crime . . . when compared to other influences." A committee in Cincinnati, Ohio, has rated comic books, but not removed them. Agitation must continue to come from concerned parents, teachers, and concerned Christians to stand behind movements to remove crime comic books from newsstands.

From Mission Reports

Here are some excerpts of a report from Brother Arthur Friesen, our missionary among Cheyenne Indian people in Clinton, Oklahoma. It is always encouraging to hear that in the long run our mission work among our Indian people in America has been fruitful. —John Thiessen

Glimpses of Our Mission Work in Oklahoma

"One thing that added a lot to all the Christmas events was a beautiful scene which several Indian boys had painted and which won second prize in the Clinton Chamber of Commerce contest of outdoor decorations.

An Indian family purchased a house in Clinton last week. This Wednesday after the prayer service they served a meal in the church and had open house the next day. We were happy for this opportunity to emphasize Christian home life. Sixty-two were present for the prayer meeting.

One of the very special events during the Christmas season was the Workers' Conference we had in the Clinton Church on December 14, when nineteen Indians and missionaries of the Oklahoma churches met to plan for the 75th anniversary of Indian mission work in Oklahoma and 75 years of Foreign Mission work of our General Conference. This celebration is to be in April of this year.

While planning for and looking forward to this important commemoration one, of course, also looks back over the past years. Close to a thousand persons, mostly Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians, have made a public confession and taken Christ as their personal Savior. There are by this time a few third generation Christians. To see such families actively supporting the work of the church is indeed a rewarding experience.

The young people who join the church through baptism are also the ones who have a desire to better their social, moral, and economic conditions. For many of these it means moving out of the community. When a church membership is small every absent family is keenly felt and the help these young people could give the church is noticed a great deal. We are, however, happy for each one who is making a Christian contribution wherever he or she might be living.

As we worked with our preparations and rehearsals for Christmas the great need of getting the Indian people to take responsibilities and then to carry them to completion was again impressed upon me. There is satisfaction in a job well done. There are too many people, churches, and the Government expecting too little from the Indian people. Indian young people need special encouragement to get a Christian education and then they should be given the opportunity to work and receive pay on an equal basis as their neighbors.

To accept Christ, to lead a consecrated and dedicated life, and to be accepted in the community life is the great need now and always. This will bring joy and peace. To this we want to rededicate ourselves and ask for your prayers, and wherever possible, your encouragement and support."

* * * * *

Here are two short paragraphs culled from a report by Miss Rebecca Nickel, one of our workers among the migrants of Eloy, Arizona. Let us remember our own "citizens on the road."

—John Thiessen

"We had our Sunday school Christmas program December 22. We had fifty-three children participating in the program. In the audience were thirty-one adults and fourteen children. Then if we add the three Habeggers to this and Miss Nickel we had a total of 105 present that night. So that is the best attendance we have had yet at any of our meetings since the work started. We praise the Lord for the good attendance. There were a number out that night who have not attended here before but we trust that they will come back again. They were all given an invitation to return and worship with us here.

Yesterday we heard of a family who lives about four or five miles from here who had had their cabin burn Christmas night. We looked them up yesterday afternoon to see if it was true. So we took them some good used clothes, some towels, two sheets, two blanket sheets, some tea towels, soap and combs and a few other things that we had on hand. They were glad to receive these things. They think that a short in the electrical wires might have set the fire because they had had no fire in the stove. It is a family with eight children at home. There have been quite a number of cabins to burn this year already."

Excerpts from report from Abe Neufeld, New Westminster, B.C., Canada.

"No doubt one of the high lights of the past year or even years which we have been here, was the week of evangelistic meetings that were held in our church from October 24-31. Rev. Henry Unrau (Director of the Canadian Sunday School Mission in B. C.) was the speaker. His heart-stirring messages have caused many of our people to stop and think more seriously about spiritual things. We are happy to report that two of our young people were saved and are now in Bible school. We praise the Lord for that. These are actually the first visible results that we have seen in our work here, and it has to a certain extent given us new zeal and encouragement to go on. It is also a joy to see another family, who before showed very little interest in church affairs and now are regular attendants even at the Bible study and prayer meeting."

Youth Adviser

There once was a youth adviser who had all the qualifications of an ideal youth leader. He had personality and was a capable leader. But more important than that, he was a dedicated disciple of Jesus Christ. For him the most important thing in the world was to follow Jesus and to help others to follow Him too. That is why when he was asked to accept the position of youth adviser in the church he accepted is as the call of God. He saw in this an opportunity to lead young people to Christ, to help young Christians grow and the chance to build a strong youth fellowship in the church.

As a dedicated Christian he was a good example to the young people in the church. They saw that in addition to holding the office of youth adviser he was willing to take part in other church activities. Sunday school and church services were important to him. In fact, Christ and the Church came first in all his thinking and planning. Yet, he wasn't long-faced and overly pious about his religion. The young people knew that he enjoyed his Christian life to the fullest.

Near the top of his list of qualifications was a love for young people. He knew them and was interested in each one personally. He found out what their interests and talents were and then helped them in developing these. The young people considered him their friend. They knew that if they had a problem, little or big, he would be a willing listener. This meant that he was willing to give a lot of time to his job as youth adviser. Not only did he help in the planning of activities but was also willing to give time as a counselor.

A large part of his time as adviser was spent in planning and directing the activities of the group. Here too, he knew the secret of effective youth work. He didn't do all the planning himself and then put on the show for the youth group. He worked with the young people, encouraging them to do as much as they could by themselves. There are times when he would have no doubt done things differently but he knew that young people must be given opportunities to learn, sometimes through mistakes. Of course, he was always there to help begin again if things didn't work out. In all of the planning he attempted to keep the ideals high and the goal in mind. Planning ahead was a must for effective activity.

His interests were wider than the local group. He was acquainted with the Conference organization of the YPU. He was informed about the district organization, its officers and projects. He shared the information with the young group and they in turn planned their activities to fit into the larger organization. They took part in district projects and sent representatives to the district meetings.

It was not surprising that the youth group in the church was alive and active. After all, the adviser is a key person in any youth organization.

Program Helps No. 1 for March

PAX Service

Curtis Janzen

The following program is designed to acquaint you with the work of the PAX program and to let you "live into" the spirit of the work done by PAX men. A second program dealing with PAX in Greece will appear next week.

Scope and Method

This program should help you to see that obedience to Christ is the essential motivation for Christian service, in this case, PAX work.

It should encourage you to consecrate yourself more fully to obedience to Christ in being His disciple.

It should give you some insight into the relationship of PAX to MCC, to Selective Service, to local churches, and into the conditions under which PAX men serve.

It should give you an insight into the physical need in war torn areas in wihch the men are serving.

It should be well to build your first program around slides on PAX work in Germany. A set of slides on PAX work is available from MCC. One part of this set has to do with Germany; the other part is on Greece. Work in some of the things mentioned in the following helps. Plan to use the slides of Greece for the next program.

The prime motivation for service work is obedience to God. Whether one is interested in VS or 1-W or in PAX work, the desire to live for Christ and to follow Him is the motivating force which can renew and strengthen one throughout the entire period of service. If we are Christians then Christ's command to us is "Come and follow me. Follow me in going on to school or in doing your tasks at home. Follow me into a period of Voluntary Service. Follow me into PAX work overseas for two years. I want you and your life. And if you follow me I will bless you, for it is in giving of yourself that you are blessed. It is in losing your life for my sake that you will find life abundant and free and full of joy."

Purposes of PAX: The following, taken from the "PAX Services Handbook," is the challenge and aim of the PAX program: To provide projects that offer opportunities to alleviate human need and tensions, to give encouragement to those less fortunate than we, and to help resettle and rehabilitate the displaced peoples in various parts of the world. To provide an opportunity for a positive Christian witness by the individual and the group on the project. To provide this experience as a means for self development. Working in intimate contact with people of other backgrounds, the dedicated worker will broaden his own personality and understanding. To promote international goodwill and understanding through the total impact of the program by working with citizens of other countries in a spirit of sharing and brotherly love. To bring our church constituency a greater consciousness and fuller realization of the suffering and the hopelessness found in a soul-sick world. This contrast will help us appreciate our own spiritual opportunities and our abundance of material wealth which we so often take for granted.

What is PAX?

"PAX" in simplest terms is Voluntary Service done overseas. The word PAX is not an abbreviation. It is a Latin word which means peace. The program has this name because MCC and those who serve intend it to be a definite peace witness effort. At the time the program was started conscientious objectors were not required to do any type of service in lieu of military service. Some of these CO's came to be of the conviction that if their nonresistance, born out of Christian love, meant anything to them, it should be a positive, constructive effort for peace rather than a negative refusal to participate in war. To them this meant getting out and doing something about it. When they learned of the MCC's plans to construct homes for warsufferers in Germany, they decided to go to help people who only a few years before had been at war with us, to show them that Christian love reached to them, beyond national borders, even to those who were supposedly enemies.

Later on, because of the sincerity of conviction expressed by the first PAX men, this program as well as other VS programs in which draft age men had participated, was recognized by Selective Service as a legitimate alternative to military service.

In several very concrete ways the PAX men have performed a service for peace. Many people in Germany wondered who these PAX fellows were and what they were doing. Most people took them to be part of the army since they were Americans. When they heard that PAX men were civilians and were interested in working for peace they were quite surprised. Germans have experienced America as an enemy and an occupying power. They felt American bombs on their cities; they felt all the suffering from the war. Most of the destruction on their cities fell from American planes. As an occupying power America was not loved either. Because of this background the PAX testimony of love and service to all men, regardless of nationality, leaves a definite contribution to international goodwill and understanding. Where PAX men got into discussions with Europeans and especially with young people, they had the opportunity to discuss their differences and acquaint themselves with the way people live and think in other countries.

PAX assistance in war-torn areas, Germany: PAX work has taken up a phase of assistance to war-sufferers in Germany that is a natural follow-up to MCC food and clothing distributions in filling the physical needs of men. This is the work of building homes. MCC has actively assisted many refugees, mostly Mennonites, to emigrate either to North or South America. Obviously not all refugees wanted to or could emigrate. Eleven million refugees and East German expellees had found their way into West Germany during and after the war. They all wanted homes. In addition many people in West Germany needed homes because theirs had been bombed out during the war. People were forced to live in attics, tar-paper shacks, refugee camps, barracks or factory buildings were only blanket partitions separated one family from the next. The unpleasantness cannot be overemphasized. Good homes and houses are as essential to good family life and raising of children in Germany as they are in America. The need was thus not only a physical need but a moral one on which hinges the training of youth for the next generation. PAX, by building homes for these people is making a real contribution in an area of need.

The PAX program was begun in March of 1951. Twenty men comprised the first groups that began work in northern Germany at a former Nazi ammunitions dump, Espelkamp. The munitions storage buildings had been and were being rebuilt to make homes for refugees in a new city. The present population of this city is about 4,000. Here PAX men constructed in little more than a year's time five new buildings with apartments for 20 refugee families. Houses were all of a cinder block construction, according to German custom and building specifications. A short-term project was begun in August, 1951, after the arrival of eight additional men to make the cinder blocks to be used in the construction of these and other houses to be built in the future by PAX men.

After the completion of Espelkamp (May, 1952) and the closing of the secondary project at Neuwied, a new and larger project, was begun at Backnang. This project is still under construction. A first installment of ten six-apartment houses was completed, and occupied by January, 1954. Apartments for an additional forty families are now under construction and should be completed by fall of 1955. PAX men together with the refugees who have moved into the new houses are now constructing a church to serve as the center of the new community. PAX men conduct their own services under the leadership of a PAX pastor, but also attend and participate in German services. It is the sincere hope of the men that their contribution in building will be a contribution not only for the physical comfort of these homeless people but also a genuine asset and inspiration in building a new spiritual life for individual and community.

In June of 1952 a new project was begun in North Germany in Luebeck on the coast of the Baltic Sea. In eleven months five houses with apartments for seventeen families were constructed. An average of eight men served in this project; here for the first time they had an American girl to serve as matron for the unit. This policy was adopted as well for Backnang and subsequent units.

Upon completion at Luebeck the men began another of the current projects at Endenbach. With several houses already complete. The settlement is planned for a total of sixty apartments. The third current project is at Wedel near the large Hanseatic city of Hamburg. Eleven duplexes with forty-four apartments are being constructed there. Churches are in the planning for all of the projects.

The projects are only partly financed by MCC. The down payment of 2000 German marks, approximately $375, which refugees must raise in order to get further loans and government assistance is raised by MCC. Most refugee families, because they had lost everything in the war, find it impossible to raise even the down payment.

PAX men work at all phases of the construction work under the supervision of German "master" foremen. Germans are very specialized and are quite surprised that unskilled and untrained PAX men are so adept at picking up most jobs on a building project. The work which the PAX men do is donated to the refugee family and results in a large saving to the refugee. Approximately fifty men are serving in the Germany units. For about 19 months several PAX men were on special assignment to Mennonite Voluntary Service in Holland where they worked alongside other European young people, especially Mennonites, in the flood areas. Their work was flood clean-up and reconstruction. The boys' experiences here were especially challanging and their appreciation and understanding of Europeans was broadened. Other PAX men are occasionally given special assignments within the larger MCC program on the basis of merit or are loaned to other agencies.

PAX work has begun in other areas as well with PAX men serving in ten different countries.

The Blessings of Serving: Upon going into a church on Sunday morning, a visiting minister dropped $.50 into an offering box in the vestibule. After church the deacon walked to the offering box, and as he opened it he remarked that it was the practice to give the visiting minister whatever was in the box. There was only $.50 in it. The son of the visiting minister remarked, "Daddy, you should have put more into it and you would have gotten more out of it." So it is with Christian living and service, the more we put into it the more we get out.

If I could exchange my service experience, I would be at a loss to know what to exchange it for. The $5,000 or $6,000 I might have earned during the two years certainly could not buy it. It can't be returned in terms of money. My personal enrichment in terms of places seen, things learned, understanding gained, new vision and spirit in life found, new joy in being a Christian and spiritual values are worth more than money. Christ spoke the truth when he said "He that comes after me and loses his life for my sake shall find it." The change in my own life, in lives of other volunteers, has brought me a fuller life which I never knew before. I can heartily recommend such service for anyone who is interested.

With the end of the winter quarter, Feb. 25, the staff of the college student newspaper, "The Bethel Collegian," of the past year will discontinue its work and a new editor, James Banman, and his staff will assume responsibility for the newspaper.

The "Collegian" is the responsibility of the student council in co-operation with the Journalism Department. Students with journalistic training and experience are selected by the student council to function as an editorial staff. Chosen as business manager by the student council is William Ewert, a junior student from Hillsboro.

James Banman, a sophomore from Lehigh, has served as an associate editor of the "Collegian" the past year. To assist him, the new editor has chosen Jane Epp, a sophomore from Henderson, Neb., and Berneil Rupp, freshman from Moundridge.

Dr. S. F. Pannabecker, president of Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, spent Monday, Feb. 7, on the Bethel campus in the interests of the seminary. He delivered the message in the morning chapel, challenging college young people to consider church and church-related vocations. He met with individual students interested in seminary work and took the opportunity to discuss the future of the seminary with faculty members, ministers, and others.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

The Vesper Choir, under the direction of Professor Russell Lantz, presented its first full scale sacred concert of the season in the First Mennonite Church of Bluffton, on Sunday evening, Feb. 13. Future plans of the choir include concerts in the community and outlying areas plus an Eastern tour after the close of school in June.

Officers of the Vesper Choir for this year are: LaMar Reichert, president; Adele Bertsche, secretary; Helen Neufeld, treasurer; James Bishop, business manager; John Rogers, stage manager; Anne Crabtree, custodian; Marion Keeney, reporter; and Mary Hilty and Shirley Shelmadine, librarians. Dr. S. F. Pannabecker and Rev. Don. Smucker of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago, visited the Bluffton campus on Friday, Feb. 11. Dr. Pannabecker and Rev. Smucker led a faculty religious discussion meeting, and Rev. Smucker also addressed the student body at the regular chapel service, challenging the students with the need for ministers today.

Dr. J. S. Schultz, Dr. Robert Kreider, and Mrs. Carl Lehman attended the joint District Peace Committee meeting with the General Conference Peace Committee in Chicago on Feb. 15 and 16. Dr. Schultz gave a report on the 1-W Program Evaluation Study which he conducted together with the Mennonite Central Committee.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Rev. Robert W. Hartzler, pastor of the Eighth Street Mennonite Church of Goshen, Indiana, will conduct the Bible week services at Freeman Junior College February 27 to March 4. Each morning in chapel he will address the students and each evening there will be services open to the public at Pioneer Hall. His chapel subjects will be: Monday—"The Roots of Personal Religion"; Tuesday—"The Deception of Good Intentions"; Wednesday—"On Choosing Good Advice"; Thursday—"Why We Fail"; Friday—"Character and Conduct."

For the evening services he will speak on: Sunday—"That the Ministry Be Not Blamed"; Monday—"Awake, and Christ Will Give You Light"; Tuesday—"Let Love Be Respected"; Wednesday—"Have This Mind"; Thursday—"Denial!"; Friday—"The Heart of the Gospel."

Rev. Russell Mast, pastor of the Salem-Zion Mennonite Church near Freeman, was guest speaker in chapel, February 9. "He that is faithful in a very little is faithful also in much" was the theme of his remarks. He stressed, (a) that all great enterprises of life are made up of an infinite number of details and that the one who can master the details can master the enterprise; (b) that the little tasks must always be seen against the background of a larger purpose; (c) that one must learn to do the ordinary things in an extraordinary way—do more than is required and thereby transform obligations into challenges; (d) that a man needs to find the work which he can be convinced God calls him to do.

The education department has announced that several of the teacher training students have already accepted teaching appointments for the coming year. There is a great demand for well-qualified elementary schoolteachers and teacher placement becomes a problem only because there are not enough qualified candidates to fill the demand.

Rosemary Linscheid, registrar at the college, attended the meeting of the YPU officers at North Newton, Kansas. She is Secretary of the Union.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Leola Schultz and William Gering attended a cabinet meeting of the Young People's Union on February 12. The meeting was held at the Bethel College Campus, North Newton, Kansas.

February is the month for recruiting volunteers for our programs of Voluntary Service. On Monday and Tuesday, Leola Schultz, representing General Conference Voluntary Service and the MCC representatives were on the Bethel College campus to present the challenge of VS to the students and friends of the surrounding communities.

Rev. Robert W. Hartzler of Goshen, Indiana, is spending time at the Seminary teaching the Mennonite students of the Pastoral Ministry class. Dr. Robinson, the regular teacher of the class, is continuing his work with the Brethren students. This is a time when special Mennonite and Brethren emphasis can be given in the two sections of the class.

World Day of Prayer observance was held on Friday, February 25. The Mennonite churches of the city met together at the Brighton Mennonite Church for an afternoon service.

George Hauser, who has just returned from a trip to Africa for the Fellowship of Reconciliation, spoke at the Woodlawn Mennonite Church on Sunday evening, February 20.

MCC News Notes

FIRST RELIEF SUPPLIES DISTRIBUTED IN INDOCHINA

Reports of the first clothing, soap, and Christmas food package distributions in Indochina have reached MCC headquarters. Distributions began in late December and were made in refugee camps in the area of Dalat which is approximately 200 miles northeast of Saigon, the capital city.

MCC personnel were impressed by the appreciative way in which the families received these relief supplies and hoped the recipients were made conscious of the Christian concern motivating these distributions. In a majority of cases a gospel tract was given to each family.

Between clothing distributions the relief workers dispersed Christmas food packages made available to MCC from U. S. government food surplus stocks. In all of these distributions the MCC workers have encountered innumerable obstacles and delays—conditions quite characteristic of the slow-moving Orient.

At this time the team of four workers in Indochina is evaluating the needs and conditions of the people to determine the most effective type of assistance. It appears that the need is for long-term assistance rather than that of an emergency nature. They are discovering that operating costs are rather high in Indochina.

NEW HOSPITAL RATE AT BROOK LANE FARM

A new brochure for physicians describing the psychiatric services of Brook Lane Farm, Hagerstown, Md., announces a change in minimum rates effective March 1. The slight increase in rates from $6 to $6.50 a day is occcasioned by generally rising prices. This is the first increase since 1951. The rate of $6.50 a day covers routine nursing care, occupational therapy, room, board, and laundry. In addition to this regular hospital fee there are charges for medicines and physicians' services.

RETREAT HELD FOR BUENOS AIRES MENNONITE YOUTH

A youth retreat for Mennonite young people in the vicinity of Buenos Aires, Argentina, was held Feb. 19 to 22. Arranged by Martin Duerksen, the MCC representative in Argentina, this retreat was the first of its kind for Mennonite youth in that area. Similar to those held in North America, the retreat included Bible studies and presentations and discussions about the Christian life, the Christian home, and the Church. Speakers were to include Brother Duerksen and Otto Giesbrecht of Beamsville, Ont., MCC worker in Asuncion, Paraguay, who was to be in Buenos Aires at the time.

CLOTHING AND SEEDLINGS TO JORDAN'S NEEDY

Ada and Ida Stoltzfus of Morgantown, Penn., report the distribution of clothing to 3,007 families in frontier villages and in Hebron City, Hashemite Jordan, during a recent month. Among the recipients were some Bedouin tribes living among some hills in the direction of the Dead Sea. Another recent activity of the Stoltzfus twins has been the distribution of 5,000 olive trees and 2,500 grape vines to poor village farmers. These seedlings, made available through the co-operation of the Jordan and U. S. governments, are an effort to offer long-term assistance. Olive trees grow slowly but last for hundreds of years. In addition to providing food, these trees and grape vines also increase the value of the land—much of which is bare and rocky.

PARAGUAY MCC PERSONNEL PLAN RETREAT

MCC personnel in Paraguay are looking forward to several days of spiritual refreshment during a retreat to be held March 5, 6, and 7 near a lake east of Asuncion. The speaker will be Walter H. Dyck of Whitewater, Kan., who is in South America this year as a representative of the General Conference Mennonite Church. The MCC workers feel that by March 5, the weather should be a bit cooler as the past summer has been very dry and hot.

—Tokepa Church, Topeka, Ind.: The Christmas program was given Sunday evening, Dec. 19, which was a service of carols and candles, consisting of music by the adult and children's choirs and congregation and a candle-lighting service. White gifts were presented for various organizations and individuals. The children's department sent in their white gifts—32 stuffed toys, to the Indian mission at Canton, Okla., and 12 sets of dominoes to the Indians at Tuba City, Ariz. After the service a group went caroling. The congregational business meeting was held on the evening of Dec. 30, when officers for the coming year were elected and reports given. The meat canner of the MCC was in this territory during the first week in January when beef and chicken were canned; $270 was raised in this congregation for the project. During the month of January a school of missions was held for the Sunday evening meetings. Jan. 9, Don Bowen led the meeting which was an over-all picture of our mission work of the General Conference. Rev. and Mrs. Leland Harder of the First Church of Chicago, showed pictures and told of their work Jan. 23. Jan. 30 the WMS had charge of the service with Mrs. Garth Stoltz as leader. J. E. Hartzler was the speaker. His subject was India and Pakistan.—Opal King, Corr.

—First Church, Hutchinson, Kan.: At our annual church meeting it was decided to start a building fund, as we are very much in need of Sunday school classrooms. How this fund was to be raised was left to the council to decide. It also was decided to have an all-church picnic this year, maybe at Camp Mennoscah. Our church has started a Brotherhood organization to which all the men of the church belong. A religious census was taken in our town in which some of our members helped. Our junior choir sometimes sings for services which is appreciated very much. Our minister brings very good sermons; now it's up to us to live accordingly.—Mrs. J. H. Epp, Corr.

—Eden Church, Moundridge, Kan.: Walter Gering, Mountain Lake, Minn., a former pastor, served for a week of special services Oct. 25-31. The services were climaxed by the Harvest Festival thank-offerings totaling $14,828.32, which were designated for missions and relief. Russell Mast, Freeman, S. D., was speaker for the Peace Institute held Nov. 21. CROP reports show that McPherson County topped the state in contributions during 1954. Our members contributed both wheat and cash. Washington Resettlement, Child Evangelism, and Refugee Sponsorship have been among the subjects discussed at the Wednesday evening services. Our pastor recently concluded a series of sermons on the Gospel of Luke. Holy Communion was observed Jan. 2. At a special business meeting, Dec. 29, it was decided to elect a Refugee Committee, sponsor two families, and to create a special revolving fund for aiding refugees. At the annual C. E. banquet, Jan. 1, Ernst Harder was the speaker. Jan. 2, Rev. and Mrs. Abe Cummings began their return trip to India as missionaries. Mrs. Cummings is the former Alida Schrag, a member of our church. Rev. Cummings is a native of Scotland. They spent three months visiting Mrs. Cummings' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dan D. Schrag, and other relatives.—Victor R. Goering, Corr.

—Gospel Church, Mountain Lake, Minn.: "Keys to Prosperity" was the pastor's New Year's Day message. Our pastor, A. H. Schultz, gave the message at the 44th Annual Sunday School Convention held on Jan. 2, for the community. Prayer week services were held the first week of January. Beginning Jan. 9, the pastor's Sunday morning messages are a series of Expositional Studies from the Book of Acts. The young people went tobogganing at their monthly Youth Fellowship meeting, Jan. 10. The King's Co-Workers and Daughters met for the 1955 organizational meeting. The Daughters sang for the sick and aged during the evening. Mr. and Mrs. Albert Rahn and son Kenneth left Jan. 13 for Topeka, Kansas, where the former is in 1-W service at the Menninger Hospital. A catechism class was started Jan. 16 held during the Sunday school hour. Missionary and Mrs. P. J. Nickel and family presented the Alaska Mission work in message, songs and pictures at a service Sunday evening, Jan. 16. The pastor is teaching a teacher's training class on Monday evenings, the course on "Teaching Methods." Jan. 25 was workday for the King's Co-Workers Missionary Society for Missionary Tina Quiring. The church year books have been distributed to members. On Wednesday evening, Jan. 26, at the regular midweek service Rev. and Mrs. Ross Goodall of Kitchener, Ontario, told and showed pictures of their work among the Jewish people.—Mrs. Waldo Stoesz, Corr.

—Immanuel Church, Downey, Calif.: Jan. 16 marked the dedication of our new sanctuary in Downey, Calif. Our first services were held in the new building Sunday morning with the dedication set for 3:00 o'clock in the afternoon. Dr. Wilbur M. Smith, of Fuller Theological Seminary, brought the dedication sermon entitled "The Church, the Body of Christ." Special musical renditions included a sixty voice choir singing the "Hallelujah Chorus," several selections from the Men's Chorus and a vocal duet. Approximately 800 members and friends of the church were in attendance, many of whom visited together at a light lunch in the Fellowship Hall following the afternoon meeting. The Whittier College A Cappella Choir brought the services of the day to a joyous climax at the 7:00 o'clock program of music and song. We surely praise the Lord for His faithfulness to us as a church and pray that we may, in turn, be faithful in the work to which He has called us. At present our pastor, John Graber, is bringing a series of timely messages on missions. Sunday evening, Jan. 23, Samuel Entz, missionary under the General Conference to the Belgian Congo was in charge of the service. Our annual church business meeting was held Friday evening, Jan. 28. All outgoing and incoming council members met Feb. 1, to reorganize and make new appointments for this year.—Lorraine Regehr, Corr.

Is all this impossible, impractical, and unprobable? The task of the Church has always been to do the impossible. Could it be God's will that Mennonites unite?

Go worship with your neighbor Mennonite, pray together, visit together and then you will notice the "iron curtains" of your mind slowly parting and perhaps sooner than yours, his mind and heart will respond to brotherly love which is in Christ Jesus. You will soon feel within your heart a longing to be together in proclaiming to the world a Savior which is Christ the Lord.

Could it be that it is the Lord's will that the Mennonite iron curtains be opened? Could it be that we have been blinded in this area? May we seek His guidance as we deal with this problem.

THOUGHTS FROM PSALM 105

With grateful hearts we call on Thee,
Thy miracles let all men know;
O sing ye praises to the Lord,
Tell all His wonders He doth show.

Now let the heart of them rejoice,
That seek Thy face, O Lord, most High;
All glory give His holy Name,
Who made the earth and sea and sky.

Inquire about His marvelous strength,
Display His banners, now unfurled;
Remember His omnipotence,
Is seen o'er all the world.

A PRAYER FOR LENT

O Lord, Thou knowest the weakness and misery of Thy creatures. We have nothing, but what matter—so long as we have Thee, so long as we can seek Thee with certainty of finding all that is not to be found in ourselves. So help us, to seek Thee. Through Jesus Christ. Amen. (Archbishop Fenelon, A.D., 1651)

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

1. To work for a Conference unified in Christ.
2. To teach the gospel of Christ effectively.
3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

I BELIEVE IN JESUS CHRIST, OUR LORD

The Apostle's Creed begins in the beginnning: the matter about God must be settled first. Then we can go on to the next tremendous statement; "I believe in Jesus Christ, His only Son, Our Lord."

We cannot escape Jesus Christ. We need Him at every turn of the road. We are fascinated and lured by His power; shamed and criticized by His Holiness; stirred and awakened by His ideals. The finger of Christ points at the weak spot in every age and in every life. Why not stand at attention before Him and humbly and sincerely say, "I believe in Jesus Christ, Our Lord."

I believe in Jesus; that was His name as a man. It was the name His parents and neighbors used. It is another form of the ancient name, Joshua. The name Jesus stands for the humanity of Jesus; He needed food, sleep, and rest. He is close to our weakness and understands all about our physical feelings and needs. He was a great Teacher, a great Leader, and a great Example. He lived completely what He taught. He made life a masterpiece.

I believe in Christ; the messiah and deliverer. In Jesus we find our guide but in Christ we find our God. To try to live like Jesus becomes impossible unless we believe in Him as the Divine Christ. We believe in Jesus as the way, the truth, and the life; but we believe also in Christ who makes that way and truth and life possible. We need an example, a norm. But we need even more a divine Christ who grants forgiveness, restoration and who links us with God.

I believe in Jesus Christ, our Lord. Here belief joins commitment. We may say we believe in Jesus and His complete humanity; in Christ and His deity; but unless we humbly accept Him as our Lord, our words of professed belief may do us little good. It is not enough to confess Christ in the sanctuary if we are not willing to follow Him in the street; to praise Him in worship if we reject Him in our daily living.

When we actually believe in and fully accept Jesus Christ as our Lord then we have real life. For when our little tangled lives are turned over completely to Him, then He gives us the life abundant. We are no longer alone but linked in a divine fellowship; God in Christ is with us.

"I believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of Heaven and Earth; and in Jesus Christ, His only Son, our Lord."

NO INDIA VISAS FOR CANADIANS

In a recent issue of The Mennonite (February 8) a news item was quoted to the effect that British Commonwealth citizens would now need visas to enter India. Apparently this news item was in error, or the order was rescinded shortly after it became effective, for the latest information is that, in the words of the Consulate General of India in New York City, "A Canadian citizen holding a valid passport does not require a visa to enter India, whether as a missionary or for any other purpose."

We rejoice in this news. One of our Canadian missionaries, Miss Anne Penner, sailed for India, February 8. About the middle of January she had checked with the Consulate in Ottawa and was informed that she did not need a visa.

May the Church continue to pray that the doors to India may be kept open and that much work for Christ may be done unhindered with such restrictions. But it is important to work while it is day, for the time may come when mission work may be much more restricted.

ACTIVE PACIFISM

The article in this week's issue on the subject of "Passive-ism and Pacifism" deals with a timely issue. To many people, the idea of a nonresistant Christian is simply one who is nonactive and nonco-operative. Many seem to interpret pacifism merely as an escape from the hardships of military duty.

But to be a conscientious objector to war must mean much more than just to be an "objector." There must be a vital positive attitude toward the direction of goodwill and Christian love. If we claim to have a more powerful force on our side than the weapon of military might, then it is up to us to prove it and give actual demonstrations of how it works. If love is the strongest force in the world then we who claim to be guided by that force must release its power for good on every occasion.

Fortunately, this is being done more and more. Our quick response to need in disaster areas, as well as our work among refugees and needy are means of showing the positive side of our belief. These are examples that people can see and understand.

The present movement to organize our communities to be ready to assist in disasters of various kinds is to be commended and encouraged. Prompt, efficient, and unselfish aid in time of actual need will give more positive proof of our belief of love as the greatest power than many a year of sermons without such concrete demonstration of active goodwill. Let's go the second mile, yes, the third and tenth. This will prove our sincerity for peace and goodwill.

Approaching God Through the Lord's Prayer

FRANK R. MITCHELL

The opening words of the Lord's Prayer have a striking effect upon the pray-er. Anyone who will use them thoughtfully is on his way to being prepared for the presence of God. A simple analysis of the words, "Our Father who art in heaven," will show this to be so.

First, to pray these words sincerely and fervently is to acknowledge that it is possible to talk with God as one person to another. It becomes evident that access to God is not a complicated matter. It becomes clear that God is not very far away. The words breathe the spirit of assurance, humility, and reverence. To pray them from the heart does much to bring one into a right attitude for fellowship with God. The words are infectious. They inspire one with implicit trust in God. They are words full of faith. One is thrilled with joy to discover that in praying them, he is actually believing that God is willing to receive into His very presence, even such an one as he.

The words are so simple and familiar that it is difficult to grasp their full significance. Let one seek to consider the meaning of the word "Father" as Jesus gave it and as it was received by those who heard Him. It was upon the authority of Jesus that the word was given for use in prayer. Only in a restricted sense was the word used concerning God in the Old Testament. It was used in describing a national relationship between God and His people. It was never used in connection with individuals and God, and it was never used in prayer, in any sense.

Jesus was the first to use the word in his own prayers to God. He also used the term to describe His own personal relationship with God. The word was often used by Him as He spoke to the people about God. Whenever He used the word it stirred deep and mixed feelings in the heart of every Jew. They avoided the use of any direct reference to God by name, and they had never heard any man use the word "Father" the way Jesus used it.

The key to the meaning of father is relationship. The word refers to a direct intimate relationship. A Jew might refer to Abraham as his father, but no Jew before Jesus ever spoke that way about God. Jesus' use of the word, then, demanded a decision from every one who heard him. Either he was proclaiming something unique and true, or he was hopelessly deluded, or he deliberately blasphemed. For one to accept this word relating to Jesus and God as unique and true, was to bring such a person to the convincing confession, which was Peter's, when he said, "Thou art . . . the Son of the living God!"

It was a great experience to confess that Jesus was the divine Son of God. New implications of this truth developed every day. But one of the most astonishing developments to grow out of this teaching came as Jesus taught His disciples, "When ye pray, say, 'Father.'" This was a radical step forward. The conviction grew that He was the Son of God. All that He was and said and did agreed. But for the disciples to be "given the right to become sons of God," so that they might call Him "Abba, Father," this was a wholly new revelation.

To take the word from the lips of Jesus and to use it as He bade them meant that God loves and provides for His children. It meant a sense of mutual possession and fellowship. It acknowledged His right over the lives of His children, to discipline, guide and command. It meant a new sense of God. He was Father in a special way; not by way of creation only, but by the grace of God, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Second, to see God in His proper relationship reveals other relationships. Jesus said, "After this manner pray ye: 'Our Father.'" It is learned that this is a relationship that is to be shared. A sinner stands alone in Christ before God and discovers a whole family of relations with obligations and responsibilities. "When ye pray, say, 'Our Father.'"

The very first word of the prayer makes the worshiper a member of a group. His expressions are to be representative; his needs and petitions, shared. There is recognition of the concerns of others. There are many approaching God and He is one. Praying the prayer, then, eliminates all selfishness.

And yet, while it is evident from the first that the prayer is intended to be a corporate prayer, with petitions which take account of others, it is, at the same time, a prayer that is to be prayed in the closet, after the door has been shut. This need not be a literal room that is meant, nor does it speak against public prayer. Jesus prayed in public. But it means that each prayer is to be a secret prayer to God alone. It is a personal prayer with an individual approach. The consciousness of the presence of others, or even the insistent intruding of one's own straying thoughts interfere with the reality of the meeting with God. There may be "Two or three gathered together" to pray a united prayer in His name, but in the midst of the group there must be privacy before God. In a certain very real sense, unless one can effectually shut the door of his heart to all others but God, there can be no satisfactory contact with Him. The old saying "Two is company, three is a crowd" was never more true than it is here. The Lord's Prayer begins with "our" and continues with "us," and it is also intended to be an intimate, personal and secret conversation with God.

Finally, "Our Father in heaven" speaks to us of His greatness and holiness. It speaks of the reverence that we owe Him, and of His power to bless our lives. It also keeps before us the realization that heaven is the true home of our souls, and that as His children, we must set our minds on things above.

The invocation of this solemn, noble prayer, will lead us into the presence of God, if we follow the leading of our Lord.

Our Father,
Grant us a greater desire
To enter into Thy presence.

Highlights of Missionary Observations VII

ANDREW R. SHELLY

In addition to visiting our own General Conference Mennonite mission fields, it has been a joy to observe the work of sister Mennonite conferences. Already I mentioned some contacts in Japan and India. Now I want to share with the readers of The Mennonite our very wonderful time with two fields of the Eastern Mennonite Conference. They are located in Ethiopia and Tanganyika.

Our route of travel took us south through the eastern part of Africa. We therefore had good opportunity to stop in the two countries mentioned.

Ethiopia

I. Our visit. Brother Clayton Keener was at the airport to meet us upon arrival on Jan. 28. Until our departure Feb. 2, we had the privilege of observing the work of the Mennonite mission as well as other work in Ethiopia. The first evening was spent in general "get acquainted" and spiritual fellowship. Saturday we observed something of the work of the school for blind boys and generally visited places in and around Addis Ababa.

Sunday I had the privilege of preaching twice. The morning service was a chapel in which English services are held for missionary personnel, English speaking whites and Africans. In the afternoon the service was sponsored by the Inter-Missionary fellowship. Through these two services we met many missionaries.

Monday we went to Nazareth—60 miles. In the evening we appreciated a general missionary gathering. We observed the work of the hospital and Bible school. We also saw the large Dutch sugar plantation and factory employing 5,000 people.

II. The work. This mission work is one of the newer ones among Mennonite missions. It is an outgrowth of MCC work mainly at Nazareth. (Not only does MCC have a powerful witness, but it has led to the opening of a number of mission fields.) There are now over thirty missionaries serving in five stations. One of the unique aspects of the work is the operation of a school for blind boys. Emperor Haile Selassie sponsors the school and the missionaries have many contacts with him. The spiritual ministry in the school is wonderful.

The missionaries have a good start. Souls have found Christ. The ministry of healing—physical and spiritual—is going forth. Workers are being trained.

III. The future. Ethiopia provides a unique challenge. It is one of the few independent countries in Africa. It has an emperor. The population is 16,500,000. There has been a church in Ethiopia since the fourth century. There are many Moslems in Ethiopia. The challenge of evangelical missions in Ethiopia is very great. As the country raises the standard of living for the masses, new challenges present themselves. The presence of the huge sugar factory just eight miles from Nazareth is one "straw in the wind" as to the future. The Mennonite mission in Ethiopia is well rooted and faces the glorious future in the Name and Spirit and Power of Christ. Problems? Yes, yes—of course! But, also the opportunities—and the promised power of the Holy Spirit!

Tanganyika

I. Our visit. We arrived at Musoma, eight miles from the location of the Mennonite Mission, on Friday, Feb. 4. Sisters Leatherman and Eby were present to meet us. The location of the mission is impressive, overlooking one of the bays of Lake Victoria.

Saturday we went to the Shirati station. We were able to observe natives all along the way. We visited the various phases of the work at Shirati—hospital, leper work, school, etc.

Sunday was my first experience in a distinctly African church. It was spiritually stimulating to worship with them and preach. In the afternoon we went to Nyabasi. Here we observed the work. Early Monday morning we returned to Musoma. That day and Tuesday we got a further insight into the work in the Musoma area.

II. The work. The Mennonite Mission in Tanganyika began work in the middle 30s. There are now almost forty missionaries on the field. They have six main stations. While we could only visit three, we did get a chance to observe the various phases of the work. We were impressed with the progress made and the vision for the future. For example, the congregation at Shirati has about 450 members. The man who taught the Sunday school lesson was an African as well as the pastor.

The activities of the hospital, dispensaries, primary schools, middle schools, etc., were impressive. Also of special interest was the printing press and Bible school. This strikes at two very urgent mission needs—literature and native leaders.

As has been the case all along the way, the fellowship with the missionaries has been gloriously wonderful. In sharing spiritual insights one receives great blessing.

III. The future. Tanganyika has 8,000,000 people. Mission work is not easy. Problems common to us in the U. S. exist. But, in addition are many others. The Catholic church is making a powerful bid. The mission is well established. The missionaries have spiritual depth and vision. The Lord is blessing. The African church is growing. In entire East Africa there are tensions. The need for the spread of the gospel is urgent.

Conclusion

This is just a very brief glimpse into the two missions of our sister conference. We hope to be able to

Passive-ism or Pacifism

RONALD KIRKWOOD*

The definition one might give for a Passive-ist is not one that most of us would want used to describe ourselves. The term implies inactivity, quiescence, indecision, etc. One might describe the Passive-ist as one who might, figuratively speaking, "fiddle while Rome burns." Verbally he may loudly profess to love his enemy and his neighbor as himself, but in terms of action he is content to keep the home fires burning and let the rest of the world go by. He, like Pilate, stands on the platform trying the crucified world, yea even the crucified Savior, for the two are inseparable, and like his historic predecessor washes his hands of the blood stains of war. Then, this being done, he turns the world over to the chaotic mob of warriors, to be crucified. But despite his efforts to rest in his piety the blood of this world remains on his hands and he stands judged for his Passive-ism!

Too often I feel, the above description might apply to us. We have made the terms Pacifism and Passive-ism synonymous. We have enshrouded the term Pacifism with so much of the "I refuse" negative cloak that we have lost the "I will" positive armour. In short, we have made Pacifism, Passive-ism!

We Pacifists say we refuse to fight because we have a better way, the way of love. But does this love not need some positive action to demonstrate it? Is love shown through mere abstinence from violence? No, love is the warmth in each human heart that is a dying ember and bursts into visible flame only when fanned by the bellows of Christian service to our fellow men. Love cannot be hoarded, it must be spent to increase and sometimes the sum is our life itself. Love cannot be expressed in words alone. A mother might tell her child a hundred times a day how much she loves him, but if her actions did not demonstrate that love the child would not be deceived. So God might have told us also of His infinite love, but if he had not "so loved the world to send his only begotten son" would we not all be lost? Love cannot be hidden or deceived. If it is present it will show itself in a thousand little ways each day and if it is absent it cannot be constructed from the most eloquent phrases or timeworn repetition of the words "brotherhood of man." Love then is either genuine or false, and if it is really genuine it will be demonstrated in terms of action. If we say we have Christian love must we too then not take action?

Our government, as at no other time in history, is giving us the freedom to demonstrate this love through the medium of alternative service. No one truly conscientiously opposed to war is forced to take up arms and what is more, many are getting paid for their alternative services. We can truly thank God for our free, generous nation! Yet, it is significant that our government in its very tolerance is employing its most effective weapon against us. By making the road for the Pacifist easy it has given us the opportunity to turn a strong, challenging ideal into a weak, stagnant, lifeless imitation. Certainly this is not the fault of our government, nor do we ask for persecution to stimulate us to action and urge our ranks. But rather is it not for us to raise ourselves from our lethargy now that the hour is at hand? We say we deplore militarism and the military system and yet is it not strange that we need this very military conscription we deplore to force us into Christian service? Is it not rather a paradox that it takes a system based on compulsion and hate to make us give "what has been freely given"? Should we not rather first accept the tremendous challenge presented by a world torn with strife, envy, jealousy, and hatred?

If we believe that we possess a weapon more powerful than any yet devised by man, should we not use it? Does not the love of Christ constrain each of us who would follow the road of love? If there is a challenge to men in the stirring of drums and the sound of the trumpet to change men's politics, how much greater is the challenge to those who would strive to change men's hearts. Christ saw this challenge, and it lead to the cross; many of us also see the challenge, and it leads us to the armchair! Now is our opportunity; let us voluntarily show our love. Let us not be sleeping while the world suffers in its Garden of Gethsemane. Not all of us can enter into full time church work even for a short period, but there are plenty of other jobs for everyone. Your church offers you many avenues for service to demonstrate your Christian love and your pastor can counsel you regarding these answers of service. Will YOU rise to the challenge? The church needs YOU!

Rise up, O men of God!
The Church for you doth wait,
Her strength unequal to her task;
Rise up, and make her great!

A Mission Prayer

Word of Life, most pure, most strong,
Lo, for Thee the nations long;
Spread, till from its dreary night
All the world awakes to light.

Lord of harvest, let there be
Joy and strength to work for Thee,
Till the nations far and near
See Thy light, Thy law revere.

"We Mennonites"

Elaine Sommers Rich

The followers of Jesus are not of Cephas, or of Apollos, or of Paul. They are of Christ. And they are humble. Too often we become victims of a disease whose symptom is an overuse of the phrase "We Mennonites." Meditating on a verse like John 3:16, or meeting a devoted Christian from another denomination is good medicine for such an ailment. The fellowship of Christian believers cuts across barriers which we sometimes create.

When I was a child I spent some time wrestling with the problem of denominations. I thought "John was a Baptist. Jesus must have been a Nazarene. The Bible talks about Brethren. But the Mennonites just aren't mentioned!" Now I can laugh at such perplexity. And I can rejoice at what saints from many denominational groups have contributed to the Christian heritage. I love to sing "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," a hymn written by Martin Luther. I love to read the devotional classics by Thomas a Kempis and Francis of Assisi, devout Catholics. I owe much to John Woolman and Thomas Kelly, Quakers. Does anyone bother to ask to what denomination David Livingstone belonged?

If we must use the phrase "We Mennonites," should it not be in the following way: "We Mennonites" have much to learn from other Christian groups; and we have much to contribute to them. We have no monopoly on the message and grace of God. We share it with co-workers for the gospel.

also visit the M. B. work in the Congo. There are two other Mennonite missions in Africa which we cannot visit. The Mennonites have written a remarkable chapter of missions in this vast continent. All glory is due our Lord Jesus Christ, the heart of missions, the devoted service of our missionaries and the loyalty of all in the home churches who help form the team in spreading the gospel to "the uttermost part of the earth."

DO PAX MEN PAY TO SERVE?

Because of an earlier policy many people still assume PAX men have to pay their own $75 a month. This was changed in 1952.

Now the Board of Christian Service budgets $20,000 a year for PAX. To make this stretch as far as possible, each PAX man and his family are still asked to pledge what they can per month, $5, $10, $25, $50, or even $75 a month. They average about $25; the Board pays the balance. Men are not turned down because their families cannot pay. The more the PAX families pay, the more men can go but each pledges only what they can pay.

Flashes of Thought

Fourteen Seconds

Walter Gering

I could hardly believe my eyes. I knew that the directions on the card had given the word. But somehow I could not believe that it was true. There was nothing spectacular about the figure on the card. In fact, it was just a small dusty cardboard hanging beside the desk in a business office. I would never have noticed it had not my attention been called to it. I had been in the office many times before. Never had I seen it until this day.

The directions were simple; any child could follow them. "Look steadily at the dot—slowly count to fourteen, then quickly look at one spot on the wall or sky—count slowly to fourteen again." That was all that there was to it. Surely it was simple enough.

For several moments I gazed steadfastly at the card. Then my curiosity got the best of me. My eyes shifted and gazed off into space. Nothing happened—of course not! How could such a simple act produce results. And yet there must be something to it. Why should that card be hanging on the wall if it was only a fake.

Once again I turned to the card with its simple directions: "Look steadily at the dot—slowly count to fourteen—." That was the trouble. I had been too impatient. I had not taken enough time to fix my eyes upon the dot. The directions definitely stated: fourteen seconds. This called for another trial. This time I would make sure that I allowed sufficient time for the experiment.

If you have ever tried to stare at a fixed point for any length of time without moving your eyes you will understand that this calls for concentration and effort. But I was determined that the experiment should be given a fair trial. Only then could I rightfully pass judgment upon the truth of its claims.

I was amazed at the results. For a moment as I gazed off into space nothing happened. Then slowly but surely there appeared the dim outline of a bell. Inside that bell was the unmistakable outline of a man's face. It was as clear and distinct as any figure could ever be. It was the same outline which had been the object of concentration while looking at the dot. The card was gone from sight; the vision remained and lingered for some time.

I thought of the words of the man of God: "Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us run with patience the race that is set before us LOOKING UNTO JESUS." That was it. A few moments spent with

Sermon on Genealogy

F. J. ENNS*

As a motto for the New Year I would like to suggest Psalm 119:105. "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."

Beginning this year our Mission started a daily Bible reading program whereby the rank and file are to read a chapter a day in the New Testament beginning with Matthew, and the more advanced Christians also a chapter in the Old Testament beginning with Genesis. Sunday mornings the sermon text is to be taken from the portions read the past week. Last Sunday was the first Sunday with this new program, and two African brethren had charge of the service here at Nyanga station. Many in the congregation signified by raising their hands that they had read the portion in Matthew, and some that they had also read that in Genesis.

One brother read Matthew 1:1-17, the genealogy of Christ, and a few verses from Second Timothy. I was wondering if they wanted to preach on the genealogy. Sure enough. The other one got up and announced his text as Matthew 1:17, read it and then spoke.

We had heard much on the Birth of Christ these days, he said, and now we want to bring before us for consideration three or four of the forefathers of our Lord and of ours in the faith. He spoke of Abraham who was a friend of God and walked with God, urging us to also walk with God in the new year. He spoke of David, who at times was cursed, but who in spite of failings was strong and a mighty man of God. Then he took up Solomon who prayed for wisdom and showed how the wise could also serve the Lord and through their larger earnings make worthy financial contributions. Lastly, he took up the passage where Paul instructed and admonished Timothy, his son in the faith, and told how Timothy was also instructed by his mother and grandmother. He admonished parents and all of us to also instruct our children in the Christian faith. The service was a real blessing. I had not thought that a sermon on genealogies could be made so interesting, so challenging, and so practical.

"Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us (in the New Year) lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us. LOOKING UNTO JESUS THE author and finisher of our faith."

More Mission Nuggets

J. J. Thiessen from Canada Reports:

It was on Sunday, December 26, when I left Saskatoon for Margaret, Man. I was met at Brandon by Rev. A. G. Neufeld early next morning who took me to his farm home. He has a very nice farm, well kept, some new buildings. Mrs. Neufeld and the children gave me a cordial reception. In the course of the forenoon a brother of A. G. Neufeld arrived with his family and also Elder G. G. Neufeld of Whitewater, Manitoba.

At 1:30 the Ninga United Church which is being rented by a group of the Whitewater Mennonite Church was filled to capacity for this service commissioning Rev. A. G. Neufeld for an eight-month evangelistic tour among our people in South America. About a dozen ministers were seated on the platform. Elder G. G. Neufeld was in charge of the meeting and spoke first. After this a dedication sermon was preached by me and Elder G. G. Neufeld and I laid our hands on his head and prayerfully dedicated him for his special mission to South America, and asked the Lord's protection for him and his family.

For my sermon I used Acts 11:22-24 and Acts 13:3. The ministers present one by one had a word of comfort for Brother Neufeld and his family and wished them well. Brother A. G. Neufeld responded with a short message. He was deeply moved. He is taking his mission with a sense of deep responsibility toward the Lord who has called him, the Mission Board who is sending him, and the people whom he is to serve. The choir rendered a number of beautiful songs and in this way enriched our farewell service.

He is now in South America, discharging his sacred duties. Let's remember him and his family in our prayers.

Excerpts from Mission Letters:

God's Spirit is at work in our potential field in Formosa.

Below are a few excerpts from a letter from the Glen Grabers, now working under Mennonite Central Committee auspices in Formosa, but in an area which will soon be a part of our General Conference Mission field in Formosa.

"November has been a month of decision for several. Four students came individually, admitting they joined the circle to learn English only but now Christ has taken first place. Another man, after pouring out a story as black as night, went across the Island to seek his wife from whom he had been separated for three years. God had prepared her heart and she was still waiting for him to come back—there were tears of joy in that reunion. Together they came back to Taichung to begin a new life—think what Christmas means to them this year."

Kobe, Japan

"Besides language study the Lord has given us opportunities of witnessing. Peter teaches a weekly English Bible class in the university here. Most of these students have left their heathen religions and today do not know what to believe. They are searching for the truth. One of them, whose name is Natori San, told me last Sunday that he used to believe that science was everything and that it had a solution to every problem, but he does not believe that any more. He wants to become a Christian, but cannot yet accept it in faith. Another one has read the whole New Testament by reading two chapters every morning and two every evening. There are others who are also searching. Please pray for these. Mary has choir practice with some of the Christians every Sunday morning. These young people are really enthusiastic and want to learn."

Kobe, Japan

"For several months now I've again started a Saturday evening English Bible class with medical students. There are five who come regularly. Oftentimes the class serves as an encouragement, and sometimes as a discouragement. We are studying the Book of John. One evening we had just finished the story of Nicodemus, and I felt it really struck home. When I asked whether there were any questions one paused a moment then asked "Do you know of anyone who would have time to teach me German?" At the moment I wasn't sure whether I wanted to pull his hair or mine! But on the whole they are very interested . . . it has come to be spoken of among them as a Bible class rather than an English class."

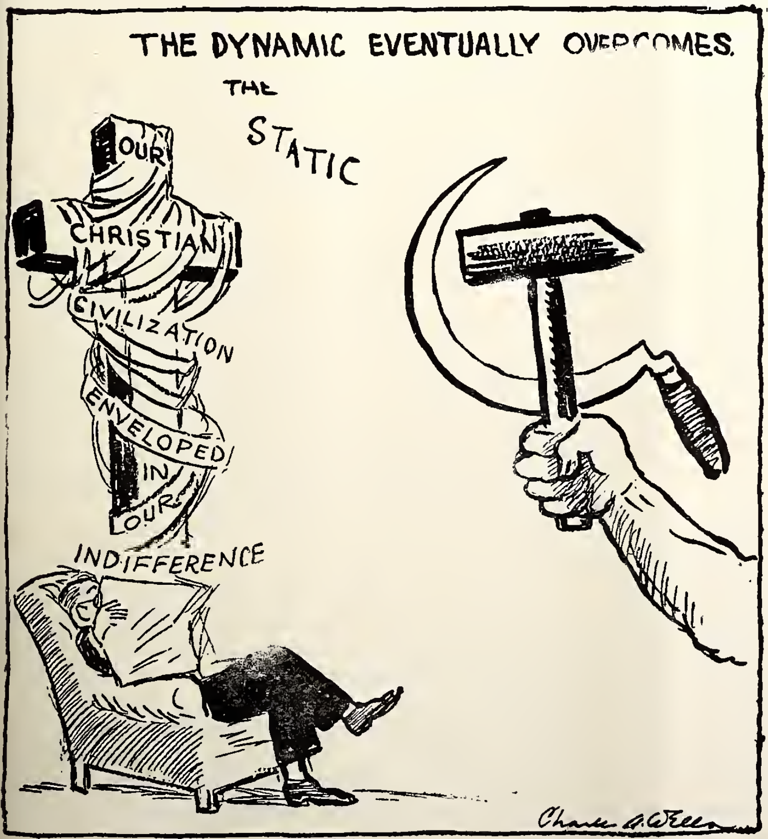
"And now even New Year's is past. It was a good year—1954. It also had its problems, but never too great that the Lord could not take us through. No doubt 1955 has within its folds a series of problems and new experiences too, but . . . if we join with Meyer in his book Our Daily Homily and say "Let there be plenty of prayer, 'prayer without ceasing.' Let there be prompt obedience to His touch and summons; the willingness to gird relaxed loins and follow; and as we go through life, we will find ourselves escorted by an invisible Companion, who holds the key to all doors."

Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord; and the people whom He hath chosen for His own inheritance.

Warning for History

Charles A. Wells



THE DYNAMIC EVENTUALLY OVERCOMES THE STATIC
OUR CHRISTIAN CIVILIZATION ENVELOPED IN OUR INDIFFERENCE
Charles A. Wells

The record of man's experience includes repeated instances of established societies that have become settled, rich and satiated, only to be undermined and finally displaced by other systems of life that carried a greater urge for change and transformation. Thus, historians teach that a dynamic force will eventually overcome the static. From the fall of the Roman Empire to the great transition within the British Empire in our day, this pattern has been continuous. All the Christian world is facing this historic threat now. In itself, Christianity once embodied the greatest dynamic force in history, but it has now become rich and mostly on the defensive. There are races and classes living within the boundaries of our so-called Christian world who feel they have been bypassed by the privileges and benefits of our society; it is some of these who are now being captivated by a surging doctrine of revolutionary change, symbolized by the hammer and sickle. We must free the cross from the entanglements of our indifference and selfishness and let it again become a dynamic force to continue its task of changing the world in the right way!

Program Helps No. 2 for March

PAX in Greece and Other Countries

Curtis Janzen

Scope and Method

The program should help you to realize how really rich we as Americans are and cause us to be grateful for what we have.

It should help you to love suffering humanity and be willing to serve when we have so much and others have so little.

We should see that the type of need represented is a long-term need, that we can continue to help in this way after 1-W's are no longer required to do any alternative service.

The program should give us an insight into underdeveloped, poverty-ridden areas in the world and our responsibility to them if we would stop communism and keep peace.

Build your program around the slides on the PAX Greece work. Let the written helps fill in the information.

Worship Period:

Suggested songs: "Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life," "In Christ There Is No East or West," "My God I Thank Thee Who Hast Made," "Peace in Our Time, O Lord."

Suggested Scripture passages: Matthew 25:31-46; Luke 10:30-37. Note the emphasis on love, thy neighbor, go and do likewise; on inasmuch as ye have done it unto the needy ye have done it unto me. Saying that we are grateful and that we love is not enough. We must also do. We have a mission to love those in our world who are in need. That is why PAX is serving in some of the underdeveloped areas in the Near and Far East, South America, as well as in the war-torn areas of Europe.

Talk

Thankfulness and love are two very basic attitudes for the sincere Christian if one is to live and to serve genuinely and faithfully. That these virtues are to be evoked from all Christians is made clear to us in the New Testament. Ephesians 5:20; 1 Thess. 1:3; 1 Timothy 1:12. We ought to be thankful for our churches, for Christian parents and friends who have sought to lead us aright; for our freedom in choice of life's work and life's partner, for the privilege of going to school and learning. We need only to compare ourselves with others in the world in order to realize how much we have for which to be thankful.

We have many material things for which to be thankful, an abundance of the basic necessities of life, food, clothing, decent places in which to live, medical care, an abundance of luxuries such as cars, household appliances, the opportunity to travel, to listen to good music or participate in sports. Again, we need only to compare to realize our tremendous advantage and great share of God's blessing. Read the following taken from The Mennonite.

"What is the normal way of life; What is a normal standard of living? Do we turn and look the second time when we see someone walk past in rags? Does it seem unusual for a family to live in one small poorly constructed and unheated room? To expect half the children to die in infancy?"

Are such conditions abnormal or are our standards the abnormal? "Foolish questions" you say. Then consider the following statements which were taken from "There'll Be No Christmas for Them," by Dickey Chapelle in the December 26, 1953, Saturday Evening Post.

"1. More people live in huts of mud and straw than in any other kind of shelter.

2. More people travel on their own feet or on the back of small animals like the burro than in any other fashion.

3. More people have a life expectancy of half our years than any other higher figure.

4. More mothers watch half their children die than see all their offspring reach maturity.

5. More people live without the help of a doctor when they fall ill than enjoy even rudimentary medical care.

6. More people eat what they themselves grow—and starve when they have no harvest—than obtain their food in any other fashion.

7. More people do not know what it means to vote than have ever voted."

To the above startling statements of fact we would add that far more people in today's world are outside of the kingdom of God than are in and that relatively few in this world have found the reality of Christian experience.

Such a perspective obviously places us in the "abnormal" group. We are tempted to suggest that most of this is due to ignorance or laziness and to say, "Why don't they do something about it?" Fair consideration of the facts will eliminate such thoughts.

PAX in Underdeveloped Areas

Whereas the PAX program in Germany was a natural follow-up of the relief program of food and clothing distribution, the programs in Greece and other countries are serving in areas where the need was not entirely a consequence of war. Greece had suffered from both a world war and a civil war and the scars of these wars were to be seen. But the most obvious need had been there before the wars and would continue long after. It was the same need as existed in many Near and Far Eastern countries. The need in these areas stemmed from ignorance, poverty, superstition, and backward methods. Rural people do not know how to cultivate their land properly and get much smaller crops than would be possible under proper cultivation. Consequently they live in poverty and hunger. Often they haven't even the barest necessities of life. To give them food and clothing would be relief but it would offer no long-term solution to their problem. The theory behind PAX work in these underdeveloped areas among underprivileged people is "To help people to help themselves."

Assistance of this nature involves mainly the giving of time and labor of the PAX men rather than material goods. PAX assistance comes in the form of instruction and technique. Assistance of this nature is more positive in the long run because people are being helped without giving them the feeling of being beggars. They stay at their farms but PAX men help them to farm better.

Many of the things that American farmers take for granted in their farming methods are unknown to farmers in these areas. Contour plowing and crop rotation to prevent erosion and build the soil, hybrid seeds and animals, proper feeding and care for animals are agricultural things in which they need instruction. In the area of household economics they need instruction in food preservation and dietetic planning. They need very practical knowledge which we use every day on our farms and in our homes. They need further assistance and instruction on matters of health and sanitation. In one of the Greek villages there is no doctor and the nearest one is twenty miles away. PAX men now have an active first-aid program and a registered nurse now with the unit is making a great contribution with her knowledge. In many cases people just don't know any better. In some cases superstition keeps them from learning.

PAX men help by conducting experiments in various fields. People must be shown that various new methods will work. They are not willing to try an experiment, in seeding grain for example, for that may mean the risk of a smaller crop—which crops are normally too small to supply their yearly needs. Through the experiments PAX men build confidence in themselves, a very important ingredient in their service because as Americans, as foreigners, they are not to be trusted. Their deeds have to prove what their words can only say. Only after that confidence is established can the men effectively work among the people. Eight men are working in two villages in Greece so that they have a sphere of influence of 10-12 villages.

It is in areas such as these where communism can thrive. People have nothing and communists make many promises. If we as Americans from the land of plenty and as Christians filled with love don't try to give them what they need, they can easily fall prey to Communist propaganda. Where there is need there is unrest and where there is unrest there can be no peace. Christianity and the West needs hundreds of teams of PAX men who are willing to serve all over the world in areas like this. and to sacrifice as peace men.

Conditions of Service

The first group of PAX men gave not only of their time and talent to serve but in addition paid for the expenses involved in the program. The calculated $900 yearly cost was raised by themselves or their families or their local church. As the program was recognized and enlarged it was felt that this procedure would limit the number of those who could participate so the various conferences began taking the financial responsibility of support for a specified number of boys. Our own Conference does this but encourages that as much of the support for a fellow as possible be raised in his home community. No requirements are set, however. (For further information contact Board of Christian Service, General Conference Headquarters, 722 Main, Newton, Kans.)

PAX men serve as volunteers. During the two-year term of service, or three-year if they are assigned to Korea or elsewhere in the Far East, their travel and living expenses are paid with the $1800 support that is turned over to the MCC. Out of this $1800 they receive $10 a month allowance. They get two- and three-week vacations during their first and second year of service respectively. Their vacations are used to visit other parts of Europe and to become acquainted with other countries and peoples. Vacations are at their own expense.

The entire PAX program is under the sponsorship of the Mennonite Central Committee and of the various Mennonite groups associated in the MCC. The MCC selects the needy areas and the specific sites for the projects and administers and organizes the work. Since MCC is recognized by Selective Service as an employing agency for CO's, all draft age men who serve, and these make up most of the personnel, get alternative service credit for their service. The program is not limited, however, to those who have 1-W duty to perform. Other qualified individuals are also accepted.

PAX men as a rule have no special training for this overseas service. Training and experience in building or in agriculture, and in working with people, will of course be assets. The main requirements for service are a firm Christian faith, a strong character, and a desire to serve where needed. People who are interested in giving themselves for service to those in need are the ones who can best serve. It is in this spirit that PAX work is carried on.

Other Possibilities

Five men have been assigned to an agency known as International Voluntary Services, Inc. Their work in Iraq, Jordan, and Egypt is essentially like that in Greece. These men work alongside volunteers from other groups. Several of them have written very interesting reports of their work. You might enjoy reading Kenneth Imhoff's "Way Down in Egypt Land," or Carl Jantzen's reports on Iraq. You may get copies of them by writing to International Voluntary Services, 1025 Connecticut Avenue, Washington 6, D. C.

South America

Peru: There are 10 men presently in this program at Tournavista, Peru. These fellows are engaged in road construction, actually operating some of LeTourneau's big earth moving equipment. This road into the jungle is to provide a traffic artery to assist in the agricultural development of the underdeveloped land. Plans at the present time are rather indefinite, but it may be that five men will move on into Paraguay to work in road construction in the Chaco.

Jordan

In October five new replacements were sent out and this brings the unit strength to seven. One fellow is teaching at the Ramallah School, another has teaching and lab assignments at Essault, and the others are engaged in various relief projects. Some of the fellows have been conducting craft classes and instruction in very practical things such as shoe repair in the very hopeless Arab refugee camps. Arabs were made refugees, you will remember, as a result of the United Nations decision to form the new state of Israel.

Korea

"The purpose of the Community Co-ordinated Development Program (in which PAX men work) is to guide and assist the Korean population in rural areas in the development of better living conditions by encouraging and motivating the desire to self-help, developing local leadership, and promoting community effort toward more effective utilization of local resources. The program embraces the basic fields of fundamental education, health, and social services, family and community life, spiritual and cultural activities, production methods in agriculture and related fields . . . ." There are presently seven PAX men working in Korea.

New Areas, India and Java

Four men are presently being recruited for these two areas. The work will be along agricultural lines and resettlement of refugees who moved from Pakistan into India.

—France—one man on loan to an international voluntary work camp co-ordinating committee.

—Korean PAX program began in early 1954.

—Program now developing in India and Java; possibly also in Indochina and Morocco.

—February, 1953, to fall of 1954, an average of five men working in Voluntary Service projects in Holland flood areas doing clean-up and reconstruction alongside of volunteers from other countries, especially European Mennonite young people.

Projects and Possibilities

Being far away from home, PAX men appreciate getting mail and are willing to write letters in return. Write to them telling about your young people's organization, its program and its service work. Ask them to tell you about young people they have learned to know in the country in which they are working, about their unit life and their work, about churches in that country.

Remember the PAX program in your prayers. Pray for each individual worker, the unit leaders, the area directors, and for the people who are being served.

Many PAX men have returned from service. If there is one in your area get him to come talk to you and show you his pictures. Names and addresses could be gotten from MCC, Akron, Pennsylvania, or General Conference Board of Christian Service, Newton, Kansas.

If you are looking for a financial project, help the Board of Christian Service to support another PAX man.

Film Review

Evanston, 1954, 14½ minutes, sound, black and white. Available Paul Shelly, Bluffton College, Bluffton, Ohio, for postage both ways.

This film presents the activities of the sessions of the World Council of Churches, held at Evanston, Illinois, in August, 1954.

The film gives a good coverage of the events of the sessions of the World Council of Churches. It shows the various types of meetings. It introduces many of the leaders. It gives brief sketches of some of the messages including excerpts of the reports of the sections. It helps to give a person a good picture of the meeting at Evanston in a short period of time.

Churches and schools will have to use their own judgment whether they will want to use this film. My own feeling is that there are groups who will appreciate seeing what took place at Evanston, in order to be able more intelligently to ascertain what their attitude should be to the World Council of Churches.

FLASHES OF THOUGHT

eyes fixed in devotion upon the Son of God at the beginning of the day would do the same thing. The vision of those moments would linger long after, sanctifying the activities of the whole day.

Take time to be holy, the world rushes on;
Spend much time in secret, with Jesus alone;
By looking to Jesus, like Him thou shalt be;
Thy friends in thy conduct, His likeness shall see.

MCC News Notes

MORRO INDIANS ATTACK PARAGUAY MENNONITES AGAIN

On Saturday, Feb. 12, a party of Morro Indians in Paraguay raided two Mennonite villages in Fernheim colony injuring two men who are now being treated in the Filadelfia hospital.

The party consisting of seven or nine Indians first struck Village No. 10 around 9 a.m. attacking a Mr. Bargen who was hit in the leg with a spear. Hauling a log on the road toward Filadelfia, he drove away from them and the Indians did not follow.

Then about noon the Indian group came to Village No. 2. Seeing the party enter the village, two families near the edge of the village rushed toward the third family's house. Everyone got inside except Wilhelm Sawatzky who was hit in the abdomen by an arrow. The Indians then clubbed him breaking an arm and generally beating him. When another man came to his assistance, the Morros left, taking pails, blankets, pillows, and a hatchet with them.

Dr. Dollinger at the Filadelfia hospital thinks the men will recover unless infection sets in. He does not think the wounds show any sign that the spears or arrows were poisoned.

On previous occasions these fierce Morro Indians have attacked the Mennonite settlements and brutally killed some of the colonists.

During the past several years attempts have been made by Mennonite missionaries to contact this tribe in an effort to bring them the Christian gospel. Two trips into their territory have been made but never have any of the Morros been sighted, according to Missionary G. B. Giesbrecht.

In an effort to win their confidence and favor, the missionaries left gifts for them at several places consisting of clothing, food, mirrors, and some trinkets for the children. On their second visit they found these gifts untouched. It is thought that the Indians have mistaken this expression of love as an attempt to poison or injure them and now are expressing their resentment through these raids.

This situation is a call to prayer for these Indians as well as for Mennonite relationships with them. Christians should pray that the Mennonite missionaries may find a way to present Christianity to the Morros, that the Indians may experience only acts of love from those they attack and that the Mennonite colonists will trust God for protection being willing to suffer violence should that be necessary.

NEW FORMOSA HOSPITAL DEDICATED

The newly-constructed 35-bed Mennonite hospital building in Hwalien, Formosa, was dedicated for service to God and man on Jan. 21—exactly five months after the cornerstone laying.

The simple but meaningful dedication of the building was a time of recommitment to Christ for those ministering to the physical and spiritual needs of Formosans in that area. This aspect of the dedication took on particular significance since the new facilities had been in use for several weeks, the patients and equipment having been moved in before the new year.

Dr. Roland P. Brown, hospital director from Freeman, S. D., led the service held in the hospital waiting room which will be used as a chapel twice a day.

Mr. P'eng, hospital chaplain, read Scripture from I Kings 8:22-53 and Nehemiah 12:27-43. Glen Graber, MCC Formosa director from Wayland, Iowa, made a few remarks and presented a personal testimony after which Rev. Ed. Currie, Presbyterian missionary in Hwalien, gave the dedication message based on the Scripture reading.

VS QUARTET PRESENTING PROGRAMS

A men's quartet from the Voluntary Service unit, Main General Hospital, Portland, is presenting programs in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois churches in the interests of acquainting young people with the challenge of Voluntary Service.

Their itinerary began Feb. 27 and will be completed March 13. Quartet personnel are Robert Miller of Nampa, Idaho; William Regehr, Inman, Kan.; Maurice Slagell of Hydro, Okla.; and Carl Yoder of Lancaster, Penn.

Programs consist of musical selections and testimonies expressing satisfaction and enthusiasm for Christian service through Voluntary Service. There are presentations of service opportunities in VS.

The itinerary: Feb. 27, Grace Mennonite Church, Lansdale, Penn.; Feb. 28, Conestoga Mennonite Church, Morgantown, Penn.; March 1, Brethren in Christ Church, Palmyra, Penn.; March 2, Bethel Mennonite Church, Lancaster, Penn.; March 3, Maple Grove Mennonite Church, Belleville, Penn.; March 4, Stahl Mennonite Church, Johnstown, Penn.; March 6 (morning), First Mennonite Church, Sugar Creek, Ohio; March 6 (evening), Kidron Mennonite Church, Kidron, Ohio; March 7, Bethel Mennonite Church, West Liberty, Ohio; March 8, Central Mennonite Church, Archbold, Ohio; March 9, First Mennonite Church, Nappanee, Ind.; March 10, Calvary Mennonite Church, Bloomington, Ill.; March 11, Metamora Mennonite Church, Metamora, Ill.; March 12, Science Ridge Mennonite Church, Sterling, Ill.; and March 13, Woodlawn Mennonite Church, Chicago, Ill.

VS TEAM REQUESTED FOR HAITI

In January Orie O. Miller visited Haiti to check the possibilities of sending a Voluntary Service team to that West Indies island in response to a request for such personnel from the U.S. Foreign Operations Administration.

"One wonders how we as Mennonites could have been so ignorant and insensitive to Haiti and its need for so long," the MCC executive-secretary said at the conclusion of his visit. Brother Miller learned that 85 per cent of Haiti' population is illiterate and that its growing population is eking out a meager, primitive existence from an eroded worn-out soil.

Haitian per capita annual income is around $50, Brother Miller discovered. Added to these conditions is the tremendous damage and destruction caused by Hurricane Hazel which will be felt for years to come.

During his visit Brother Miller met with several missionaries and gained a picture of the mission situation on the island. There are probably about 400,000 Protestant Christians in Haiti and probably around 160 foreign missionaries in all, he learned. Mission groups include Methodists, North American Baptist, Episcopal, Unevangelized Fields Missions and West Indies Missions. Protestantism seems to be growing rapidly and now represents about 10 per cent of the population, the rest nominally Roman Catholic or a mixture of this and Voodooism, Brother Miller reported.

In consulting with officials of SCIPA, a joint U. S.-Haiti government assistance agency, he found them eager for a team of Voluntary Service men for village rehabilitation work. Should the MCC decide to send Voluntary Service personnel to Haiti, this would be another opportunity for 1-W men to serve in the national interest and at the same time make a significant Christian witness. This arrangement would also be an opportunity for the Mennonite Church to learn to know the people of Haiti and aid these needy people on their own level.

Haiti is about one-fourth the size of Pennsylvania. Its three and one-half million population is creole and French in language. Around ninety per cent of its people are rural. Haiti received it independence from France in 1804.

NEW PAX OPPORTUNITIES

Anyone interested should write MCC, Akron, Pennsylvania. Men leave at different times. They are chosen from applicants available at the time. Some will leave March 30, for Germany builders' unit. Immediate applications can still be considered for March 30 group. Men are urged however to apply now for groups leaving in June and later.

Jottings

—Inman Church, Inman, Kan.: Vernon Lohrentz, who serves the Greensburg church and teaches at Turon, brougth a challenging New Year's message. On Jan. 16, Marie Regier, former missionary to China and South America, gave an illustrated talk on Paraguay. Junior C. E.'s are collecting shoes for relief; at their Christmas party (also Junior choir) they brought soap for relief in place of a gift exchange. On Jan. 30, the Women's Mission Society sponsored the evening service; Miss Agnes Harder, missionary to Nigeria, Africa, spoke and showed pictures. On Feb. 6, Rev. and Mrs. O'Ray Graber of the Hebron Church near Buhler, Kan., gave a very interesting and comprehensive illustrated program of their recent two-year stay in Berlin in MCC work. Our new church is rapidly approaching completion and plans are to have the dedication services March 13.—Corr.

—First Church, Burns, Kans.: On Sunday evening, Jan. 16, our theme for C. E. was Voluntary Service. Jerold Thierstein and Clarence Wedel who are at home after serving sometime in Voluntary Service showed slides and told about their work. Clarence spent his time in Germany while Jerold spent his time in Paraguay. In midweek Bible study we are studying the Book of John. A catechism class has been started with 3 boys and 3 girls partaking. Our minister is the instructor. Our deacon Peter T. Stucky is at present taking treatments in Wichita, but is expected to be able to return home soon.—Corr.

—West Swamp Church, Quakertown, Penn.: Lester Weiss was ordained to the office of deacon, taking the place of Menno Rosenberger who wished to be released of the office after twenty years of faithful and devoted service. The African film, "Johangal," was shown for a Sunday evening service. The Women's Missionary Society sponsored the semi-annual church cleaning to which many responded. The Book of Jeremiah is being studied in our midweek Bible and prayer service. A number of our young people attended the General Conference YPU workshop at the Deep Run church and are putting to work many of the helpful suggestions received. For the February meeting of the Women's Missionary Society the slides and recording put out by Rev. and Mrs. Leland Harder on "Mennonies at Work in the City," were used.—Corr.

—First Church, Clinton, Okla.: The congregation is happy to have had the wonderful rain. Very much interest is shown in the Wednesday evening Bible study. The attendance has doubled. May this be our future blessing. We were saddened by the death of Jake Sawatzky. May the family be comforted by our prayers. Missionary and Mrs. H. A. Kliewer from Tuba, Ariz., were with us Sunday, Jan. 30. We all enjoyed their talk and pictures. The Ladies' Sewing Circle is very busy getting started on this year's mission work. We meet twice a month, once all day, and once half a day.—Mrs. A. P. Schmidt, Corr.

—Friedensfeld Church, Turpin, Okla.: The first Sunday in February we had our Christian Endeavor program. The word for junior roll call was "Honesty." The first Thursday in February we had our Ladies' Aid meeting. Due to the very cold weather and icy roads, very few ladies were present. We were sorry it had to be on this particular day, and yet we are thankful and looking for every drop of moisture, which is badly needed for our wheat crop. A word of appreciation should be given especially to the trustees, N. W. Dick, Arnold Regier, Paul Ediger, and others who helped to redecorate the church basement. It is so neat and clean; as Menno Ediger said, "It has a new look." After some plaster work was done the whole basement was given a coat of paint. The kitchen and young people's Sunday school room is blue, and the remaining basement is cream, and floor gray. It is very pretty.—Mrs. Chester Windsor, Corr.

—Willow Creek Church, Paso Robles, Calif.: We were happy to have Rev. and Mrs. Sam Entz from Africa in our midst. They spoke and showed very interesting pictures. We also enjoyed their fellowship in our homes. Little Michael John, was born to Rev. and Mrs. Edward Toews on Feb. 5. On Feb. 4, the wedding of Betty Fieguth and Dewey Tompkins took place at the College of Pacific, Stockton, Calif. Our pastor, Edward Toews, attended the ministerial conference on Jan. 19, 20, at Partum, Oregon. The program committee for the Pacific District Conference, of which he is a member, also met the 18th and 19th. Our midweek Bible study is continuing. We have finished the Book of Romans and now have started with the Book of Daniel.—Mrs. Frank Hamm, Corr.

—New Hopedale Church, Meno, Okla.: Jan. 24, Samuel Lall, a converted Mohammedan from India, (at present a student at Phillips University), spoke to the men of our congregation, Jan. 25. Henry Kliewer showed slides and spoke to our congregation of his work among the Indians of Moen Copi, Ariz. The Ladies' Society had their all-day meeting Feb. 3. The day was spent in quilting, tacking comforts, making bandages, and sewing. Some of the ladies also meet every Thursday afternoon to quilt. Feb. 7, Rev. and Mrs. J. Ross Goodall, from the House of Friendship of Kitchener, Ontario, Canada, showed slides and told us of their Jewish mission. —Mrs. Philip Johnson, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Fortuna, Mo.: We praise the Lord for the many unmerited blessings that have been ours during the year. When the Sunday school was reorganized in November, Melvin Elliott was elected superintendent, and Carl Hilty, assistant. The church business meeting was held the forenoon of Jan. 6. A committee of four was appointed, who, with the pastor, are to revise the constitution. Elmer Garber was chosen deacon earlier, and Joe Loganbill, trustee. Aunt Mary Lehman, the oldest member of our church, is spending the winter with her nephew, Mr. and Mrs. Noah Neuenschwander of Garden City, Mo. A children's choir is to be organized, under the direction of Mrs. Homer Garber. Rev. and Mrs. Henry Kliewer, missionaries among the Hopi Indians of Arizona, were here Jan. 11. They spoke of their work and showed pictures. On the first Sunday of every month the C. E., in co-operation with the pastor, has been holding religious services at the training school for colored girls, at Tipton, Mo. The work is gratifying and will be continued this year.—P. P. Hilty, Corr.

—Meadow Church, Mingo, Kan.: "And being fully persuaded that, what he had promised, he was able also to perform," Rom. 4:21. How precious to be able to rest on God's promises. For our midweek services the adults are studying the Book of Revelation, led by Rev. Bergen. The children are studying the Book of Genesis. Mrs. Hein Goossen teaches the preschool to third grade, and Mrs. J. W. Bergen the fourth to eighth grades. Marie J. Regier was with us Jan. 25, and told us of her work with the Mennonites in Paraguay. Mr. and Mrs. Herman Zinke, missionary candidates to Pakistan, spoke to us Sunday evening, Feb. 6. They are going out under the Child Evangelism organization. The young people had charge of the services Feb. 13. Their topic for discussion was "Forward with Christ," taken from Phil. 3. A good interest was manifested.—Corr.

—Eighth Street Church, Goshen, Ind.: Robert Friedmann spoke on the Hutterites at the evening service on Jan. 16. Dr. Friedmann has been studying the Hutterites under a Guggenheim fellowship. Edward Burkhalter showed a film of India missionary work at a joint service with the Silver Street Church on Jan. 23. "The Promise," a film, was shown on Jan. 30. A native of Uganda, Africa, E. K. Sempira, who is now a student at Goshen College, spoke at the service on Feb. 6. To start off the building fund canvass a supper was held Jan. 12. The plan for the drive is to have weekly pledges over a three-year period. At the annual meeting of the congregation, the following officers for the coming year were elected: W. W. Oesch, deacon; Mrs. Clarence Jones, deaconess; F. S. Ebersole, treasurer; Alden Plank, trustee; Miss Leota Shrock, secretary; Harold Oyer, Sunday school superintendent; and Ernest Yoder, assistant.—Susanne Friesen, Corr.

—First Church, Caldwell, Idaho: The Christian Endeavor recently completed a series of four meetings covering the Hopi Mission Field in Arizona. Don Erickson of Nampa, special speaker in C. E. on Jan. 30, also played two beautiful violin solos. John Thiessen spoke at morning and afternoon services on the ninth of January. On the eleventh it was a privilege to have Erwin Goering and Harry Martens with us. Pastor Sprunger and Rev. Menno Kliewer attended the Ministers' Conference in Portland, Oregon, Jan. 19 and 20. On the twenty-third, our church had charge of the broadcast sponsored by the Caldwell Ministerial Association. The Women's Missionary Society has been cutting out flannelgraph figures as gifts for missionaries and quilt blocks to use on the Indian fields in the U. S. They have made new curtains for the basement, while the men have been busy putting in a basement ceiling. In the afternoon of Feb. 6, the church, fellow workers, and neighbors joined with Rev. and Mrs. Kliewer in a service of praise to God for giving them twenty-five years of happy, married life. Mr. and Mrs. John A. Dick are the proud parents of an 8 pound boy, Stephen John, born on Feb. 6.—Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Women's Missionary Society met Feb. 2, at the church annex for a day of quilting and relief sewing. There was a program in the afternoon which included an interesting quiz about "Women of the Bible." During the business meeting it was decided that we would purchase a new stove for the kitchen and to assist the church in paying for the material for the parsonage drapes which several of the ladies are making. Edward Bary, of the Lutheran Church of Orrville, spoke to the Men's Brotherhood at their meeting on Feb. 8, using as his topic, "Know Your Bible." The meeting, which was held in the church basement, was well attended. Word was received that Mrs. Joel Zuecher who is spending the winter in California has submitted to extensive surgery there and is slowly improving. Mrs. Menno Lehman who has been bedfast for a number of weeks with a heart ailment is improving. Ned Gerber, son of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Gerber, is also showing some improvement after being bedfast for several months with rheumatic fever.—Mrs. Earl Hofstetter, Corr.

—Menno Church, Ritzville, Wash.: Beginning the new year the young people had their annual watch night party. Jan. 12, John Thiessen was here for an evening service. The church's annual business meeting was held Jan. 15, with many new officers to take over for the new year. The frank discussion at the meeting seemed to bring us closer in our effort to do the will of God. Erwin Goering brought the message Sunday, Jan. 16, and Harry Martens showed his very interesting and challenging slides of PAX men at work in Europe at the evening service. Classes in first aid are being attended by the homemakers group, with a local farmer as the instructor. A very awakening film, "God of the Atom," was shown recently at the YPU program. Women's Mission Society, Feb. 3, had an interesting program on Colombia Missions. A report of mission stations and missionaries was given and slides showing missionaries at work and happy faces of those who accepted God's love.—Mrs. Davis Bauer, Corr.

—Salem Church, Freeman, S. D.: The evening of Jan. 9, we had a Sunday school teachers' rally. Main item of the program was a panel discussion on teachers' problems. The first quarterly offering has been taken toward the establishment of a building fund. Jan. 24, the Denver 1-W men's quartet presented their program of song and word for the Freeman community. The evening of Jan. 30 the Ladies' Choir and the Men's Club were sponsored in a sacred concert by the Women's Society with an offering for relief. Suggestions have been made on how memorial gifts ought to be designated and channeled. A number of 1-W men, mostly from the Denver unit, have been released and are resuming their places in our church life. Our pastor has been challenging our thinking and consecration with a series of sermons on "The Case Against: Gambling, Drinking, Lodges, Smoking, Military Service, and Careless Driving."—Willard Unruh, Corr.

—Grace Hill Church, Whitewater, Kan.: On Jan. 30, our pastor, Herbert Miller, had an evening service with the young men and women of high school and college age to discuss the subject, "Registration and problems involved in taking the conscientious objector position." The Women's Missionary Society met Feb. 2, in our church with Miss Marie J. Regier as guest speaker. Her topic was, "Our Women in Paraguay." As visitors we had the ladies from Burns, Zion, and Walton churches with us. D. H. Suderman from Bethel College directed an evening of hymn singing and hymn study Sunday evening, Feb. 13. Feb. 14, Rev. and Mrs. Ross Goodall spoke and showed pictures in our church of their Rescue Mission and Ontario Hebrew Mission work in Kitchener, Ontario, Canada.—Mrs. Arthur Schmidt, Corr.

—Immanuel Church, Delft, Minn.: Our missionary giving in 1954 amounted to $5,300, and we praise the Lord that five of our members are missionaries in full time service for Him. Our weekly Bible study and prayer groups have an attendance of around thirty in the adult department and twenty in the junior department. Our Sunday school Junior department has had a perfect attendance for two weeks. We praise the Lord for the manifestation of His grace and pray that He will enlarge our hearts and vision to greater service for Him. We must redeem the time so we can see the salvation of many precious souls. Our community and church has been saddened by a tragedy which resulted in the death of one of our boys, Douglas Goertzen, a senior in high school. Farewell services for our missionary Adeline Fast, were held Jan. 9, with Reuben Lindquist as main speaker. Albert Neufeld, missionary to Panama, occupied the pulpit Jan. 23 and 26, in the absence of our pastor. Rev. and Mrs. Ross Goodall from the House of Friendship of Kitchener, Ontario, were with us Jan. 28.—Corr.

—Grace Church, End, Okla.: Our Missionary Society again met Jan. 15, and enjoyed a pleasant day in quilting, preparing bandages, cutting quilt blocks and various activities. We also discussed some new projects. We were again reminded of our uncertain span of life by the passing of Richard Koehn, 17 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Koehn of our church. A good number from our church attended the showing of the film "Dead Men on Furlough" presented at Convention Hall in our city; a very stirring and challenging picture showing both the spiritual and physical need in those localities. On the evening of Feb. 6, Ross and Shirley Goodall, Jewish missionaries from Kitchener, Ont., were with us. Mrs. Goodall gave a glowing testimony of the leading, beginning, progress, and growth of their work, after which beautiful slides were shown portraying their witnessing and everyday activities. Our C. E. group rendered a program at the New Hopedale Church at Meno, Sunday evening, Feb. 13. We are glad that Mildred Pjesky is improving after her unfortunate accident in school. She is back on duty at O.B.A. again.—Corr.

NEEDED

Our Mission Board bought an old church building, had it moved to Seiling, and is now renovating it for our Indians here. In connection with this we are in need of a propane tank, for the heating system, as Seiling does not have natural gas. A tank of 500 gallon capacity would be preferred, though we can get by with a smaller one. Maybe some reader has a tank he is not using, and/or would like to get rid of one. Given to the mission cause here, it would give valuable service and be greatly appreciated. Would appreciate to hear from someone soon, as this matter is urgent; the church dedication is drawing near.

Address me: Enid, R. R. 5, Oklahoma; or if necessary call me via long-distance telephone, over the week end: Enid 6353-J.

"I BELIEVE IN THE HOLY SPIRIT"

The Apostles' Creed has its three great divisions. We declare our belief in God; in Jesus Christ His Son; and also in the Holy Spirit, the third member of the Trinity.

It is to be regretted that too often we seem to avoid the subject of the Holy Spirit, partly because we are quite vague about who and what He is. Sometimes we refer to the Spirit as "it," a kind of power or force coming from God. But Jesus plainly refers to Him as a Person, who is to remain in the world with the people of God. Jesus was with only a handful of followers for only a few years. But He promised that the Holy Spirit would come to be with God's people for all time. The Holy Spirit is sometimes explained as "The Power of God in the present world; the indwelling Presence of Christ in the soul of man."

The Holy Spirit inspires; He inspires a desire for God, a hunger and thirst that will not be satisfied with less than God. He makes us dissatisfied with what we are and causes us to reach out for something finer and better. These deep convictions and holy aspirations that draw our souls Godward are the work of the Holy Spirit.

The Spirit convicts us of sin. When we fail God and live contrary to His plan it is the Spirit that rebukes us and brings upon us the burning sense of guilt that will not leave us rest. If there were no convictions of wrong how much easier it would be to fall away from God. But the Spirit disturbs our hearts until they are quieted and forgiven by God himself.

The Spirit is the great revealer. Through Him God reveals His plan to us. The Spirit also reveals God's love in the common experiences of life. He shows us what is true and what is false. He reveals the right way when we come to the fork of the road. He reveals God's will to us when we are ready to receive it. He reveals the Truth.

But the Holy Spirit is also the great Comforter, who helps us bear the hardships and difficulties of life. A comforter is not one who merely says words of sympathy to us. Sometimes sympathy is not the best for us. The word "comforter" comes from the two Latin words, "con" and "fortis," with strength. In our futility and weakness it is good to know that there is One present who comes into our hearts "with strength." It is this inner fortitude that stabilizes us and makes us strong to encounter life and the assaults of the spiritual enemy.

To really declare our belief and faith in the Holy Spirit means that we will give ourselves to His leading and to His strength. To ignore Him and to grieve Him by disobeying Him is to suffer untold loss. May we indeed receive the Holy Spirit and give Him full right of way in our life.

THE CAPITAL "I"

We had the privilege of listening to an address by Dr. Emil Brunner, world-famous theologian who spoke on the MYSTERY OF THE I AM. He spoke of the prevalent "Capital I" feeling that afflicts us. He pointed out that the English language, unlike others, refers to the self with a capital "I."

He insisted that the capital "I" belonged to God alone, the great and mysterious "I AM." But because we are unwilling to be the "small i" we find ourselves deep in sin, for we want to usurp the place of God.

The self, the "small i," must take its place before the cross and there sense something of the measureless love of the great "I AM." We are thus humbled as we take our place at the foot of the cross. For we are not gods but sinners, and at the cross we find the only remedy for sin.

OUR JUVENILE NON-DELINQUENTS

We dare not close our eyes to the danger and problem of teen-age delinquents, some of whom do terrible things. But we must be doubly careful not to label all teen-agers as dangerous delinquents. A Chicago newspaper has made a recent survey of teen-agers throughout the country and has found that the total number of delinquent teen-agers adds up to less than five per cent of our juvenile population. These five per cent make the lurid headlines so glaringly that we almost associate all teen-agers as dangerous delinquents. As one youth puts it we are so busy looking for the bad that we fail to see the good.

So let's give more thought to our ninety-five per cent youth; the ones who keep themselves out of trouble by being busy with all sorts of worth-while things. Our juvenile NON-delinquents need our confidence and moral support and friendship. They are not in sympathy with the five per cent lawless group any more than we wish to be associated with the class of criminal adults.

We should be quick to do what we can to help provide the proper atmosphere, the proper activities, the Christian influence, and a large place for them in the program of the Church, so that the abounding energies of our fine youth may be given proper outlet and guidance. The ninety-five per cent non-delinquents, if dedicated to God and His service, will soon become a mighty factor in bringing our nation and our communities under the direction of God's will and plan. The Christianized non-delinquents are our greatest hope. May we do all we can for them.

In this topsy-turvey world where we are building up tremendous physical forces with a feeling that it will bring us peace and security, we are coming dangerously close to the worn-out philosophy that "might makes right." It is high time we reversed that pagan idea with the Christian counterpart—"Right makes might."

The right is in line with God, who is righteousness supreme. To be on the side of right is to be on the

The Christian and God's Word

CURT BOESE*

The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul:
The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.
The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart:
The commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes.
The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring for ever:
The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.
More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold:
Sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb.
Moreover by them is thy servant warned:
And in keeping of them there is great reward.

—Psalm 19:7-11

When the Lord appeared to Abraham He said, "Walk before me and be thou perfect." When Jesus preached the Sermon on the Mount He said, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

But we have failed to live up to God's standard of perfection. God is dissatisfied with us in our state of imperfection. God has sent His Son to redeem us from our sins.

There is joy in accepting God's redemption. An elderly couple in my presence were wrestling with the problem of guilt. They had been living in sin for a number of years. After they had accepted Christ as their Savior, the woman said, "Something has happened! I feel lighter." I said, "Yes, something has happened. The burden of all those sins has been taken away." God's Word promises the joy of forgiveness to all who confess their sins in sincere repentance.

The Christian, having a new relation to God and being adopted into God's family, will also have a new attitude toward God's Word. He will look to God for guidance.

The Christian will not disregard God's Word as the people in the time of Noah did. Noah preached one hundred and twenty years but the people doubted what he said and only Noah's family entered the ark.

Even today many people doubt God's Word. We need to study God's Word until we are sure that God is faithful. We need to read and reread the many examples that prove that God is true to His Word.

God told Adam and Eve what would happen if they disobeyed. They disobeyed and they were put out of the Garden.

The people in Noah's time probably didn't believe that it could rain forty days and forty nights. But God said it could and it did! The Christian treasures God's Word. I have a plaque which I received years ago from my grandmother. I treasure this plaque. Some people have gold rings and gold bracelets or other trinkets of gold. They treasure these valuables. The statutes of the Lord are more to be desired than gold, "yea, than much fine gold." If we had only a small piece of gold it would be valuable. God's Word is much more valuable!

The Christian finds satisfaction in God's Word. Hungry boys and girls know how satisfying honey is on bread and butter. It just melts in the mouth. The Christian, like the Psalmist, thinks God's Word is "sweeter than honey."

God's Word enlightens the spiritual eye so that the Christian heeds the warnings in the Bible. When Cain had killed his brother, God asked him, "Cain, where is Abel thy brother?" Cain said, "I don't know. Am I my brother's keeper?" A lawyer once asked Jesus which is the greatest commandment. Jesus answered, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy might, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment, and the second is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

People make many excuses for not being concerned about their neighbor's welfare. But these excuses will fade away if we remember that each individual has a soul that needs to be saved.

The warning that we are our brother's keeper is also an opportunity for service. People frequently do not appreciate the value of Christian service until they themselves are in a position where they need the service of others. Often when people come home from the hospital they say that if they had known the value of kind deeds they would have helped others more. Or, after a funeral, people will say, "If I had known that this was going to happen I would have visited him more before it was too late."

We need to pray more for others. God will show us ways if we ask Him. Sometimes we will be able to give people more than they expect. The lame man at the Beautiful Gate asked Peter and John for alms. Peter said, "Silver and gold have I none." With God's help Peter was able to give the lame man more than he had asked.

The Psalmist found that there is great reward in keeping God's commands. Jesus re-emphasized this when He promised, "There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children or lands, for my sake and the gospel's, but shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and lands, with persecutions, and in the world to come, eternal life."

Reverence, trust, and obedience—all of these should be included in the Christian's attitude toward the Word of God. His rewards will include satisfaction which leads to eternal life.

"Is It Right?"

H. H. SMITH*

When General Lee realized that the South was losing the war and to prolong the struggle would mean a needless sacrifice of life, he took steps to make the surrender. "There is nothing left for me to do but go and see General Grant," he said, "and I would rather die a thousand deaths." An officer said to him, "Oh, General, what will history say of the surrender of the army in the field?" Lee replied, "Yes, I know they will say hard things of us; but they will not understand how we were overwhelmed by numbers; but that is not the question, Colonel; the question is, is it right to surrender this army? If it is right then I will take all the responsibility." (No doubt Lee emphasized the words in italics).

Those were great words from a great man! In that trying hour, Lee's deepest concern was to know what duty required of him. "Is it right?" If the answer is "yes," he will do so and take all the responsibility.

Prevalency of Evil

It is depressing to observe the great amount of evil in the world, and it is not confined to any single class of persons. Some are thieves, thugs, bandits, but there are also many so-called white-collar deadbeats—tax-dodgers, forgers, embezzlers — men and women who are ready to lie, cheat, steal, and in various ways take advantage of others. There is too much crookedness in the world today, because too many are asking themselves the wrong questions. With high-minded men, there is but one question, "Is it right?" But with many others the question is, "What can I get out of this—in profit, pleasure, prestige?" And too often these ends are sought regardless of whether right or wrong.

There are many who do not hesitate to steal from the government, or some corporation, as a railroad or streetcar company, who would not be guilty of stealing from an individual. They will make false statements about their taxable income—and perjure themselves in doing so. If the conductor on a railroad or bus line should fail to collect the fare, they cheat the company out of the fare, instead of calling the conductor's attention to the oversight. Hotel keepers complain that some guests steal bed linen, towels, and such things. Why will some people steal from a hotel, who would not think of stealing from a private home where they may spend a night?

In a recent issue of the Reader's Digest there is a startling account of what is described as "the personal-injury racket." We are told that the public is robbed of millions of dollars annually by deadbeats who make a business of claiming fake injuries and collecting damages.

Honesty in All Things

An honest person is honest in all things. Remember the words of the Master, "He who is faithful in a very little is faithful also in much; and he who is dishonest in a very little is dishonest also in much," Luke 16:10 RSV.

An interesting essay—or lecture—was written by Dr. George W. Bagby during the latter part of the last century, titled, "The Old Virginia Gentleman." After naming several commendable traits of the old Virginia statesman Dr. Bagby mentioned integrity. "Honesty?" he asks. "The question is almost an insult. 'Madam,' said Judge John Robertson, when in Congress, to his wife, who asked him to frank a letter for her. 'Madam, I am not a thief.' "

"What a small matter to make any ado over," does someone say? True, it was a matter involving only a few cents, but that Congressman was observing the teaching of the Master about being "honest in a very little." If during the past several years all of our public servants had been as careful to be strictly honest in all their duties and dealings as was this old-time statesman, not one of them would have been called upon to spend a few years as a "prison guest."

Among other faults, this generation has been accused of a lack of sensitivity of conscience. How may one acquire a more sensitive conscience? A sincere desire to know and do what is right in the sight of God, with watchfulness and prayer, will help. Even the Apostle Paul said—according to the Revised Version: "I always take pains to have a clear conscience toward God and toward men," Acts 24:16 RSV. If the great apostle felt it necessary always to be on guard against slipping, how much more should we feel the necessity of constant watchfulness and prayer?

We should take care not to become disheartened because of the prevalency of evil in the world. Sin of every kind was rampant in Paul's day, but remember it was the apostle who said, "Where sin increased, grace abounded all the more," Rom. 8:20 RSV. God has a remedy for sin. When we read a report from the FBI, giving the number of crimes committed throughout the country, every hour, we should be disturbed but not discouraged. There is much good as well as much evil in the world. While some of our leaders in public life may go wrong and disappoint us, we can readily agree with a prominent churchman who recently wrote, "The government at Washington has hundreds of thousands of honest and competent people working for it."

As for ourselves, let us all strive to make this a better world by being steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

According to latest reports, an evangelistic campaign in New York City by Billy Graham seems "virtually assured" for the fall of 1957. It is felt that at least two years of preparation will be needed for such a crusade.

District Peace Committees Meet

MAYNARD SHELLY*

In Chicago, Illinois, February 15 and 16, representatives of the Peace Committees of the district conferences met at Mennonite Biblical Seminary under the direction of the Peace and Service Committee of the Board of Christian Service. Reviewing, searching, and planning were on the agenda.

Informal reports from the several districts showed that quite a bit of work had been done by these committees since their last meeting three years ago. The Central and Middle Districts had sponsored Peace Retreats, the Eastern District conducted a summer service unit and a one-day Voluntary Service project, the Northern District held a ministers' conference, the Pacific District had done church visitation, and the Western District promoted special church services and sent delegations to Washington. Many other things were done by each district, but all had an enlarging program of activity.

This may have been one reason that an analysis of the recent draft census studied at this conference showed that the number of young men who take the nonresistant position has increased twenty per cent in the last ten years. The draft census of 1944 was taken during a "hot-war" period, which the group felt might have been one reason that the first census was lower than the 1954 counting. Yet the evidence of Peace Committee activity in all districts indicates that the peace witness has grown.

Dr. J. S. Schultz, Bluffton, Ohio, gave a brief report on a research program he had conducted with 1-W men for the Mennonite Central Committee. An encouraging note he gave was that most 1-W men said they would encourage others to take the same position, and that they would recommend it to their younger brothers.

The conference gave a partial summary of its convictions when individuals shared the following seven impressions in a closing devotional period:

1. We have a large and significant job to do in our conferences, in interpreting the peace witness to all people and to all ages.

2. We want to keep the work of peace and service in its proper context as a part of the work of the church, and as an expression of the gospel.

3. We want to define our peace witness in the light of the Bible, making the biblical emphasis our guide.

4. We believe in the value and necessity of wrestling with the problems we face in living the Christian life, studying these challenges together, for we believe that the Holy Spirit works through people who are seeking.

5. We believe that the service program of the Christian church is making a larger contribution to the peace of the world than any program of legislation by governments.

6. We believe that our men who have served in CPS and in 1-W have a large potential in the work of the church.

7. We believe in the value of keeping at work on the program of peace and service.

Film Review

"CHILDREN AND THE CHURCH," six filmstrips: 1. Goals of the Church for Children, 2. The Church Plans for Children, 3. The Nursery Child and the Church, 4. The Kindergarten Child and the Church, 5. The Primary Child and the Church, 6. The Junior and the Church; also six 33 1/3 rpm records; also six guides. Can be purchased singly for $10.00 or the entire set for $49.50 from Christian Board of Publication, Beaumont and Pine Blvd., St. Louis 3, Missouri.

These filmstrips were produced by the co-operating denominations through the Department of Children's Work and the Department of Audio-Visual and Radio Education, Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A.

Goals of the Church for Children shows how goals can be attained for the various age groups. The Church Plans for Children reveals how even a small church can plan effectively for the Christian education of its children. The Nursery Child and the Church stresses the place of the parents in the spiritual growth of this age group. The Kindergarten Child and the Church emphasizes the importance of evaluation as teachers plan their work. The Primary Child and the Church shows various teaching methods that can be utilized. The Junior and the Church stresses the total program in the church as it is used to help to meet the needs of this age group.

The committee felt that these filmstrips would be very helpful for teacher training in our churches. The first two are of an over-all nature and could be used effectively for all teachers of children through the junior age. The other four could be most effectively used with teachers for these particular age groups.

A number of questions were raised. The last four filmstrips particularly show rather spacious quarters and good equipment. The question was raised whether the presentation was not too idealistic. In some of the filmstrips things seemed to work too well. The question was raised whether things worked that smoothly in actual situations. In both of these instances the committee felt that it was well to show the ideal and that all of us in our buildings and our teaching strive to teach the ideal.

Another question was raised by one member of the committee. It was the question regarding some of the underlying theological presuppositions in one or two of the age-group filmstrips. It seemed as though there were a minimum of ideas which the teachers attempted to have become meaningful to the children. The committee was not unanimous in this observation.

If you are interested in having these filmstrips available through our Board of Education and Publication write to Willard Claassen, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas. We will probably be making some filmstrips available for churches on a rental basis.

Flashes of Thought

Walter Gering

No matter where I went, it was always the same. I could not understand their language. There I was in the famous old Singel Mennonite Church of Amsterdam; one of the most historic spots in all Mennonite history. It was my first Sunday in Holland and together with other American friends the trip had been made in order that we might worship with our Dutch brethren in the faith. There was congregational singing, prayer, preaching of the Word—much as in the churches at home. But I was at a loss; I could not understand the language.

Some weeks later it was in the great Cathedral of Copenhagen, Denmark. It was one of those beautiful sights long to be remembered, often we went there to worship. The beauty of the building with the pure white statues of the apostles and the vaulted ceilings with their carvings were an inspiration. The spirit of the preacher, the fervor with which he spoke made its impressions. But there was no understanding of the language.

In Rome it was the world famous Cathedral of St. Peter. Hours were spent strolling about the structure, viewing the paintings, the figures, and stained glass windows. Everywhere the worshipers were engaged in their activities; visitors were being taken upon conducted tours through the church. Following the crowd we came upon an auditorium where a speaker was addressing the audience. With what interest we would have followed his words. But it was in vain; we could not understand his language.

In the Waldensian Valleys it was like being at home in one of our own churches. Somehow there seemed to be a kindred spirit with these who have been associated so closely with our earliest forefathers. The hymns which they sang were sung to the same melodies which we had used at home. The friendly spirit of the people, the simplicity of their worship, all this reminded us of home. Yet, the language was foreign to our ears. We understood nothing.

So it was again and again. Over 2,000 languages and dialects are represented throughout the world. Some are closely related; others have no similarity. How quickly a traveler feels himself at a loss as he goes from one to the other. A feeling of helplessness creeps over the soul; a feeling of being alone in a strange world. Occasionally there is one who commands eight or even ten different languages. But what is that among so many? How can we ever hope to live and work with each other where we cannot understand each other's language?

Then it was that it came. There is one who does understand each one. He is in the midst of the congregation wherever men worship Him. No matter

The Only Unimpeachable Foundation

WALTER H. DYCK

On the last week end in January, 1955, delegates from the three Mennonite congregations in Uruguay (El Ombu, Gartental, and Montevideo) met in the capital city for their annual conference. About twenty persons participated in the deliberations. The main item of business was the adoption of a conference constitution, the first paragraph of which included the well-known text: "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ," 1 Cor. 3:11.

The foundation principles governing this "union of Mennonite congregations" has as its basis, "the only and unimpeachable foundation which is the gospel of Jesus Christ, as revealed in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, as God's Word and Holy will."

In regard to baptism it simply says, "Mennonites practice baptism on confession of faith."

The nonswearing of oaths is referred to as follows: "According to the teachings of Jesus Christ in Matthew 5:34-37, and James 5:12, Mennonites decline to use the oath. They endeavor to be truthful in word and deed, and, should the case arise, they answer questions directed to them with a conscientious "Yes" or "No."

Peace and Nonresistance was defined, after considerable discussion: "Convinced that a Christian is not permitted to retaliate or to destroy human life, Mennonites endeavor to live peaceably in their personal life; they stand for nonresistance in public life, and wish to do their part in working for peace among nations (Matthew 5:38-48; Romans 12:18-21).

Relationship to Other Church Bodies: "The Conference wishes to maintain brotherly relations with Mennonite organizations in other lands, and live in peace and harmony with those of other confessions. Therefore it refrains from entering into any confessional dispute or controversy."

Relationship of Church and State: "Except when its demands repudiate the Word of God, it (the Conference) wishes to faithfully serve and support the State in its endeavors for the common welfare of all." The constitution says nothing about church discipline.

Conference officers elected for the coming year were: chairman, Elder Ernst Regehr; vice-chairman, Elder Rudolf Hein; secretary, G. E. Reimer; asst. secretary, Johannes Woelke; treasurer, Arnold Schmidt; asst. treasurer, Dr. Richard Rupp.

A board of six men, two elected by each of the three churches, called the "Wirtschaftsausschuss," gives assistance in immigrant resettlement, further land purchases, and cases of hardship. It assumes the responsibility and assets of the former "Gross Komitee."

Reports were given on youth work, the annual retreats, and plans for a youth home in Montevideo. Resolutions of encouragement in these phases of work were adopted. Reinhard Fast who is now a ministerial student in Sao Leopoldo, Brazil, was elected to head the youth work.

Three stimulating papers were presented on "Ways and Means of Raising the General Educational Level." One speaker recommended scholarships for students studying in other schools, also the founding of a Mennonite parochial school on the high school level. A committee was appointed to study the educational needs and report back their findings and recommendation within three months, for consideration by the Conference Executive Committee (Vorstand).

Treasuries were created to receive contributions for Foreign and Home Missions. Congregations were encouraged to have annual mission festivals and regular mission offerings.

It was reported that the next Conference of Mennonite Churches of South America is to be held in El Ombu within the coming year. Elder Jacob Isaak, Fernheim, Paraguay, is to serve as chairman. Delegates from Paraguay are reportedly anxious to see wheat fields before harvest. In that case the conference would be planned for late November of 1955.

The three congregations were encouraged to make contributions toward the building of an evangelical hospital in Montevideo. Even though gifts may not be large, it would show our goodwill, and open the door for our girls to participate in recognized nurses training courses.

Sunday, January 30, was "Gemeindetag." A large gathering took part in a worship service—"Festpredigt" and songs by the choir, a time for fellowship and refreshments, and an illustrated message on the Fifth Mennonite World Conference in Basel, Switzerland, in 1952. It was a busy and blessed week end.

Would you like to hear about the "Co-operativa Delta"—a new settlement for about forty families which is just being organized? Watch for the next installment in The Mennonite.

A FORMOSA INCIDENT

The experience of a young Formosan lady who became a Christian just before her death is described by Margareth Peters of Altona, Man., an MCC nurse serving at the Hualien, Formosa, hospital.

"She was a patient at our hospital, around 23 years of age. Her illness was such that her days on earth were drawing to a close very rapidly. She as well as the other members of her family were not Christians. For some time it seemed as though she would go into eternity without a Savior. But God answered all the many prayers sent up to Him for her. Her dying words were "Oh, see how many are coming to meet me. It's wonderful. We must pray." With those words on her lips and a peaceful expression on her face, she quietly passed over to the other shore. We pray that her wonderful witness in dying may help to bring the rest of her family and others to accept Christ as their Savior."

Big Problems from Little Ants

FRANK J. WIENS*

The General Conference through the Board of Christian Service has promised to raise half, $2,000, for ant control in Neuland Colony, Paraguay. Western Canada Relief Committee will raise the other half. Since these funds are needed by May 15, groups or individuals interested are urged to contribute as soon as possible.

MCC representatives in Paraguay are helping to administer the program. Ten thousand cans of poison have been ordered. The following report from Frank Wiens, recently returned from Paraguay, describes the need.

Ants in the Paraguayan Chaco present a problem of major importance, and are a grave threat to the success of the Mennonite colonists. Of the three colonies, Neuland is perhaps most seriously afflicted. This colony cultivates approximately 10,000 acres, 3,000 of which are infested with this tiny vicious beast.

Since their beginning in 1947 Neuland has been battling this plague. The entire villages have already been resettled. It has been the greatest cause of discouragement. Many colonists have already deserted Paraguay, largely because of this evil problem.

It is not that the ants have moved in recently. They have been there all the years—perhaps hundreds of years before any Mennonite thought of going to Paraguay. But their being there today presents a real problem, and we must do something about it.

In villages where these ants are located, it is well nigh impossible to raise a crop. They move about, cutting off any and all green leaves they may encounter. As quickly as the first tender leaf appears, it is neatly trimmed level to the earth. Farmers have endeavored to raise crops year after year, but with little success. The land is otherwise productive. Homes, barns, wells, schools, roadways, fences, etc., are already standing. And to desert these establishments and resettle whole groups of families becomes prohibitive. For this reason colony leaders have busied themselves in determining how these ants can be eradicated.

This ant belongs to a swarm which has its nest deep in the earth—anywhere from 25 to 45 feet. It may have up to six or eight holes on the surface, which come together into one channel four or five feet down. Sometimes nests are so closely situated that the holes on the surface reach far into the zone of other nests. This complicates determining into which hole the poison is to be administered. To overcome the problem of pouring poison down each hole, the colonists first force smoke down one hole, to determine which are related, and this makes way for administering poison into only one hole for the entire nest.

Together with STICA and other governmental assistance and financial assistance from the North American brotherhood, we have now discovered a new type of poison "Methyl Bromide" which will quite nearly exterminate the ants, and thus liquidate the problem. This liquid comes in small tins, and when it comes in contact with air, instantly turns into a gas, four times heavier than air. A small amount of liquid is poured into the ant hole by means of a dispenser and rubber tube, and this then, forces its way deeply into the base of the ant nest, killing ants, queen and the eggs.

Although the problems of the settlers in the Chaco are legion, ants are the greatest cause of discouragement. It is the type of problem which can be conquered. Once we have done so, settlers now leaving probably will remain and be able to plant crops successfully.

Hypocrisy

It is all in vain to preach the truth
To the eager ears of trusting youth,
If, whenever the lad is standing by,
He sees you cheat and he hears you lie.
Fine words may grace the advice you give,
But youth will learn from the way you live.

Honor's a word that a thief may use,
High-sounding language the base may choose.
Speech is empty and preaching vain,
Though the truth shines clear and the lesson's plain;
If you play false, he will turn away,
For your life must square to the things you say.

He won't tread the path of your righteous talk,
But will follow the path that you daily walk.
"Not as I do, but do as I say,"
Won't win him to follow the better way;
Through the thin veneer of your speech he'll see,
Unless you're the man you would have him be.

The longer you live you will find this true;
As you would teach, you must also do.
Rounded sentences, smooth and fair,
Were better not said if your deeds aren't square.
If you would teach him to live his very best,
You must live your life to the self-same test.

Canadian Mennonite Youth Organization

The annual business meeting of the Canadian Mennonite Youth Organization took place in Abbotsford, B. C., on July 5, 1954. Delegates from the different parts of Canada representing the local youth groups were present. A budget for $1750.00 was adopted, but this has since been found to be inadequate because of the new budget of the YPU of which the Canadian district share is $1651.20. Our budget for 1954-55 is now as follows:

Youth Page—(wages for editor)	$ 360.00
Youth Page—(cuts, etc.)	300.00
Traveling expenses	360.00
Sundry	40.00
YPU—(MEF and General)	1651.20
TOTAL	$2711.20

The aim of the CMYO is to create a "united Mennonite youth in Christ." This is to be achieved by: 1) encouraging youth to accept Christ as personal Savior and Lord, 2) deepening of spiritual life, 3) in order to achieve successful youth work, the local groups work on the three area emphasis of "Faith and Life," "Christian Service," and "Fellowship," 4) youth groups become closer united one to another through means of conferences, youth retreats, publications, correspondence, etc., and 5) to awaken in the hearts of our youth an interest in the historical significance of the Mennonite church and its role in the advancement of the kingdom of God.

Since the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Ontario each have their provincial youth organization, the Canadian Mennonite Youth Organization serves as a connecting link between these various provincial youth organizations, much in the same way as the relationship of the YPU is to the district conferences. This is done through the following means.

A) Jugendseite (Youth Page) in the German conference paper, Der Bote. The activities of the provincial youth activities are reported here, and other items of interest are published much the same as the youth page in The Mennonite.

B) Arrangements are made for youth retreat speakers, very often the same speaker can serve a number of the provincial retreats in one season.

C) The executive of the CMYO has been organized on the pattern of the three area emphasis, and we try to promote this pattern on the provincial level.

D) The CMYO has been making efforts to secure ideas for projects for the local youth group and these are passed on to such groups as are interested in this type of project.

E) For the coming year the CMYO is sponsoring a project wherein all the provincial organizations are participating. This is the furnishing of the chapel in the new Canadian Mennonite Bible College, Winnipeg. Pledge cards have been mailed out to all the churches and the youth are called upon to contribute 25 cents a week for eight weeks. At the end of the eight-week drive, the money will be mailed to the secretary. It is hoped that the project costing $4,500. will be met within this period of time.

One of the major activities of the BCMYO is the daily vacation Bible school, held during the summer months in the Mennonite churches. Just recently, however, this work has been given over to the church, whereas the youth organization is concentrating its efforts on those districts where children do not otherwise receive religious instruction.

For the first time this past summer this organization has held a children's as well as young people's retreat. Since the organization does not have a retreat ground of its own, a camp with adequate facilities was rented for the week-long retreat.

Another new attempt that was made was in the form of a choir school held toward the end of last year. The purpose of the choir school was to help meet the needs of our choir conductors and our church choirs as a whole.

A music festival is planned for the coming spring in which individual choirs will be rendering special numbers. In fall the combined choirs will begin to practice an oratorio.

During the year each youth fellowship pays a visit to some neighboring youth fellowship. It is hoped that these exchange programs will aid in building a stronger, more balanced youth, local as well as provincial.

The annual business meeting of the BCMYO was held Feb. 5th and 6th. The theme of the mission Sunday, Feb. 13th, was "Challenge to Action," at which Dr. John Zook, missionary to Africa, was the main speaker.

Alberta

The Alberta youth organization consists of young people from eight different churches plus several small groups which are not as organized as churches. Each local church has its own fellowship but the work done on the provincial level is done co-operatively by all the church groups. The officers of our youth organization are elected at the annual business meeting which is held in conjunction with the retreat.

At the retreat held in August of 1954 our youth organization was reorganized. It was felt that during the last several years, due to the lack of interest, co-operation, information, and vision, the youth work had been suffering acutely, thus the organization was revamped. We now have the three area committees, the executive, and a conference adviser on our youth organization board. We trust this more balanced organization will result in more efficient and effective work for the Lord.

Plans have been made for the retreat to be held July 28-31. We hope to emphasize individual and group discussions. A program using the three areas will be used this year.

Even though the retreat is the major activity of the year, there is other work being done. Each year DVBS is taught in various outlying areas, by young people who are willing to give one or two weeks of their time for the Lord's service. An active part is also taken by a few of our young people in VS units throughout Canada. Steps are being taken to launch out more wholeheartedly in our own province as well. Song festivals, planned with the assistance of the different choir leaders, are held each spring at which all the choirs from our churches take an active part. These are held in the different churches alternately.

The first project carried out by our newly organized body was that of getting the Bible School at Didsbury ready for the opening of its doors. Volunteers from some of the churches came to devote two days of labor toward this venture. This proved very successful.

Work in old folks homes, in hospitals, mission work in cities and children's camps is being anticipated in the near future.

Our major difficulty is that of not having our own camp ground facilities. A committee has been elected to investigate the possibilities of a camp site and we trust that our youth organization will soon have a home of its own.

Joe Neufeld

Saskatchewan

The two main centers of youth work in the province are at the Youth Farm in Rosthern, and Elim Gospel Beach, which is situated approximately thirty miles south of Swift Current. At the Youth Farm are two invalid homes, two children's homes, and numerous other farm buildings. At Elim Gospel Beach, evangelistic meetings are held regularly in summer. Here, as well as in Rosthern, annual young people's and children's retreats are sponsored. Last year the young married couples held a retreat at Elim Gospel Beach. An invalid home has now also been opened at Herbert. It is under the management of Dick Friesen.

The youth organization also carries several missionary projects. They support Esther Patkau in Japan and Rueben Siemens at Pierceland, (northern) Sask. The Ben Sawatzkys receive support from the Youth Farm.

A Youth Conference is to be held in North Battleford, March 11-13. Dr. D. C. Wedel will be the main speaker. This year there will be a closed workshop at the Rosthern Junior College. This event is sponsored by the youth organization in cooperation with the school.

Another important phase of our youth work is the DVBS program. Teachers are sent out by the Youth Organization to isolated stations in northern Saskatchewan.

Sue Martens

Manitoba

The Manitoba Mennonite Youth Organization is privileged in having very suitable facilities available for youth and children's retreats at the Assiniboine Mennonite Mission Camp. This camp is situated about twenty miles west of Winnipeg.

Special committees are being appointed for each phase of the youth work. In this way more people are given a chance to actively participate in the planning, organizing and carrying out of the youth program. There are Retreat, Sunday School Camp, Choir Directors, and Program Committees.

In the past few years the enrollment for the Sunday School Camp has been so large that the course had to be offered for two consecutive weeks, about one hundred children attending each week. The Choir Directors Committee is responsible for a three or four day conducting course which is offered annually. They are also in charge of the numerous song festivals held each spring and summer.

The Program Committee collects and arranges suitable program material for the Christian Endeavor meetings. These are then made available to all church groups who desire them.

Study material for young people's groups has also been prepared. This includes a series of lessons on Bible Study, Mennonite History, and general topics such as smoking, drinking, courtship and marriage, etc.

Through these efforts we hope to reach, not only the local group, but the individuals in the group, and thus build and promote a United Mennonite Youth in Christ.

Paul Peters

Ontario

The Ontario Youth Organization, called into being in September, 1945, is comprised of the young people of nine churches: Leamington, Harrow, Waterloo-Kitchener, Port Rowan, St. Catharines, Toronto, Dunnville, Vineland, and Niagara-on-the-Lake. It has a registered membership of from 500-700 which is placed over an area 250 miles in length from the Detroit-Windsor border on the western end of Lake Erie to the mouth of the Niagara River on Lake Ontario. These nine church fellowships each elect one provincial representative to the OYO council and delegate members to the annual business meeting.

Individual churches conduct weekly or biweekly youth meetings exclusively for youth and give monthly (Jugendvereinsabende) meetings for the benefit of the congregation.

Activities and projects are undertaken locally as well as on a provincial level. Of the former are included a German language weekly broadcast, the support of a missionary candidate, hospital visitation and others of local need. Of the latter: partial support of the Rudy Martens in Africa; financial aid to the Peter Epps in Montevideo; contribution to Canadian Mennonite Bible College, United Mennonite Bible School and United Mennonite Educational Institute. The provincial organization also publishes a bilingual monthly youth paper, "Die Vereinsglocke," begun in 1945, for which all the local groups contribute articles.

Provincial business meetings are held annually in conjunction with retreats sponsored consecutively by the local churches. Since 1952 three workshops have been held dealing with the topics of Three-Area Plan, Leadership, and Retreats. Song festivals (Saengerfests), planned jointly by the youth and choir leaders, are presented alternately in the different churches.

To date only a few of the churches are organized strictly according to the three-area plan although others have their activities under a similar system which, if executed efficiently in the coming years promises to strengthen the expanding youth program of the provincial organization.

MCC PRESENTS TESTIMONY OPPOSING RESERVES AND UMT

A statement of concern opposing the reserves and universal military training bill (H. R. 2967) was presented by the Mennonite Central Committee at a hearing on March 1, before the subcommittee on Reserve Forces of the Committee on Armed Services of the U. S. House of Representatives.

The testimony was presented by H. S. Bender, chairman of the MCC Peace Section which represents the Mennonite and Brethren in Christ peace position before the government. In his statement urging that the subcommittee not recommend the passage of H. R. 2967, Brother Bender pointed to the inadequacy of militarism to solve the world's problems and suggested a program of positive action.

"Let us shift our emphasis from the purely military approach to security to an approach which will employ all the various and effective methods of aid to needy and underdeveloped areas of the world such as relief, use of surplus foods, technical assistance, Point 4 programs and peace leadership," he urged. A brief discussion followed Brother Bender's testimony.

KMB YOUTH FAILS TO GET CO CLASSIFICATION, REFUSES INDUCTION

Another Mennonite youth has found it necessary to refuse induction into the army to be true to the biblical principles of love and nonresistance.

Jonathan A. Mendel, a member of the Krimmer Mennonite Brethren Church living near Freeman, S. D., took this step when he was unable to secure a 1-O classification. Instead of being committed to prison, he has been assigned to three years of work under the Mennonite Central Committee. Thereafter he will be on probation for two years.

At the present time three Old Order Amish youths are in prison for refusal to report for their 1-W assignments. Five other youths from the MCC constituency previously in prison are completing their sentences on parole.

EUROPEAN TRAINEES MEET FOR MIDYEAR CONFERENCE

The 33 European Mennonite youths from France, Germany, Holland, Luxemburg, and Switzerland participating in the 1954-55 MCC trainee program met for their midyear evaluation conference at the Emmaus Mennonite Church near Whitewater, Kan., March 4 to 6.

The conference was a time of worship and inspiration and a sharing of their observations in Mennonite homes and communities during the past six months. Following the conference the trainees left for their assignments in different communities—a practice which enables them to gain a greater variety of experiences observing American occupational practices and community and church life.

Theme of the conference was "Building a Good Foundation" which was developed by the speaker, C. J. Dyck of Elbing, Kan. Considerable time was devoted to discussions comparing American and European farming and housekeeping methods and church life.

FERNHEIM COLONY PLANS 25TH ANNIVERSARY FESTIVAL

Fernheim colony in Paraguay is making plans for a July 1 festival commemorating the 25th anniversary of its founding.

The day, celebrating the naming of Fernheim on July 1, 1930, will be one of thanksgiving and remembrance of God's leading the colonists to safety in Paraguay and guiding them in the establishment of the colony.

There will be reports by church groups telling of their experiences and choir selections. Following a noon meal together, the colonists will view a demonstration of equipment and implements showing the progress made during the past 25 years.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Sunday morning, February 27, a special Lenten meditation was presented by the choir of the Woodlawn Mennonite Church. The choir, under the direction of John Gaeddert gave "From the Cross," words by T. B. Pollock and music by S. T. Reiff. This meditation is based on the seven sayings of Christ on the cross. Alden Bohn was soloist and William Gering reader.

Dr. L. L. Ramseyer, president of Bluffton College, was guest speaker at the Tuesday chapel service at Bethany Biblical Seminary, March 1. Christian education was the theme of Dr. Ramseyer's address.

Members of the board of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary and Bible School met at Woodlawn for their spring meeting on March 2. A. S. Rosenberger of Quakertown, Pennsylvania, president of the board, presided at the meeting.

Dr. Erland Waltner, North Newton, Kansas, is scheduled to be the guest speaker for the annual Discipleship Week held at the Seminary. This year the services will be held from March 27 through April 1.

Be still, and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the nations, I will be exalted in the earth. The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge.

Joe Yoder was chairman for our church for this project. The film, "Out of the Night," was shown in our church Sunday evening, Jan. 30. Bowman, one of our elderly members, is still convalescing in Goshen Hospital following a fall in which he broke his hip. —Corr.

—Walton Church, Walton, Kan.: Mina Mina of Cairo, Egypt, a student at Bethel College, was our speaker on Race Relations Sunday. He told us something of the history, traditions, and customs of the Coptic Orthodox Christian Church, of which he is a member. He finds customs in the United States very different from those in his native land, but he showed us that there are sometimes advantages in doing things in the traditional, conservative manner. If he wanted to get married he would have to ask his father for permission, and this might save him from the regrets which many Americans experience after a few months of marriage. He had not known about conscientious objectors before he came to the United States, but he finds himself more and more attracted by the beliefs of sincere conscientious objectors.—Harold Peters, Corr.

side of God. To be on the side of God is to be drawing on His limitless resources of power. To be on the side of right, God's side, is to be endued with might.

There are mightier forces than those of physical destruction. The new bombs may bring havoc to a whole city or nation, but they cannot dry a child's tear or comfort a broken heart. Bombs may blot out whole cities but they cannot blot out sin. Only God through Christ can do that.

The strongest powers of might are the powers of right which have the backing of God himself. The right is stronger than the wrong. The right must prevail. Right is might.

the language, He understands every word and enters freely into the worship of the hour.

So too it is with the language of the soul. How often our weary hearts cry out in language which even our nearest friend cannot understand. It is to them as though we spoke a foreign language. But thank God, there is One who understands. The sighing of a troubled heart is but a familiar language unto Him.

Herald Summer Bible School Material

The series has 13 grades. Nursery, Kindergarten I and II, and Grades 1 to 10. Every lesson is based solidly on God's Word. It is planned to meet each child's spiritual need through the Bible.

The child learns how to relate truth to daily living. Best educational techniques are incorporated into the series. Courses parallel the child's school progress. The series builds a constantly growing understanding of Christ, the plan of salvation, and what following Christ means.

Stories first help the child feel Jesus' love for him, then they show him ways to express his love to Christ, later he learns how to apply Christ's teachings to his own life.

The workbooks and manuals are complete. Pupil's workbook includes: Bible stories, child experience stories, pictures, related handwork, music, maps, quizzes, and other activities. The teacher's manual contains detailed lesson plans, missionary stories, game suggestions, program plans, library book lists, and songs.

Each lesson in the teacher's manual guides the teacher in developing lesson plans that will accomplish the objectives of the course. Completeness of the pupils' books relieves the teachers of the task of preparing child-experience and creative activity materials, giving them more time for preparation for the task of creative teaching—prayerful study and mastery of lesson content and teaching procedures.

"Christians in Business" Meeting

To share and strengthen convictions of Christians in business the General Conference Western District Education Committee and the Board of Christian Service are sponsoring a two-day conference, April 15 and 16, on "Christians in Business." The meetings will be held in Hillsboro First Mennonite Church.

Attending the conference will be one or two delegates from each congregation in the Western District and anyone else interested. Other districts are welcome to send representatives.

The program will consist of several papers each half day session and then discussions in small groups. Questions being raised are: What are the problems and opportunities in personal business relations? What potentialities are there for new business opportunities in the Western District area? What new approaches might Christians in business consider? What special leadership can individual Christian businessmen provide for the church and community?

Programs are available from Harley Stucky, North Newton, and the Board of Christian Service, 722 Main, Newton, Kansas.

WHERE THE WAYS PART

A case can be made for the proposition that the single concern which occupies the thoughts of the world's people more than any other is that of how to deal with an enemy. About 80 per cent of the U. S. budget for 1955 goes for purposes in some way related to the problem our enemies represent. All other major nations spend staggering sums of money and fabulous amounts of human energy on this same issue. Most of the working time of officials of the United Nations organization is spent wrestling with aspects of this question.

The dominant conclusion to which such vast effort has led appears to be that ultimately one must be prepared to kill his enemies. We are trying to find ways of doing this more economically. According to somebody's figures, in the war between Sparta and Athens 2,300 years ago it cost $50 to kill a man. In the Roman wars the cost was $100 per death. By the time of the American Revolution the cost had risen to $600, in the Civil War to $5,000, in World War I to $26,000, and in World War II to $65,000. But with the new developments since 1945 people can now be killed for about $50 apiece again. To certain types of minds this means that we are in a strong position with respect to an enemy.

To the Christian mentality, however, the implications are of a distinctly different order. Let us mention three:

1. In a world traveling such a road, it is apparent what a clearly minority affair this Christian faith really is. In spite of the testimony of the gospel, made in high places and before men of authority, that we should love our enemies and do good to those who hate us, nowhere does this idea gain political acceptance. When our Lord said, "Wide is the gate and broad is the way that leads to destruction and many go in thereat," He stated a universal truth. Multitudes stand about to receive whatever blessing Christ can give, but few go forward to do His hard teachings. We can confidently expect that it will always be thus. The world does not now, and never will, follow the ethics of the kingdom.

2. One of the most decisive points of break with the world for the Christian will be in this way of dealing with an enemy. Beginning with the most intimate level of life in the church and reaching to international relationships the world goes one way but the Christian goes another.

3. And over and over again the Christian is driven back to the church—the true church—where his spiritual bruises can be healed in fellowship with others of the way, and where his vision can be restored and his commitment strengthened. It is discouraging, lonely, frightening for the Christian to contemplate and engage the world today. But back in the church he can find encouragement, strength, and fellowship.

And so come what may, Christians have the thrilling privilege of keeping alive the one right answer to the world's most persistent question.

ON FREEDOM

A recent book by Walter Lippman laments that in America public opinion has gained decisive control over governmental decisions. He writes, "The people have acquired power which they are incapable of exercising," and adds that public opinion "has shown itself to be a dangerous master of decisions when the stakes are life and death."

This same reckless confidence in personal judgment carries over into life in the kingdom where people sometimes make decisions they are not qualified to make. Who is a mortal man that he should announce that God cannot be trusted, and that if we are to come to a good end we must bring that end about by our own strength? Who should presume to veto the Word of God, saying that in this or that circumstance the teaching on love does not apply? Can it be that we have brought into the church from the world an independent, impertinent spirit improper before the throne of God?

There are some principles in the Christian way which go against popular ideas of freedom:

1. For one thing, there is a sense in which a person surrenders his freedom when he accepts Christ. Possessing Christ, a man is no longer free to play God himself; so also he has surrendered his freedom to hate, to follow other leaders, or to have other loyalties on the same or higher levels. Paul said, "I have become a slave for Jesus Christ." He had surrendered his freedom, in a sense.

2. In the Christian gospel there is a large place for obedience, always repugnant to the apostle of popular freedom. Throughout the Old Testament religion was conceived as obedience. Jeremiah reminds the Jews that on Sinai God said to Moses, "Obey my voice and I will be your God." All the prophets called for a return to obedience. Jesus said, "If you love me, keep my commandments."

3. Real freedom, as Christianity sees it, runs deeper than the mere ability to do or say or think anything one chooses. It is freedom to do the right—a freedom which those who do not know our Lord cannot possess. A man who has neither faith nor love in his heart cannot possibly choose the right; he is bound to evil, is the slave of evil. Believing himself to be free, he is of all men least free.

Let us beware of imbibing so much of the spirit of this world that we seize upon a liberty which is merely impertinence and fail to possess that profounder freedom which comes from bondage to our Lord.

Week of Witness -- His and Ours

WILLARD WIEBE*

Our Lord had a Week of Witness!

It was in Jerusalem!

He tried to tell his closest friends beforehand so that they might share the burden and be prepared for it. But Peter took Him aside and rebuked Him. (Matthew 16:21-23)

(It was this same Peter who had made the Great Confession! (Matthew 16:13-20)

Once again He told them very plainly—and the disciples became distressed. (Matthew 17:22, 23)

While He was on the way to that city He talked to them about it in detail. Fear and amazement seized them. (Mark 10:32-34)

They didn't understand Him. (Luke 9:43-45)

He even made enemies on account of it. (Luke 9:51-56)

Yes, our Lord had a Week of Witness in Jerusalem. The Prophets of old had written this of Him. It should be accomplished! (Luke 18:31-34)

We call it Passion Week!

SUNDAY

He entered Jerusalem riding on a colt, the foal of an ass. It was a beast of burden. The common people said He was the Son of David. (Matt. 21:1-9)

The Pharisees began to bristle! (Luke 19:39, John 12:19)

Our Lord wept! (Luke 19:41-44)

MONDAY

He cursed a fig tree—symbol of God's displeasure with the fruitless hypocrisy of Israel. Our Lord was hungry for fruit. He found only leaves—beautiful, bountiful—but no fruit. (Mark 11:12-14)

He went to the Temple. A house must be swept clean before the new arrives. He "cast out." He "overthrew." (Mark 11:15-17)

His enemies feared Him. They sought to destroy Him. (Mark 11:18)

TUESDAY

They asked, "By what authority do you these things?" (Matthew 21:23-27)

He told three parables. (Matthew 21:28-22-14)
—about Two Sons.
—about a Man and a Vineyard.
—about a King and a Marriage Feast.
They asked three questions. (Matthew 22:15-40)
—"Is it lawful to pay taxes to Caesar?"
—"What is it like in the resurrection?"
—"Which is the great commandment?"

He said, "Woe . . . Woe . . . Woe . . . Woe . . . Woe . . . Woe . . . Woe . . . ." Seven times! (Matthew 23)

Now He turned to His Disciples and talked about the Temple stones being thrown down. And about the end-time. (Matthew 24, 25)

WEDNESDAY

(Of this day we have no record. It is like the silent inter-Testament years.)

THURSDAY

The Upper Room! (Luke 22:7-18)
He washed the Disciples' feet! (John 13:1-20)
He said, "One of you shall betray me!" (John 13:21-30)
He broke the Bread, and blessed the Cup! (Luke 22:19, 20)
He said many things. (John 13:31-16:33)
"A new commandment I give unto you."
"Let not your heart be troubled."
"He that hath seen me hath seen the Father."
"The Father shall give you another Comforter."
"Peace I leave with you."
"I have chosen you . . . go and bear fruit."
"Ask anything of the Father, he will give it you."
He prayed for His own. (John 17)
"Keep them!"
"Consecrate them!"
"Unite them!"
"Use them!"

FRIDAY

The Garden! (Matthew 26:36-46)
The kiss of betrayal! (Matthew 26:47-56)
The Court! (Matthew 26:57—27:31)
Golgotha! (Matthew 27:32-56)
"Father, forgive them." (Luke 23:34)
"Today shalt thou be with me in paradise." (Luke 23:43)
"Woman, behold thy son." (John 19:26)
"My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (Matthew 27:46)
"I thirst." (John 19:28)
"Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." (Luke 23:46)
"It is finished." (John 19:30)
The Tomb! (John 19:38-42)

SATURDAY

His tomb was sealed. A guard was set. (Matthew 27:62-66)

SUNDAY

He arose! (Matthew 28:1-8)

* * * * * *

Yes, our Lord had a Week of Witness!
Will you? Will I?
He was misunderstood. Will we be?
He faced opposition. Will we?
He prayed!
He suffered!
He died!

Report on Trip to Washington

HARLEY J. STUCKY

The air was warm with the breath of spring when we arrived in the capital city, Washington, D. C., on Thursday morning, February 10, 1955. There were four in the party, Rev. H. B. Schmidt, Rev. Elbert Koontz, Rev. Henry Hege, and Harley J. Stucky, and we represented the Peace and Education Committees of the Western District. Our mission was to express our concern to congressmen concerning the growing militarization of America, and to register our special concern with reference to U.M.T.

Newspapers told us that on Tuesday, February 8, the House passed (H.R. 3005) to extend conscription for another four years by a vote of 394 to 4 and that the House Armed Services Committee was holding hearings on (H.R. 2967) a bill to strengthen the Reserve Forces and which also incorporates a modified U.M.T. program under which the men would take basic training for six months and then serve in the reserves for eight years. On the morning of our arrival, J. Harold Sherk of the MCC peace section, Edgar Metzler, associate secretary of the National Service Board for Religious Objectors, and I interviewed the counsel for the House Armed Services Committee and raised questions as to the treatment of Conscientious Objectors under the proposed bill. Apparently, the Committee had not thought of it up to that point, and they assured us that they would consider the matter and would incorporate provisions similar to those in the present draft law. The interview illustrated the necessity of being vigilant on our part and suggests that repeated expressions of our concern to those in high places is essential and is part of the cost which must be borne to maintain our heritage of freedom and the privilege of Christian service in accordance with the dictates of Christ as we see them.

Congressmen in Oklahoma, Kansas, and other states were very receptive to our visit, and seemed to be searching for intelligent answers to the problems of world peace. One Congressman, for example, told us that he had received a letter from a woman in which she said that while there was a time when Christians and Moslems, Protestants and Catholics fought each other, today they live side by side in peaceful co-existence. The Congressman's comment was: "You know, I never thought of that before." Another Congressman prizing the personal visit we paid him, said, that he valued a visit more than a whole ream of letters, because a man who is concerned enough to come to Washington is really concerned. Yet this same Congressman also valued the letters which he had received. Many congressmen were impressed by the mail which they had received and especially from the people in central Kansas. If we had people in each of the 48 states and in each congressional district, expressing their concern, it would make a significant impact. Even one letter is important. When we approached the office of one of the Oklahoma representatives, his secretary pulled out a single letter, written by the Western District Secretary, laid it on the Congressman's desk, and introduced the group saying: "These men have come to talk to you about this." Letters are important so keep on writing.

Pray for our congressmen, and our governmental leaders. They have a tremendous responsibility and most of them are men of integrity and they are working with might and main to serve the country and its people. Most of them are well informed, and many of them spoke enthusiastically of the Mennonites and our activities in relief, missions, Voluntary Service, PAX, and so on.

We left Washington, D. C., in a snow storm and made our way to the MCC headquarters at Akron, Pa. This was a rare treat, and as Albert Gaeddert, our guide, took us through one building of busy activity to another, and so on, I had the feeling that this snowbound little village spoke to humanity everywhere "in the name of Christ" and that it was a symbol of hope to the hungry and spiritually impoverished masses in Europe, Asia, and elsewhere. Rev. Hege left Friday night, I on Saturday night, and Rev. Schmidt and Rev. Koontz stayed on and attended a peace meeting in Chicago which brought together the various General Conference District Peace Committees.

While the train was racing down the track, covering the vast stretch between Akron and Newton, I pondered over our visit to Washington, and I couldn't help but feel that in spite of the friendly reception we had received, that there was an ominous threat to America and its great heritage. Perhaps, the change is not so apparent to us, but a future historian might record it as follows: In the years following World War II, America emerged as the leader of the free world, and this necessitated a great transformation in the concept of liberty among Americans. Where previously Washington had counseled against military alliances, the United States, now in utter disregard of the wisdom of this advice, was bound and committed to defend over forty nations. Whereas, Americans had prided themselves in the traditions of peace and freedom from militarism, they now wanted their children to grow up thinking that they owed two years or more, of military service to the government. Whereas previously they were proud of their individualistic spirit, now they became so concerned with the idea of conformity, that they were in danger of developing a mass mind. The virgin forests and rolling prairies and rugged frontiersmen, symbolized early America; the farmer, merchant, laborer, and manufacturer symbolized America from the days of the Civil War until well into the 20th century; the Pentagon, a national armory in every community, uniformed masses of men and atomic weapons, poised to defend our rights, symbolized America in the period following World War II. As I thought of the words of the historian, I pondered the price of world leadership, and questioned the American bargain.

Emotional Needs of the Aged

(This article is by J. D. Goering, counseling therapist at Brook Lane Farm, Hagerstown, Md., and was presented at a conference of superintendents of homes for the aged at Messiah Home, Harrisburg, Penn.)

The French statesman Tallyrand once made the statement: "We all want to live long, but no one wants to be old." This is a clever observation, but Browning's lines are a call to nobler efforts when he says: "Grow old along with me; The best is yet to be; The last of life for which the first is made." We may wish we could always feel with Browning, but may perhaps have to admit that Tallyrand's statement more often seems to fit our moods.

Aged folks have always needed to face some difficult problems. In modern times some new ones have been added, and some old ones accentuated. One reason for this change is that our way of living in the social, economic and psychological sense has changed rapidly in recent years. An increasing number of older people find themselves alone in their later years. We have seen a change from the three-generation family to the two-generation family. The large older dwellings have given way to the small modern cottages and three-room apartments where there is no room for the grandparents.

Our economic conditions are geared to youth. A premium is placed on speed and adaptability rather than on skill and experience which is the stock in trade of older people. Psychologically our society emphasizes the advantages and desirabilities of youthfulness, and by the same token holds up the disadvantages of old age.

While things are getting more difficult, at the same time we have more old people than ever before. More than half of our citizens now live past the age of 65. Life expectancy now is more than twenty years longer than in 1900, and yet today there are thirty per cent fewer men over 65 employed than in 1870. All this helps to account for the increasingly severe emotional stresses and problems facing the aged.

The basic needs of old people are in a real sense the same as the needs of all ages. The differences exist mainly in degree with occasional special features added.

The first basic need is for good physical health. Because of the various new drugs discovered in recent years many diseases formerly fatal are now well controlled or eliminated. The degenerative diseases such as cancer, heart disease and mental illness have now become the major medical problems. Much research and study will be required in order to conquer these illnesses. Meanwhile we should stress good diet, good medical examination and early treatment of illnesses detected. In addition we must combat pessimistic attitudes among aged people and their families or wherever they may be found. By no means should we write people off as "hopeless cases" just because they happen to fall into the upper age bracket. We should not be blind to the limitations of medical help for old people, but neither should we allow suffering to continue without having secured sound and competent medical diagnosis and advice. At Brook Lane Farm we have seen repeated instances where competent medical diagnosis and treatment has restored a person formerly thought to be beyond help.

A second basic need is economic security. The average income for all persons over 65 in 1948 was less than $1,000. It is not easy to enjoy the fruits of long life on an inadequate income. When earning ability is gone, savings low, and pensions inadequate, we can appreciate the anxiety caused when help needs to be sought from relatives or charitable institutions. Wise planning and saving in this area can be very important.

A third need is for purposeful activity. No single thing is so demoralizing and devastating as to feel that one is useless, depleted and unneeded. I know you have all seen active healthy folks suddenly become ailing and morose soon after retiring with the avowed purpose to "enjoy loafing." In this respect gainful employment is best for just as long as possible. In the January, 1953, issue of Reader's Digest is an article entitled "They Don't Have to Retire" showing the possibilities for increased usefulness to business of aged employees when the employer uses a little imagination. Retirement should never come about suddenly nor completely. When no longer able to work eight hours, it is well to cut down to seven or six with a few rest periods interspersed. It is not good to stop all activity. Later it may be necessary to cut down to four or even two hours a day. It may be necessary for some folks to change to a lighter type of work.

We may not be able to teach old dogs new tricks, but old people can learn new skills. Grandma Moses who creates those much-loved scenes appearing on Christmas greeting cards started painting after she was 70. A minister friend started to do watch repairing. It became a full time job after he could no longer preach regularly, and he has continued this activity very successfully well past his 80th birthday. A mother whose children had all left home learned to master a typewriter after 60. Employers should remember that older people may represent less speed and flexibility, but they also represent more endurance, accuracy and dependability than younger people.

When gainful employment is not necessary or possible, other activities should be substituted. Some communities have day centers for "Golden Age Clubs" in which all sorts of social, recreational, educational and religious activities are carried on for older people.

A fourth normal need or desire is for a home. Everyone needs a place that is familiar and secure.

It should serve as a center for family life and a place where one can entertain friends. We think naturally of homes for the aged such as this institution where many of these things can be adapted. We must keep in mind, however, that only four per cent of the people over 65 years of age live in homes for the aged and nursing homes. When well operated and managed, such institutions are among the best places for older people to spend their declining years. The major problem in connection with such homes is the long waiting lists.

A more common problem is that of an aged couple left stranded in the old home that is much too large. Often they are unwilling to move, and if they do so they encounter great difficulty in adjusting to new arrangements. One solution that has been tried quite extensively in Europe is that of constructing special housing for aged people in the form of cottages and apartments in convenient village layouts. Our various boards and committees charged with responsibilities for aged members of our church groups might do well to investigate this scheme and its possibilities for some of our own communities.

A fifth and final need we shall mention here is that of independence and self-respect. This need touches the other four and is in a sense the capsheaf of them all. Dr. Lillian Martin, who was a teacher at Leland Stanford University, was forced to retire at the age of 65, at a time when she felt as competent and adequate to the job as at any previous time. She refused to retire to inactivity and became interested in the psychology of old age through her association with a child guidance clinic. She studied the problems of the aged and wrote a book entitled "Salvaging Old Age." Dr. Martin believed that early decline and decreased mental competence were often unnecessary and too frequently brought about by dependency encouraged by children of the aged which soon resulted in decreasing self-assurance and increasing helplessness.

From this and many other studies it becomes clear that senility, illness and dependence—the things that are feared most in old age—can to a great extent be warded off if our aged folks are given an opportunity to remain useful and active. They need to retain the essence of their individual personalities and their full measure of dignity as long as possible. While doctors are helping us live longer, we must at the same time learn to make those extended years more bearable and productive.

While we have been talking to and about older people, we should not neglect to get such a message to younger people as well, for the time to prepare for old age is in youth. We are building day by day and year by year the kind of persons we are going to become. Perhaps the greatest gift older folks of today can give to the oncoming generations is to discover ways to teach youth how to grow old successfully. Here lies a great frontier for our churches to explore and conquer with the assurance that great blessings are in store for that generation which succeeds in doing so.

Flashes of Thought

"Take Your Stand"

Walter Gering

I was confused; utterly confused. Where did she stand in this matter? The longer I listened, the more confusing it became. It was not the question itself which caused the confusion. From the very start of the season it had been apparent that the question under consideration would be controversial. In fact, some schools actually refused to debate the proposed question. They felt that the recognition of Red China by our government was a settled matter. Surely in the light of world conditions no loyal American would think of proposing that our government should officially recognize Red China as a government entitled to membership in the family of nations. There were such who refused to take part in the interscholastic debates because of the question under consideration. But schools as a whole had been willing to adopt the question and to give it their study.

It was not the question itself which caused the confusion in my mind. It went far deeper than that. It was the presentation by this young college debater. It was an invitational tournament in which teams representing some forty different schools were participating. She was a member of one of these teams who had made the long trip to take part in the discussions. For three hours that afternoon she entered into the discussions. The next morning, beginning at 8 o'clock, she continued for another two hours. All in all, she had with zeal and earnestness debated the question under consideration with teams from five different schools.

The confusion began to appear in the second hour. For an hour this young student had earnestly contended that our government should not recognize the government of Red China. In the second debate it suddenly became apparent that she was now contending for recognition. Five times she was engaged with a different team on this controversial subject. And each time she had reversed her position and arguments. At the end of the five hours I was utterly confused. Where did this young student stand in relation to the question? I left the campus at a loss to know what her personal position really was.

I know—in debate that is permissible. Many debaters engage in discussions on both sides of the question. There are some who believe that the most effective debating is done by those who have studied both sides of the question and can debate either side.

But in spiritual matters this switching of sides is fatal. Like Peter, many a follower of Christ has gone into the night with bitter tears because of such wavering. In one hour he insisted that on the question of allegiance to Christ he was settled. If all others should deny Him, he would never. The next

Highlights of Missionary Observations VIII

ONE DAY IN THE CONGO

ANDREW R. SHELLY

"I have set before thee an open door . . ." Rev. 3:8.

Every day in the Congo has been wonderful. One could write much about each station and experience. But that is not possible in a short article. We arrived at Nyanga in time for supper Saturday, February 19. The meal was served out-of-doors on the lawn of the house in which Peter Bullers live. All the missionaries were present: Rev. and Mrs. Frank Enns, Selma Unruh, Ledema Short, Anna Quiring, Frieda Guengerich, Amanda Reimer, and Rev. and Mrs. Peter Buller.

After the delightful informal cafeteria style dinner, we had good fellowship under the stars. Two groups from the school came to sing for us. In the first group were ten. They sang "He Will Not Leave Me," and "I Know the Lord . . . ." The second group was composed of 53 younger boys. We will never forget their singing. They sang "He's a Wonderful Savior to Me." How wonderful: boys picked up from many villages in the Congo, now "just a step from heathendom" singing the beautiful gospel story. The setting was perfect for inspiration. They were etched against the sky. The harmony was wonderful. In speaking to the boys I expressed my joy in their coming to sing and challenged them to serve the Lord.

But, it is Sunday, February 20, I want to write about in particular. This was one of fifteen days of inspiration. The day began with breakfast with the Frank Enns family.

At eight o'clock we left with a group of missionaries for a village about twelve miles away. We arrived at Kipoko at 8:40. The first fifty minutes was consumed in observing the people coming and meeting quite a number. It was the day for a regional service.

We entered the church at 9:20. It was a grass roof affair with bamboo benches inside. It had a dirt floor. The pulpit was semicircular. The people started to enter. In about twenty minutes it was full. Possibly 500 were inside. All around the outside people were standing. As we looked out through the open sides we could see the natives curiously observing the proceedings. They certainly looked very, very far from the kingdom. But, I then remembered that the Christians who so obviously were happy in the Lord were like that just a few years before. What a change the gospel makes.

The C.I.M. does work in many villages. Evangelist-teachers serve. The territory is divided into districts served by overseers. These districts have regional meetings four times a year. Christians from the various villages come to the central place for the fellowship of communion.

The service was a threefold one lasting about three hours. The first service was a mixture of Christians and non-Christians. The singing was beautiful. Special musical numbers were presented by village groups.

Two couples brought children for dedication. This was impressive and spoke volumes for the future of the church in the Congo. As in America, so in the Congo the Christian family is very important. The pastor asked heart-searching questions of the young couples—a bit more direct than is our practice in America.

The pastor preached a powerful sermon. He urged people to come to the Lord. He assured them that the Lord was ready to forgive and receive them. It was my privilege to speak briefly to this congregation.

The second service was for all those who made professions of Christ. It was a testimony meeting. Missionaries told us the content of some of the speaking. Some confessed backsliding. Others expressed victory over sin and suffering. One lady, mother of six children expressed her joy in the Lord and her purpose to live for Him. This service closed with a season of prayer in which Africans participated freely.

The third service was communion composed of the church members. This was a never-to-be-forgotten occasion. It was our privilege to partake of communion with our Indian brothers and sisters in Christ. Now it was our joy to fellowship around the table of the Lord with African Christians. They sang the familiar hymn "At the Cross." Then came the high spiritual movements of eating and drinking in memory of our Savior. If anyone does not believe in missions I would challenge that person to fellowship in a service like that and not get a spiritual thrill in the thought that these dear Christian black people of Africa were brought to a saving knowledge of Christ through our mission program.

Some mission observers have said that the Belgian Congo provides the greatest open door for missions in the world today. Perhaps so. Even with very high standards of church membership there are 15,594 members. That is wonderful. In addition there are 12,462 who have made professions of Christ. Last year almost 2,000 joined the Church. In addition there were 10,422 who attended services regularly. Out of these the Lord is calling one after the other to accept the power of the cleansing blood.

In the afternoon we attended a young people's meeting. There were at least 300 present, most of whom were between 15 and 25 years of age. The program was interesting. There were several special musical items. A Bible verse contest was stimulating. In very rapid succession they repeated the verses with a girl finally winning. I presented a message to them which I had given to American and Canadian Youth. It was based on Hebrews 12:1 and 2.

Mennonites Find a New Delta

WALTER H. DYCK

In the middle of the 16th century Mennonites from Holland, in large numbers, settled in the lowlands between the Vistula and Nogat rivers, in what was then known as Poland. In the middle of the 20th century descendants of these Danzig Mennonites have undertaken to settle a delta in lower Uruguay. History is repeating itself, although on a smaller scale.

Forty-two Mennonite family heads met Feb. 15, 1955, in the MCC Home in Montevideo. This new tract of land, lying about sixty miles west of the city, only about three miles from the wide Rio de la Plata River (separating Uruguay from Argentina), had been viewed the day before. Only one family of those originally interested withdrew, leaving forty-one who were now selecting a name for the new co-operative about to be born.

What was its name to be? The word "Werder," used in the old country, and others were suggested. But since the area near the confluence of the Arroyo Pavón (river) and a smaller tributary resembles the tract of land in which their forefathers had lived, it seemed quite natural that they apply for articles of incorporation under the name "Cooperativa Delta."

The purpose of the new settlement is twofold: First, to provide small farms which young couples can call home, earn a modest living, and provide homes, schools, and a church in an evangelical environment. An alternative is that they scatter to distant ranches and into the cities. Secondly, such a new settlement will provide more space for the El Ombu colony. Nearly half of the "Delta" settlers come from El Ombu where a farm has had only thirty-five acres. Families moving out permit individuals to acquire up to seventy acres from neighbors or relatives. The other half of the settlers come from jobs in the cities and work as renters or laborers in dairies and on ranches. On the "Delta" each farmer begins with 75 acres besides some swamp land which needs to be reclaimed for productive purposes.

One admires these families (and there are three widows with children among them) for their enterprise. The cost of this 3,655 acre tract is 1,109,880 pesos. When one remembers that for those making their livelihood in rural Uruguay (working for wages or selling produce) an Uruguayan peso is as hard to earn as a dollar is for those living in North America, then this move represents a "million dollar deal." Each settler makes a down payment of 2,500 pesos. Help for making the balance of the down payment (twenty per cent of appraised valuation) was provided on a loan basis from the U.S.A. The greater part of the financing is covered by loans by the Colonization Institute and Mortgage Bank, to be amortized on a thirty year basis. These hearty workers plan to do it by a simple trust in God and frugal living. They say, "It can be done!"

The Board of Directors are: Walter Sprunck, president; Wilhelm Dück, vice-president; Wilhelm Regehr, secretary; and Hans Warkentin, treasurer. The other three men are Arthur Schweitzer, Helmut Wiebe, and G. W. Dück. Three family heads are named Sprunck; six, Dück; six, Regehr; and three, Jochem. Two ministers, Klaus Dück, the newly elected elder in Montevideo, and Otto Jochem, El Ombu, will be joining this new settlement.

Other family names represented are Bachmann, Bergmann, Dietrich, Driedger, Ensz, Froese, Harder, Kröker, Neumann, Penner, Prohl, Reimer, Router, Rüdiger, Schröder, von Dück, Wiebe, and Wölke.

On March 1 a team of seven of these settlers will begin to measure the "delta" into forty-one farms of equal value. Each settler has a number. A lot will be drawn to determine where each family will live. Families desiring to live near each other have been given consecutive numbers. By April 1 it is hoped that the trek to "Cooperativa Delta" will begin.

May we count on your continued interest and prayers?

Next time we hope to report on Youth Work, especially a Retreat at Colonia.

The day closed with a very wonderful time of fellowship with the missionaries in a service of devotion and prayer. I shared some thoughts on 1 Thessalonians and then we spent a time in a season of prayer. One of the greatest joys of this trip has been these blessed times of deep spiritual experience with our missionaries.

This was one day in the Congo! What a wonderful day! They were all glorious! The inspiration and challenge was almost more than the human heart can bear. To think that through the faithfulness of the Lord's children in America, these African Christians could be brought out of unspeakable darkness into the marvelous light of the gospel is beyond expression in words. Yet there are so many thousands more to be reached. How many more must die without Christ? How long will they have to wait? Certainly, we will want to answer the commission in dedication. I thought of a few lines I read some time ago:

"Lord, take my lips and speak through them;
Take my mind and think through it;
Take my heart and set it on fire."

hour his position was completely reversed with the cry "I know not the man."

In debating—yes, it is permissible to change sides. Upon the question of allegiance to Jesus Christ there is no such choice. We must take our position without wavering that all the world may know where we stand.

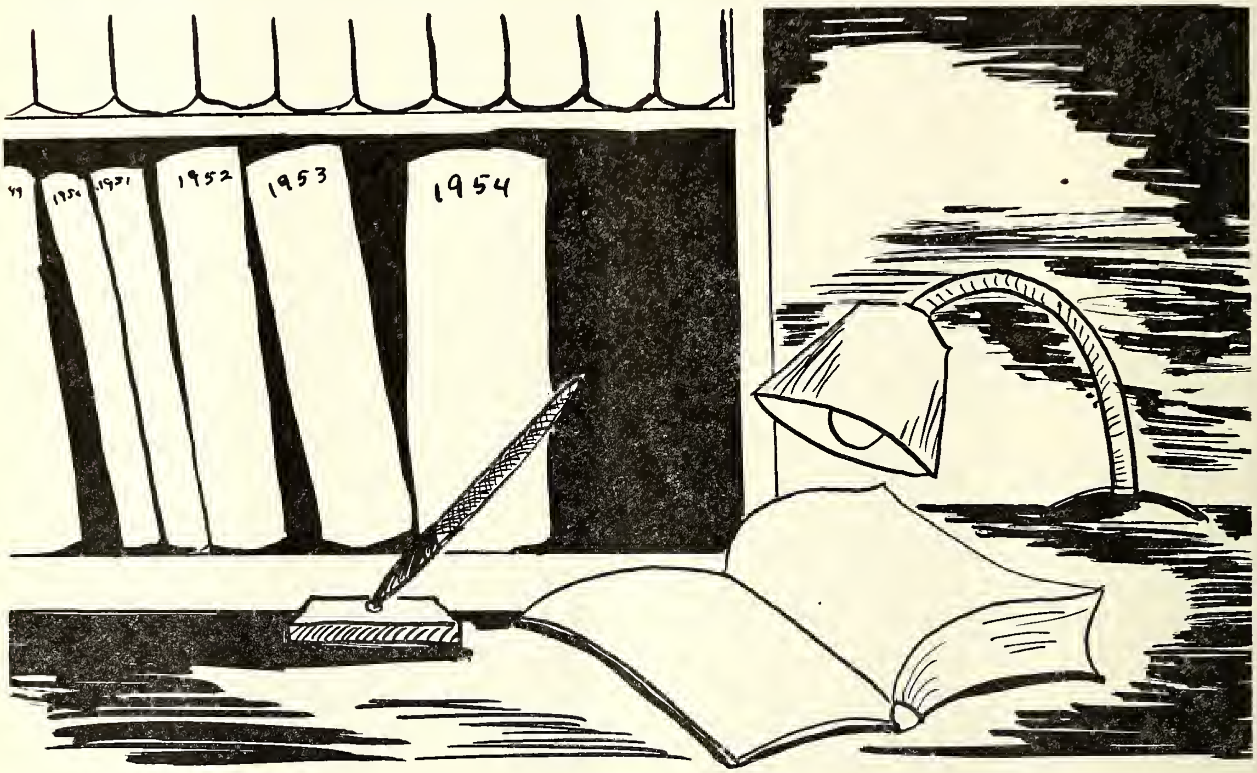
Mennonite Youth

Sponsored by the Young People's Union of the General Conference, Editor, Lois Duerksen, North Newton, Kansas



Volumes 1954 and 1955

The ink has dried. The pages have been assembled and bound. Another year's volume can be placed on the reference shelf alongside the growing line of previous years' volumes describing progress toward the goal of a "United Mennonite Youth in Christ."

As we hurriedly glance over the months of 1954, we see the Jakob Duerksen family cross the border from Winnipeg, Manitoba, to Bluffton, Ohio. Jakob will receive his A.B. degree this summer before returning to Paraguay as a teacher among the Mennonite colonies.

In Altona, Chicago, and Akron, we hear Frank Epp, Leola Schultz, and Gordon Dyck pecking away at their typewriters, preparing preliminary copies of area manuals which are to be published for use in the Youth Fellowship program.

We breathe a prayer of thanks and intercession while Bill Gering receives and accepts the call to a one-year period of full time service as a youth worker in our Conference.

Lois Duerksen, in her dormitory room at North Newton, can be seen going about her weekly duties of editing the Youth Section. Perhaps she is preparing a sketch, or perhaps writing letters requesting articles for print.

On November 30, a group of approximately twenty-five young men and women from the seven General Conference districts and four colleges, are assembled in the faculty room on the Bethel College campus, discussing and adopting a $7,400 YPU expense budget for 1955.

Gordon Dyck, at the beginning of his second three-year term as Christian Fellowship area chairman, is pondering, "How can I help meet the need of Christian fellowship among Mennonite young people, and how can I best present these concerns to Richard in Ontario, Janet in California, and Ted in Oklahoma?"

In British Columbia, a minister and his wife are spending long hours selecting Bible passages and arranging materials for the 1955 Prayer Calendar booklets.

Throughout the States and Canada, local youth groups comprised of many individuals are giving serious thought to their role in Christ's church and kingdom.

These have been glimpses into the year which is past—a year in which Christ has richly blessed the work of our Young People's Union, and a year in which He has called us to renewed dedication for a growing work.

At the outset of 1954, a budget of $5,050 was adopted. With your financial and prayer support, this budget was exceeded. You will be interested to know that your contributions made it possible to complete payment on the $300 which had been borrowed previously from other Conference boards, and to deposit a total of $300 with Menno Travel Service as a reserve for the Duerksens' return trip to South America.

All obligations for 1954 were met before the year closed but, in order to make all of the payments, it was necessary for the YPU General Fund to borrow temporarily from the Missionary Education Fund. On December 31, there was a balance of $957.64 in the Missionary Education Fund and a $428.80 deficit in the General Fund.

A statement of receipts and disbursements for the past year, the December financial report, and a statement showing how well each district met its share of the 1954 budget are found in this issue. We launched into the past year with faith that God would challenge the youth of our churches to support the YPU projects. He has done this and you have responded generously. Thank you to all who had a part in this work.

Having taken a backward view, let us now look at the next volume. In the light of the large $7,400 expense budget which has been adopted for 1955, the ten months remaining in this year will require conscientious stewardship of the gifts which we have received from God's storehouse. In the budget, which

Letter to the Editor

(Something About Mexico)

Apartado 404
Chihuahua, Chih.

Honorable Editor!

Since a number have asked and a number of others undoubtedly would like to know "Where are you? What is your work? How does it look over there in general? HOW do you like it, etc." I want to report.

I am at present in the Santa Clara vicinity. This is the location where at one time a large group of Sommerfelder Mennonites were settled. I have room and board in the village of Weidenfeld. It was also in this village that I served as teacher in a private home for several families until Christmas. Until Christmas the number of my pupils was very small. I also had the privilege to serve our group on Sunday in a spiritual way, in weakness.

In this year also I may be of help to this same group with a dayschool and also on Sundays. The school, where we also hold our Sunday meetings, is since the New Year outside the village of Weidenfeld. After wishing and praying our prayers were heard and we were permitted to use the buildings on a nearby ranch. We are thankful for this because we do not want to offend anyone here in the village. But to quit school we had no intention of doing. There had to be a way, and there was a way. Ways will be found in the future too.

Since the New Year, 14 children attend our school. Here I am alone in the work and offer all possible subjects in the German language. Only language is taught in English because that is demanded over here.

Aside from being under God I stand here under the auspices of the General Conference. Our work was started upon the invitation of the local group here. How the work is going to continue the future will tell us. I believe I can serve our people over here too. Remember me! Remember us!

As you probably know we have winter over here too. But the winter is more saving with its frost from what it is in Canada. The harvest (or the grain) has been threshed aside from the beans. Beans are usually put in a pile and threshed in spring. The harvest was pretty good, generally speaking. The weather and insects have decreased the harvest in some places. The price of oats is not as high as it was last year either. Generally speaking there ought to be enough feed this year.

At present the farmers are plowing. People hope that they can plant corn this year, which in the past few years could not be done on account of the drought. May the Lord bless our people again with a good harvest. May the spiritual harvest not be lacking either.

Full of joy and hope I am looking into the future. We have an opportunity. What will we do with it? If a call should come for supplies, believe me they will be well used. He is true; may we also be found that way.

Greetings,
John Friesen (Translation)

Something to Think About

Do you realize that we spend approximately one-third of our life in bed? How do we prepare for this third of our life? Most likely, and quite naturally, we don't think much about it. We figure that when we want to go to sleep there just isn't much to do but go to bed, close our eyes, and sleep. The psalmist made a very significant statement pertaining to this subject; "When I remember Thee upon my bed, I meditate on Thee in the night-watches." One would venture to say that when we are thinking about our God and Savior our sleep is much more peaceful and restful. We may not realize it, but our thought life is important to how well we rest in our sleep. Have you ever gone to bed after having been very much disturbed about something? Most likely your sleep was disturbed also, that is, if you slept at all. Our thought life is important to our sleeping whether we want to admit it or not. It may not always be easy but thinking pleasant thoughts will reward us more than we realize, even to the extent of how we sleep.

BETHEL COLLEGE

A Bethel debating team composed of Kay Ewert, Abilene; Carol Gering, Mt. Lake, Minn.; and Marian Kaufman, North Newton; won four out of five debates at the Lincoln, Neb., tournament, Feb. 25-26. They defeated St. Olaf of Minnesota; Morningside of Iowa; William Jewell College of Missouri; and the University of Missouri. They lost to Missouri Central College. On March 1 the Misses Ewert and Gering and their coach, W. T. Wilkoff, attended a dinner debate on the campus of McPherson College.

O. Goering, director of recreation, will participate in a workshop on recreation for Mennonite and affiliated colleges to be held at Goshen College, March 18 and 19. Also on the program of this workshop will be Bob Tully, former director of athletics at Bethel College and Roman Ginerich of the Goshen College staff.

The Mennonite Singers of Bethel College participated with five other Kansas college and university choirs at the Southwest Music Educators Conference in Hutchinson's Convention Hall, Sunday afternoon, March 13.

The Mennonite Singers under the direction of Dr. W. H. Hohmann sang three selections: "All Breathing Life Sing and Praise Ye the Lord," "O Sing Ye unto the Lord," and "The Lord's Prayer." The choirs combined to sing Fauré's "Requiem" under the direction of Dr. Foltz of the University of Nebraska as a final number. In the evening the Mennonite Singers presented a program in the First Mennonite Church of Hutchinson.

Harry Martens, business manager, attended a meeting of college and university business managers of Kansas and Missouri, at Kansas City, March 9. He participated in the discussion by presenting Bethel's program in budget planning.

Students attending Bethel College from Korea, Formosa, Mexico, Puerto Rico, Liberia, and Germany were guests of the Kansas region brotherhood dinner held at the Broadview Hotel, Thursday, March 3.

They were among 51 foreign students attending colleges in central Kansas, present at this dinner sponsored by the Kansas region of the National Conference of Catholics and Jews. Accompanying the Bethel students were Eldon Graber and John F. Schmidt of the college staff and Art Dick, senior student. The feature of the evening's program was an address by Herbert Philbrick, author of "I Led Three Lives," and former FBI undercover agent in the Communist party.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Rev. Peter Dyck, pastor of the Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, and former leader in relief work, is the speaker at the annual Christian Life Week being held on the campus, March 22 to 25. This series of meetings is held each spring to enrich the spiritual life of the students.

Bluffton College Summer Session is scheduled to be held from June 7 to August 27, it was announced recently by Dr. J. S. Schultz, director. Courses are now being arranged for four three-week terms: June 7-25, June 28 to July 16, July 19 to August 6, and August 9-27.

The following courses are tentatively scheduled: Teaching Skills, Teaching of Reading, Educational (child) Psychology, Principles and Management of Education, Science, Philosophy, and possibly Bible and American Government.

Courses run for a three-week period of time and are three semester hours credit. One course is taken at a time and completed in three weeks. A student may enroll for any of the terms. Due to the extreme shortage of teachers in elementary and high schools, every effort is made to accommodate those who seek teacher certification.

Morris Hochberg, violinist who is now assistant concert master of the Detroit Symphony, will appear as the fifth concert series number in Ramseyer Chapel on Tuesday, March 29, at 8 p.m. Accompanying him will be his wife Sylvia, with whom he has played duets since his high school days.

Jim Bishop, junior from Souderton, Pa., has been appeared in the January 4, issue of The Mennonite, there are two large items which should receive special mention. One is the completion of the Jakob Duerksen project. Since Bluffton College is giving Jakob a grant for full tuition, the YPU is responsible only for the family's living expenses and their return trip to Paraguay in late summer. This is, however, a sizable project.

The other large undertaking is the support of the youth worker who will begin serving on a full time basis in June. After many years, the dream of having a full time youth worker has become a reality. We are confident that as Bill travels from youth group to youth group and district to district, many will be made aware of their close kinship with all Mennonite young people. It is our prayer that you will uphold the youth worker project in your prayers and offerings and that, as Bill's contacts increase, we may all be inspired to new heights of Christian commitment and discipleship.

We are very grateful to the Board of Education and Publication for its encouragement in the YPU program. In view of our increased budget, the Board has agreed to raise its subsidy for the youth worker to $1,000 in 1955. This means that the amount to be met by our young people is decreased to $6,400. At present there are some urgent obligations to meet, and the General Fund is unable to take care of them. If your youth group is in a position to make a contribution now, won't you send it to your district treasurer? It is as the local groups support their district treasuries, that the districts are able to support work on the YPU level.

The goal this year is higher than ever before, but God is placing these responsibilities into our hands. Dare we fail Him?

chosen as this year's May Day Chairman by vote of the entire student body. At the same election Reldon Schirch, Chenoa, Ill., was chosen as chairman of the spring Clean-up Day. May Day will be held June 4, this year.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Bible Week with Rev. Robert W. Hartzler of Goshen, Ind., as the speaker has been a time of spiritual inspiration. Listeners felt the impact of quiet sincerity and spiritual insight as they listened to the messages.

The Peace Club is sponsoring the showing of "The King of Kings," a religious film. It is a reverent and beautiful presentation of the greatest story ever told. Christ's last days, the Crucifixion, and the Resurrection are depicted with sincerity and fidelity to biblical fact. The temples, garden of Gethsemane, the way of the Cross, and Calvary were reproduced with much effort at authenticity. The film was produced under the supervision of religious authorities.

President von Riesen attended the meeting of the Seminary Board in Chicago on March 2. On March 3 and 4 he attended the sessions of the Association of Junior Colleges also in session in Chicago.

The College Entertainment and Concert Series presented Maurice Wilk, a young violinist in a concert March 9. Concertmaster of the CBS Symphony, he has an unusually large and varied repertoire of classical and modern music. Gertrude Szaroleta, head of the piano department at Ohio University, accompanied him.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Rev. Vernon Sprunger was guest speaker at the Woodlawn Mennonite Church Sunday morning, March 6. A missionary challenge, "Other Sheep I Have" was the theme of Brother Sprunger's message. Rev. and Mrs. Sprunger, missionaries of the Belgian Congo field in Africa, are now on furlough.

In preparation for the spring visitation program, members of the Woodlawn congregation met for a discussion on Sunday afternoon. Don. E. Smucker, who has been in charge of a number of lay evangelism programs in local churches throughout the city, shared his insights and techniques with the group. Floyd G. Bartel, church worker, was in charge of the discussion period.

J. N. Smucker, pastor of the church, was on a speaking mission in Winnipeg, Manitoba, the week of March 6-9. He was guest speaker at the Bethel Mission Church of Winnipeg.

The Wednesday morning chapel service at Bethany Biblical Seminary was led by David Habeggar. Rev. Habeggar is now serving as MCC pastor giving spiritual aid to the 1-W's of the north central states. In his talk, Brother Habeggar spoke on the problems and values of the 1-W program to the men engaged in it and to their local churches.

Norma Jost led the Lenten prayer fellowship on Wednesday evening, March 9. Under Miss Jost's guidance the group focused their attention on Christ our Sin-bearer.

MCC News Notes

PLANNING UNDERWAY FOR 1955-56 MEAT CANNING SEASON

Churches and communities in the Midwest interested in preparing meat for relief during the 1955-56 season with the use of the MCC portable canner are urged to make their intentions known by April 15.

Tentative plans call for the portable canner to be available to the states west of the Mississippi including Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, Nebraska, South Dakota, North Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, and Missouri. An indication of interest from churches in these states is necessary to make more definite plans for the 1955-56 material aid season.

Churches in Kansas may direct their requests to the MCC office, 213 North Pine Street, in Newton. Churches in the other states should register their interest with the Relief Section, MCC, Akron, Penn. When writing, churches should merely indicate their interest in canning and the number of days they would need the portable canner in their community.

One of the reasons for establishing a canning schedule for 1955-56 at this time is to co-ordinate it with the anticipated MCC-CROP drive in Kansas. Planning for this drive will begin around May 1.

Meat is a particularly valuable relief commodity since it provides the nourishment and resistance to disease which many persons overseas need. Not many people in the world are starving but thousands are suffering from lack of the right kind of food such as meat. Fields where MCC anticipates using canned meat such as beef, pork, lard, and poultry include Jordan, Korea, Indochina, and Austria. Besides satisfying physical need, the distribution of meat overseas helps to meet a spiritual need.

JOHN B. HORST SAILS FOR JORDAN

John B. Horst, a member of the Calvary Mennonite Church, Los Angeles, sailed from New York on March 8, for a two-year term of relief service in Jordan. Plans are for him to be assigned to the Near East Christian Council where his work would be concerned with the distribution of U.S. government surplus food commodities. The departure of another worker is a reminder to the supporting churches to pray for their representatives, that they may adjust to living conditions in foreign lands, that their work may be purposeful and effective and that many needy may sense the touch of Christ.

PAX MEN BEGIN NEW PROJECT IN VIENNA, AUSTRIA

A new PAX unit has been organized in Austria to aid in the reconstruction of a large Evangelische Church school in the center of Vienna which was burned out during the war.

This project is a co-operative venture between MCC and the Brethren Service Commission. MCC has made six PAX men available and BSC is providing a similar number.

There is a desperate need for this Christian day school which accommodated 600 children before the war. The building was given to the Evangelische Church by the rulers of Austria when freedom of religion was established.

During the war it was appropriated by the armed forces as a combination supply depot and armory, and at the end of the war set afire to keep the supplies from falling into the hands of the Allies. The building was completely gutted but the basic skeletal structure is sound.

Four men of our church recently traveled to Oraibi, Arizona, and helped with the construction of a home for our missionaries there. The mission film, "The Call of the Cheyenne," was shown at a Sunday evening service. This accurate report of our home mission work in Montana was very interesting and worth while. Frank Wiens, returned MCC worker, brought us an economic report on Paraguay. The month of February is being used by our Bethel College Fellowship Committee to receive gifts and promote interest for our college. Our church helped in the emergency relief to our Westside migrants during unfavorable winter weather conditions when these people could not find work. Dan Schellenberg brought us the messages on Jan. 16 when our pastor participated in the dedication of the church in Downey. The Sunday school cradle roll department sponsors "Parents' Programs" periodically and Dr. Raymond Cramer, psychologist of Fresno, has been the speaker. REPORT ON TRIP TO WASHINGTON

Yes, I questioned the American bargain! Will the United States ever be free from conscription again, or will militarism continue to grow, until all of us are shackled? Then I heard a voice which said: "Seeing they see not and hearing they hear not." Militarism abroad is wicked, but here it is rationalized as essential and often praised as something wonderful. Then I visualized the countless millions, Congregationalists, Methodists, Lutherans, Roman Catholics, and others who fled from tyranny abroad to come to America in search of liberty and opportunity. Often the thing that they fled from was conscription and I wondered whether their descendants had the same passion for liberty and truth? And then I remembered that within the last decade proposed U.M.T. laws had been defeated when the public expressed its concern, and I prayed that this might happen again and again. If all of us are vigilant and concerned we can defeat U.M.T.

If you are wondering what you can do, or if you want the Washington story spelled out in greater detail, contact one of the members, and arrange for a presentation of the peace message in your church.

WEEK OF WITNESS

Our Lord had a Week of Witness—A Passion Week!
In Jerusalem! Have we ever had a Passion Week?
In Jerusalem? (Acts 1:8)

"You shall receive power!"
"Go therefore and make disciples!"

OUR BIBLE—HOW IT CAME TO US, 16 mm. sound, black and white, 84 minutes, American Bible Society, 450 Park Avenue, New York 22, N. Y., rental $22.50 for one continuous showing, $8.00, part I; $8.00, part II; $9.00, part III, for three successive showings.

This film tells the story of the formation of the Bible, how it spread across Europe, and how the English Bible came to us in the form in which we have it today. The entire picture is well done and helps to make the story of how we got our Bible meaningful and thereby should help us to appreciate our Bibles more. The film is suitable for age groups from the fifth grade on up. The picture is a bit long but most people will not mind this, and it will hold their interest.

THE BIBLE THROUGH THE CENTURIES, filmstrip, color, sale price, $5.00, available from Board of Education-Publication, Evangelical and Reformed Church, 1505 Race Street, Philadelphia, Penna.

This filmstrip covers the background of the Old and New Testaments and shows how the cannon came into being. It also shows how the Bible was translated into the various languages bringing the story down to the translation of the New Revised Standard Version. Accompanying this filmstrip is a script both for older people and for children. The color is good in this filmstrip and the items included are well chosen. This filmstrip would be useful for a youth group, Sunday school class, or any other group in the church which wants a good brief background of the material covered. The script for adults is about thirty minutes in length.

WHERE GENERAL CONFERENCE 1-W'S SERVE

According to March 1 figures the General Conference now has 310 1-W's serving in 21 states and 8 foreign countries. This is about one-seventh of the total number of Mennonites which is 2137. It is of special interest to note that 1 out of every 10 General Conference men are in foreign service and 1 out of every 12 in the states are in Voluntary Service. Approximately half of our 1-W's in the U.S. are located in two states.

The following is a list of states where our men are located.

I BELIEVE IN THE CHURCH AND THE COMMUNION OF SAINTS

The Apostles' Creed affirms a belief in "the holy catholic Church." The term catholic, as here used means universal or all-inclusive. The Church is not limited by denomination, race, or nation. Christ died for all, and His Body, the Church, is composed of all people who truly believe in the Lord Jesus and dedicate their lives to Him. It is a common union of believers, a communion of saints.

The Church has had a glorious history. It has always pointed men to God. It has kept Christ alive in the hearts of men. It has preserved the Holy Scriptures. It has shown men how to live spiritually, and has linked them with God.

Yet its past glory is not a faded glory. The Church faces a new day, full of crises and opportunities. It must inspire a great faith, and cause men to believe fully in God, in Christ, and in the Holy Spirit. It must be a worshiping Church where strength and love from God can flow into the hearts of men.

It must be an evangelistic Church that seeks to make its great message known to all men and win souls for Christ. This is kept uppermost as it plans and works with children, with the community, and in the field of missions. It must seek more than its own interests or it becomes selfish and decadent.

It must continue to be a teaching Church, seeking in whatever ways possible to bring the knowledge of God before the people. Through schools, through literature, and home instruction, the Church must ever keep up its great task of teaching the "all things" as commanded by Jesus.

We believe in such a fellowship of believers, such a communion of saints. We must believe in it enough to do what we can to keep abreast of the times and demands. Our fellowships must be kept holy and fully dedicated to God. Devisive and selfish ambitions must be avoided. The fellowship must be kept pure and strong and on-going, ahead of the needs of the day.

THE WEEK OF WITNESS

Holy Week has been designated by our Conference as a special Week of Witness. The Evangelism Committee under the Board of Missions is strongly encouraging churches to make this week a time of special witnessing to the community. Both churches and individuals should be really concerned about "shining for Christ."

In a pamphlet put out by the Evangelism Committee, some practical suggestions are offered for effective witnessing. The Committee emphasizes personal preparation, creating an atmosphere, utilizing as many members as possible, definite planning, special services, proper methods of publicity, special gospel programs, practical Christian service, and a real enthusiasm for the work of the Lord. The pastor is the key man to lead his people in this worthy endeavor.

One of the richest spiritual experiences that can come to church members is the active participation in witnessing for Christ to the people of the community. Many have hesitated, feeling that they were not able to bring an effective witness. Many have felt unworthy, unqualified, or out of place in such a visitation program. But having ventured forth on such an experience they have found a new joy in talking to their neighbors about Christ and the spiritual life. Much of the feared hesitation was but imagined. There is usually very little opposition for in most people there is a real hunger for Christ and for real fellowship.

May we unitedly pray for God's Spirit to lay hold anew of us and on those to whom we may witness. May we make Holy Week "holy" by setting aside time for sharing Christ with others. The vessel may not be very important, but it can bear something of God's love and forgiveness for all the world.

UNHAPPY WORSHIPERS

The anonymous letter in this issue, giving an outsider's impressions of a church service, may well be given thoughtful consideration. The writer seemed impressed with the somber and unhappy expressions on the faces of the supposed worshipers. The people seemed cold and formal until the service ended, when all became more friendly and acted like humans.

Perhaps because we have lost much of the original joy of worshiping we are making unattractive and uninviting the whole worship experience. True, there is a sense of reverence and awe in the attitude of worship, but this does not mean that we must look sad and unhappy. There can be awe in a cheerful countenance and reverence in a sunny expression. Is the reason for the unhappy appearance of the worshipers in so many churches due to the fact that they really are not enjoying the worship experience, but simply endure the hour as best they can? If this is the case, there is something seriously wrong somewhere.

The gospel is a joyous message bringing the best possible news to us sinners. If the heart overflows with this joy the countenance cannot help but reflect this radiance. Joyous Christians are a far better inducement to Christian living than the overly sober-faced individuals who appear to be engaged in an unhappy business of doing an unpleasant task.

The prophet Isaiah in his day said, "Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation," (Isa. 12:3). Jesus, on the last evening before the crucifixion, said to His disciples, "These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full," (John 15:11). Paul also says: "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing," (Rom. 15:3).

The Mission of the Mennonites

1. The first contribution which Mennonites should be making to Christendom is in their teachings. Or perhaps we should refer to it as the Mennonite interpretation of Christianity. It must always be remembered that "Mennonitism" is not something added to the gospel, much less is it to take the place of the gospel. It is rather a rediscovery of the gospel, made at a time in history when the church had departed from and compromised with the teachings of the New Testament. This was put forward in the 16th century as an interpretation of what Christianity really means. It is clear that there are and have been many and various interpretations of Christianity. Certainly, if we are Mennonites, it is to be expected that we follow the teachings of our own tradition. But more than that, I have come to believe that the ideas expressed in the earliest writings of the Anabaptist leaders in Switzerland, Germany, and Holland are very much needed in our day. There are, then, in the realm of creative ideas, certain contributions we should be making as members of the body of Christ.

But what does the average person know about the basic ideas of the teachings of Mennonitism? Here is a typical conversation which took place on the train when Dorothy Thompson was on her way to Newton, Kansas, to address a meeting at Bethel College. She mentioned to her traveling companions that she was going to a Mennonite College and that she was very much interested, for she knew very little about them. "Queer people," remarked one companion. "All the men wear beards and the women some sort of gray clothes, don't they?" Then a man across the aisle joined in, "Aren't those the folks who wear no clothes at all?" Fortunately, Miss Thompson helped us out by saying that those were the Dukhobors! Why does the average person know so little about what Mennonites actually believe? Indeed, why does the average Mennonite know so little about that distinctive interpretation of Christianity which became a vital movement, that spread like a fire throughout Switzerland, the low countries, and Holland? It is not that the ideas were not sound, but that too few of the original writings—tracts, letters, and sermons—are available in the English language.

Some years ago a European Jewish scholar was reading through some of the literature of the Anabaptists and became so deeply moved by the teachings of these Anabaptists that he came to this country to learn more about Mennonites. For a time he was on the faculty of Goshen College. I have read a number of the articles of Robert Friedman, and he writes with great enthusiasm and insight. This, I believe, is but a foretaste of the impact that this way of thinking can have when we effectively and convincingly present it to the world. We ought to know and proclaim that which has come to us out of the past.

2. The second contribution which Mennonites should be making to Christendom is in the quality of their lives. This interpretation of Christianity holds that salvation comes by grace through faith, and must be unto good works. It must not stop with the inner emotional experience of being saved; it must issue always in an "evidenced life." The sermon on the mount played a much more important role than it does in so much of the so-called evangelical Christianity of our day.

So it must be that the final test of any interpretation of Christianity must be in the kind of lives that it produces. Their record in the 16th century was certainly enviable. Zwingli, himself a persecutor of the Anabaptists, said concerning them, "If you investigate their life and conduct, it seems at first contact irreproachable, pious, unassuming, attractive, yea above this world. Even those who are inclined to be critical will say that their lives are excellent." Such was their record. And what about our record today? Can it be said of us that our lives are above reproach, unassuming, attractive, and above this world? It is certainly not enough to have a heritage, however noble it may be, unless we invest that heritage in life. It is not enough to be the channels of creative ideas unless those ideas bear living fruit in us. Unless to our theory of Christianity we supply examples of Christianity, our contributions to the world will not ring true.

Is not this, then, part of our mission: to turn out upon this needy world Christians who are regenerated, of course, but who make a special practice of following Jesus implicitly and explicitly in daily living? We must reject those spurious forms of Christianity which we sometimes get over the radio and through printed pamphlets, which make no emphasis on Christ-like living, which cast aside the sermon on the mount or the moral life. And we must insist that all of life, both individual and social, must be brought under the Lordship of Christ. Can we produce people like that, who will take upon themselves the work of the world, and wherever they may go, bear the stamp of that kind of Christianity?

3. The third contribution which Mennonites should be making in the world is in their communities. From the beginning, Mennonites not only had congregations where they have worshiped together, but they formed themselves into communities where they lived together. For the church was concerned with the entire life of the membership: spiritual, intellectual, social, and economic. At the heart of the community's life must be the church, setting the tone, giving the guidance, and inspiring its noblest aspirations. It has been my observation, and I think it has generally been proven to be true, that Mennonites have succeeded best where they have had opportunity, not only to worship together, but also to live and work together. It does seem more difficult

A PAX Chorus in Germany

ROBERT SCHRAG

A 24-member chorus of American PAX men in Backnang and Enkenbach, Germany, has been organized for the purpose of extending their peace testimony and establishing greater fellowship with European Mennonites.

The chorus, organized by Mahlon Amstutz of Orrville, Ohio, who has since returned to the United States, has made numerous significant contacts in German Mennonite circles during the past few months. The combined chorus has been augmented in its ministry by unit quartets and choruses from Backnang and Enkenbach.

At the annual conference of South German Mennonites held in Ludwigshafen, the chorus under the direction of John Mark Yoder of West Liberty, Ohio, sang two selections—"Heilig, Heilig, Heilig" ("Holy, Holy, Holy") and "O Master, Let Me Walk with Thee." Expressions of appreciation for the singing of the PAX men by conference chairman Abraham Braun, both during the meeting and in a letter, showed how cordially the group was received. "It was evident the singing came from the heart and inner life," Pastor Braun wrote. He encouraged the chorus to "sing on courageously."

A youth planning conference at Thomashof, sponsored by the South German youth organization, provided an opportunity for the PAX chorus to present choral music and fellowship with Mennonite young people. The chorus made its first appearance at the annual European MCC worker's conference last September when it sang five hymns.

In an evangelistic meeting conducted by Henry Warkentin, an American Mennonite, the Backnang quartet sang and John Eyer of Elizabethtown, Penn., gave a trumpet solo and personal testimony.

In view of the genial way German Mennonite groups have accepted the PAX chorus, plans for an Easter tour are being considered. The itinerary would include communities PAX has previously served — Espelkamp and Neuwied — and Mennonite churches in the Wedel area.

Wedel, because of its extreme distance from other units, has been unable to participate in the combined chorus. However, at the dedication of PAX-built houses there, songs presented by the unit members were a worth-while contribution to the occasion. Continuing interest on the part of Wedel PAX men in choral work is shown by their singing musical selections at refugee Christmas programs.

Members of the combined chorus are:
First tenor—Robert Weaver, Alvin Zehr, Vernice Bixler, Charles Miller, Lester Yoder. Second tenor—John Eyer, Truman Hertzler, Eldon Wingert, Richard Graber, Charles Yoder, Loyal Klassen. First bass—Carl Conrad, Leonard Kennel, Harold Kroeker, Luke Martin, Doyle Basinger, Donald Schierling. Second bass—Loren Deckert, Robert Stauffer, Cal Graber, LeRoy Hiebert, LeMar Stauffer, Nevin Beachy, Wilbur Bender.

The Bible in the Bull-fighting Arena

WALTER H. DYCK

"A man had three sons; two were wise, and the third was a football player."

Every country has its favorite national sports. In Uruguay it is a special type of football. Daily one can see men and boys, in off hours, on playing fields, on vacant lots, and even on streets, vying with each other in a sport which has brought Uruguay Olympic fame.

About fifty years ago it wasn't football. Then it was bull fighting. Displayed today in the old city of Colonia is the skull of a bull (such animals were usually imported from Spain because they were better fighters) which, we are told, gored seven men to death before the fray was finally ended by the eighth.

It was early in this century that a wealthy Argentinean crossed the Rio de la Plata to build a huge open arena which was to draw bull fighting spectators from both countries. A few years later this torture of men and animals was also forbidden by law in Uruguay. This vast circular framework of brick, steel, and concrete, which may have held 5,000 people at one time, now stands abandoned.

Between February 20 and 27, 1955, about forty of the Mennonite youth in Uruguay met for their third annual retreat near Colonia, and used shaded spots in this delapidated arena for Bible studies and discussions. The resounding echo encouraged spirited singing. The theme, "The Christian's Equipment," was based on Col. 3:12-14.

Mennonite youth in Uruguay, like in other lands, must equip itself with spiritual weapons to fight, not for human applause but in yieldedness to Him, our Lord, who was merciful, kind, humble, meek, longsuffering, and loving. These six words served as themes for the 8:30 hour each morning between the two Sundays. There were also studies based on six parables of Christ. There were reports on youth activities in Uruguay, Germany, and the United States.

There were sessions devoted to thinking through the place of singing, films, dramatics, socials, and sports. The parable at the head of this article was contributed by a retreater who was learning not to idolize his pastimes.

For a few hours in the afternoons, while the "younger set" was enjoying football and volleyball, a dozen potential youth leaders discussed methods of Bible study, questions on how to conduct youth meetings, how to prepare and present themes, how to speak extemporaneously, and how to lead a discussion. A question box raised numerous questions concerning harmful and helpful things in the path of Christian youth.

It was a grand week. Retreaters carried their own wood, did their own cooking, and got to (sometimes had to) eat their own cooking. Meals were frugal; hikes were exhilarating. The swim periods at the nearby beach were refreshing. The weather was ideal. God had been good to us, and we were thankful. We had been blessed in a new way. With the apostles, we are willing to say, "We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard," (Acts 4:20).

Mixed Standards

Elaine Sommers Rich

Recently a student of mine gave the following illustration in a speech, which illustrates well the confusion regarding killing in our society.

Three men were working on the same job. They got acquainted and exchanged experiences. One of them had been awarded a medal by the government for the number of enemy soldiers he had killed in war. The second had been put into jail by the government for killing a man. And the third was a conscientious objector who had been put into jail by the government for refusing to kill.

On December 18, 1953, Carl Hall and Bonnie Heady were executed in the gas chamber of the Missouri State Penitentiary for the kidnaping and murder of Bobby Greenlease. Society operates on the "eye-for-an-eye and tooth-for-a-tooth" level. Hall and Heady were guilty of a terrible and wicked act. To punish them for this, society killed them. This also is a terrible act because it is taking life. But the federal law demands this as just punishment. So society stoops to the level of killing to deal with the killer.

Jesus taught in the Sermon on the Mount a much higher level of action, the level of redemptive love to enemies and haters. Without a doubt Hall and Heady demonstrated their unfitness to live freely in a community. But would not the Christian course of action be, although not allowing them freedom because society must be protected, to exert every possible effort to bring them to Christ and to lovingly rehabilitate them?

The Christian believes capital punishment is wrong for the same reason he believes war is wrong. And it's up to him to witness to Christ's rather than society's standard. —Y. C. C.

Gleanings from India

In the shop the work goes on without letup. Ben spends half-time there and the rest of the day goes for language study. We have both successfully passed the first year's examination. We will be taking the second year's exam in March. We covet your prayers for the language. It is coming easier and we are finding more and more opportunity to use it. We have had several opportunities to speak at the hospital to patients and then we are both engaged in Sunday school duties, so you see we are usually kept on our toes with the language.

for Mennonites to form a fellowship of worship on Sunday where people are not neighbors during the week, where they have few business contacts between Sundays, and where young people do not go to school together.

Of course, we should not strive, necessarily, to build closed communities. But we should remember that the life of the church and the community are inescapably woven together. We should make it possible for our young people to secure farms, or to find employment as much as possible within the community. And, above all, we should see to it that the life of the community reflects the moral and spiritual ideals of the church or churches, remembering that all of life comes under the Lordship of Christ. The total life of the church membership should be lived under conditions and in an environment which is conducive to Christian growth and development.

People are beginning to recognize that, more than they ever realized, the life of the nation must reach back into its rural communities. The cities do not sustain themselves either in population or in leadership or in moral and spiritual fibre, without reaching out into the rural areas for new life. This was shown statistically some years ago by agricultural economist, O. E. Baker. He became very much interested in Mennonite rural communites for this reason. Surely then, this lights up the point we are making, that one of the certain contributions we can make to the world today is in good, strong, spiritually sensitive, and morally awake rural communities. Can our communities fulfill such a mission?

4. Finally, Mennonites should be making a contribution to the world in terms of outreach. Under no conditions should we become ingrown, self-satisfied, either as communities, churches, or as individuals. We have an obligation to the society in which we live. We must go out into all the world, as the great commission says. We must seek in ways open to us, to grapple with the world's great problems. Our religion is not for mutual enjoyment, but for service. Our lives must be fully dedicated to human welfare and the deepening of the gospel in human relations. This must proceed along at least three fronts: education, missions, and service.

I am sure that Mennonites would never have survived these 400 years if they had not become active in education. It has now been said often enough, that the earliest leaders in the 16th century were endowed with the very finest education of the day. It should now be clear to almost everyone that we would soon be without leadership in our communities and churches and mission fields, if we would not be active in education. It is a definite part of the mission of the Mennonite Church in our day to supply leaders not only for ourselves, but also for others. But another form of outreach for us is through the area of world missions. Small in numbers though we are, it is amazing how far our interests reach through our program of world missions. It is the life

Merciful Snow

Walter Gering

One quick, frantic scurry through the air and then it was all over; there I was sprawled out on the freshly fallen snow. I knew that it was there. For days I had stepped over it on my way in and out of the house. I knew that it was a dangerous spot for a number of people in the community had fallen on spots just like that. But it is strange how one becomes accustomed to the presence of danger and forgets about it. That slick, icy spot on the sidewalk near the front steps was soon unnoticed.

So it was this morning as I hurried out to go about the activities of the day. Sometime during the night it had begun to snow. Several inches of fresh snow had already fallen and more was to come. It was a beautiful sight to see the whole world garbed in pure white. It was an inspiration to the soul. Deep in contemplation of this marvelous sight I started for town. Then it happened. There was one frantic reach into the thin air for support and I was down.

Of course I looked! The first thing that all of us do when stretched out upon the ground is to see whether anyone is watching. Somehow there seems to be some comfort in the thought that no one saw the fall. Common and unavoidable as such falls usually are, yet we feel ashamed to have others see us in such a ridiculous position on the ground. So it was that I hastily looked about. No—the coast was clear, no one had seen.

But it was later that the reality of it all flashed upon me. As I rose to my feet there could be seen clearly the telltale marks of my fall. There was the mark of one long skid and the evidence of a fallen body. Exposed to view was the slick ice underneath. Anyone passing by would be able to tell at a glance what had happened.

Several hours later returning home for dinner, I made a discovery. It was gone! Every trace of the fall was erased. Softly, with little ado, the snow had continued to fall. Gradually the telltale marks were filled in and disappeared. Once again the scene was one of beauty, unmarred by human touch.

I was humbled at the miracle of God's grace. How often in life's travels we become the victims of some slippery spot. In our preoccupation with other thoughts—in our failure to recognize the dangers underneath—we slip and fall. We should have known better; we should have been more careful. But there we are, sprawled out upon the ground. Hurriedly we rise to our feet and go on. And as we humbly pray for mercy, God in His compassion mercifully sends the soft white snows of forgiveness to cover the spot.

"Come now and let us reason together, saith the Lord though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow," Isaiah 1:18.

To Them That Love God

ORLANDO WALTNER*

"Unquestionably the Church is facing a time of difficulty. But," continued the lay-worker as he spoke to me in my office, "even if difficult times should develop into persecution, we will continue to live as disciples of Christ and we will witness for Him even though we should be put into prison." Social boycott, threats, whipping posts, stocks, arenas, jails, fire, and sword have always made this a dangerous world for the devoted disciple of Jesus. All who have become servants of the Master cherish no illusions of the peaceful growth of the church but look forward to tensions and to even increasing tribulation and persecutions. For some time the church in India has been aware of a growing opposition but gradually it is becoming aware that this is the normal life of the dynamic and witnessing church. The words of the lay-worker were not idle speculation but the expression of a loyalty that anticipates the cross.

Some definite trends in the present situation of increasing tension can be discerned. In the first place, there is a re-examination of the meaning of being a Christian. It is becoming necessary for believers to be ready to give an answer to every man for the reason of the hope that is within. In study groups the implications of Christ's claims upon the individual, the church, the community, the nation, and the world are being reviewed. There is a growing recognition that being a Christian involves not just some future deliverance from eternal death, but it is the fulfillment of a life which has its beginning now and seeks areas in which it can express its concern for such who are living outside the abundant life as indicated and made possible by Jesus Christ. And so believers trying to formulate intelligent answers to give to those who inquire about the reason and nature of the Christian faith. In this also have come new experiences of the help of the Holy Spirit in giving the right things to say in moments of defense before police and authorities.

Further there is a progress movement toward revival. In the providence of God, the present situation can be the means through which our prayers for a renewed and energized church may be answered. Revival in the church of India has been the burden of many prayers. More and more people are pledging prayer and labors for revival. This is perhaps a natural movement at the present. Periods of stress and testing have generally seen God's people recognize their inconstant and inconsistent discipleship. They come to admit that their first concern is not the seeking of His Kingdom and that primary objectives seem to be the attainment of personal ambitions and desires. There are those who believe that the present time of stress is a judgment sent by God. And when the church feels that it is under the judgment of God it is not far from seeing itself as a sinning fellowship that is in need of the cleansing and purifying power of the Holy Spirit.

Again, there is a shift in commitment to the ultimate resources for a man's life. "God is our Refuge and Strength, a present Help in time of trouble." It is in adversity that man best understands his need of divine guidance and strength. Incomparable courage and unshaken calmness are possible only where Christian Faith is in control. And Christian Faith is nurtured in Bible study, in prayer, in worship and in honoring the Christian fellowship. Those in trouble rejoice in such attitudes and activities which make real God Himself. For in Him are the springs of life.

Assuredly we dare not blame the times. We dare not rebel against the tension that is directed against the believers. We trust that we can learn with humility that to them that love God, He can sanctify every experience and He can make all things that happen fit into a pattern for good.

*Missionary to India

From Friesland, Paraguay

During our 24 day stay in the Chaco, we had opportunity to visit all three colonies. Rev. Isaak from Fernheim and Rev. Rempel from Neuland planned and arranged itineraries for us in the colonies. We had the opportunity to move from village to village, get in contact with the people, eat and sleep in their houses, talk with them and sort of feel the pulse of life. Where the opportunity presented itself we had evening services in the villages. In Neuland we attended youth Sunday. It was held in the basement of the church which is being built. Of special interest to me was the question period. Here the questions were discussed which the young people had previously submitted. The question of nonresistance was an earnest one, starting with the question: Will I be accepted into the Mennonite church if I do not believe in the principle of nonresistance? In Fernheim we had the privilege of attending mission Sunday. Here in the Chaco we find the churches living right on the mission field. Each church member, it seems, is a missionary to the Indian, and this fact was stressed by Rev. Isaak in his sermon. If the life of the church member does not coincide with the teaching of the missionary, the Indian notices it and in childlike fashion draws attention to it. The Indian becomes a second conscience to the church member. Attempts have also been made to contact the wild Moro Indians, but as yet no contacts have been made.

An Outsider Looks at the Church

ANONYMOUS

(One of our young ministers has been trying to persuade a retired police officer, who has never gone to church, to attend church somewhere. He finally did attend, and in the following letter states rather graphically what the church looks like to an outsider. Ed.)

I went alone to our local church, hoping to meet some smart people in whose intellectual aura I might bask briefly. The only person who engaged me in conversation was an almost-forgotten acquaintance noted far and wide for his stupidity.

The minister spoke about "What the Church Means to You." I tried to remember what he said but was unsuccessful, probably because I didn't know what he said when he said it.

I did have an interesting hour watching the people. Shakespeare's observations about the world as a stage seemed particularly apt here, and I was possessed by a real feeling of being "off-stage."

In a spirit of humbleness, I offer to you my thoughts of the hour, and the thoughts are offered as a curious example of how an unfettered mind can flit about aimlessly, like a bee, and light upon all sorts of irrelevant objects. If thoughts can be quoted, I quote:

"Why isn't a congregation a cross-section of the population? Apparently they all have something in common, but whatever it is, it doesn't appear to be a very pleasant thing."

"All of the women's faces seem to reflect self-indulgence, arrogance, intolerance, and conceit—in that order. When next we pray I think I will ask for protection from the blazing scorn and the chill contempt of the righteous."

"I wonder why the good people who follow a gentle and forgiving Christ should be so intolerant, while so many sinners are so generous and understanding? I guess you have to know something about sin to understand sinners."

"In the men's faces I can see pomposity and weakness, health and sickness, youth and innocence, old age and naivete, complacence and earnestness and stupidity—but nothing dangerous.

"Church makes me think of miracles, and miracles make me wonder what it could be that enables even a dull speaker to keep so many mouths shut for so long a time."

"The light that filters through the stained-glassed window is soft and has an ethereal quality, and I like it. The leaden lettering announces to all that its parent structure was erected 'In Memory of ——.' A nice gesture. It also states that it was 'Presented by ————.' Wouldn't it be funny if tombstones were marked 'By courtesy of Joe Doakes. For Masterful Monuments call Breckenridge 0770.' "

"Here is the collection. Who are the men who bear the plates? Deacons? Ushers? They march like soldiers. Is that what they mean by 'Onward Christian Soldiers'? Now the minister is praying. When I gave money to the YMCA and the Boy Scouts and the Heart Fund nobody prayed. When I contributed to the Cancer Fund and the March of Dimes nobody prayed. And when I tried to help Boys Town and the Orphans Home nobody said anything. But everybody prayed over the three cents out of my two-bits that will eventually help some poor Ubangi to learn the bad habits of civilization. What a strange world!"

"Now its over and the crowd is surging toward the escape hatches. And I am witnessing another miracle. The entire congregation has suddenly been transformed into smiling, warm, friendly, ordinary people. But I couldn't mistake what I saw inside. If these people are all Dr. Jekylls, then the church must be the catalyst that brings out the Hydes. What a horrible thought."

The last thought I had while strolling thoughtfully by the cemetery: "I wonder what I looked like to them."

Film Review

MY BROTHER, 16 mm. sound, 30 minutes, produced by Lutheran Church, Missouri Synod and available from Concordia Publishing House, 3558 South Jefferson Ave., St. Louis 18, Missouri, and Religious Film Library. Produced for TV series, THIS IS THE LIFE. Rental $9.00, available in Canada from General Films Limited, 810 Confederation Life Bldg., Winnipeg, Canada.

The story of the film revolves around a playground incident in which a new boy in the community, a Filipino, is called a "Foreigner," beaten up, and forbidden by the gang to use the public playground. A Christian father who was asked to give first aid becomes greatly concerned and decides something must be done about it. He finally gets the prejudiced news reporter to check the story. The reporter suddenly becomes deeply interested when he discovers this involves the son of a war and baseball hero. The Christian father, however, leads the reporter to see much deeper implications, and this in turn helps to change the attitude of others in the community.

The film does a good job of showing how expressing a personal Christian concern can lead to changed attitudes in the community. It can well be used for family nights, although the children will have some difficulty getting the real meaning of it; this film more than many others definitely needs a discussion period to make it really worth-while. It is unfortunate that the picture involves worship of a war hero. Although the major lesson of the film clearly overshadows this point, it may be well, however, in the discussion to help the children realize that God cannot approve the killing by war heroes.

April Program Helps

The Resurrection

by Jeanette Janzen, Waldheim, Sask.

INTRODUCTION:

The resurrection is of central importance to Christianity. Throughout the ages the story of Jesus' resurrection has come down to us, giving us the assurance that because He lives we shall live also; that no matter what happens to our bodies we are immortal. It is the fact of the resurrection that has sent witnesses to the uttermost parts of the earth, giving them power to proclaim the good tidings. It is the fundamental principal of the whole apostolic view of life.

This month we want to concern ourselves with the story of the Resurrection

These program helps are only skeletons which each local youth group will have to fill in or rearrange or take out as they wish and see most suitable for their group.

It is hoped that these suggestions will aid in your planning but also that each group will add its initiative and mold them into programs where they will meet Jesus and receive new zeal to walk as true disciples of the risen Lord.

PROGRAM NO. 1

THEME: The Crucified Savior; the Risen Lord.

PURPOSE:

O Crucified, let me behold Thee,
O risen Lord, let me adore.
Who gav'st Thy life for me a ransom
Who rose to triumph over death.

To help youth to behold and adore the crucified and risen Lord.

HEAR OUR STORY:

Judas:

"Master, is it I?" That is what I asked at the supper table when the twelve of us ate the Passover with Jesus—and all the time I knew that Caiaphas was giving me thirty pieces of silver to betray Him.

Jesus must have known that I was the one, for He said, "Thou hast said."

He told me I was to do what I had to do quickly. How I hurried to the high priests, as if Satan himself was pushing me.

Then I led the way to the garden where I knew Jesus would be.

Here I kissed Him——————

"Friend," He said, "wherefore art thou come?"

"Friend!" Why didn't He say "Traitor"?

In the morning the chief priest and elders of the people took counsel against Jesus to put Him to death; and when they had bound Him, they led Him away, and delivered Him to Pontius Pilate the governor.

Christ is now condemned. Because I betrayed Him into the hands of these men He will be put to death.

What I have done I cannot undo—They will not take back this silver— I have sinned in that I have betrayed innocent blood!

Barabbas:

I was known to be a notorious prisoner. I really expected that I would be hung with the other two prisoners.

It is strange that the people would prefer me to Jesus. Even the chief priests wanted me released—I, who had committed murder, who had started an uprising against political authority!

Why should HE die in my place, who am a robber?

Pilate

He was innocent. Herod thought so too. Although I questioned Him He answered hardly a word. When I asked Him if He did not know that I had power to release Him and power to crucify Him, He said I would have no power over him unless it had been given from Above. Jesus said His kingdom was not of this world.

I tried to satisfy the people by having Him whipped severely. The soldiers plaited a crown of thorns and arrayed Him in a purple robe, they mocked Him, and spat in His face; but all this seemed only to arouse the people more—. Their shouting "Crucify Him" still pierces my ears. I asked, "Shall I crucify your King?" The chief priests answered, "We have no king but Caesar."

So realizing that I was gaining nothing, but rather that a riot was beginning, I took water and washed my hands before the multitude. I declared myself innocent of this man's blood and told them to see to it themselves. All the people answered, "His blood be on us and on our children." They led Him away to be crucified.

Am I really innocent of His blood? Does water wash away sin?

Woman:

For a long time I had followed the crowds to see Jesus. I saw Him take the five loaves and two fishes and feed five thousand people. He laid His hands on my son and blessed him. Today I followed the crowd again; it was larger than usual. I found myself in front of Pilate's Hall. From others I learned that Jesus was prisoner—. Here the chief priests accused Him of many things . . . . Pilate tried to release Him but they only became more insistant. Pilate then asked whom he should release—Barabbas or Jesus—I was sure everyone would say Jesus; but the chief priests and elders went among the people and persuaded them to ask for Barabbas and destroy Jesus.

I didn't want to—they gave me this silver coin—. When the time came to cry I wanted to cry "Jesus" but I cried "Barabbas." Everyone did. We all shouted, "Crucify Him, Crucify Him!"

How much I was swayed by the crowd!

Centurion Soldier:

I stood near the cross. I heard Him pray, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." In that great time of suffering, He prayed for those who caused His agony. He promised paradise to one thief on the cross. Darkness covered all the earth, the veil in the temple was rent in the midst; there was a great earthquake—I saw Him die. He commended His spirit to God and gave up the ghost. Truly this was the Son of God!

Nicodemus:

By night I came to Jesus. Somehow I always believed Him to be from God. He said, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so, He said, the Son of Man would have to be lifted up. Did He refer to His dying on the cross? His words are still in my heart: "For God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." I can no longer be a secret follower of Jesus; I must confess Him openly.

Guard:

I was set to watch the sepulcher. The large stone had the seal of the chief priests on it. Behold there was a great earthquake; an angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door and sat upon it. His countenance was like lightning and his raiment white as snow. We fell to the ground as dead. We felt we had to tell these strange happenings to the chief priests or we would pay with our lives. When I insisted that the angel had come and Jesus had arisen from the dead, the elders offered me large sums of money to say that Jesus' disciples came by night and stole Him away while we slept. If the governor heard we had slept on watch they promised to persuade him. I took the money—but I must tell a lie—for He is not here—Jesus did arise!

Mary Magdalene:

From seven devils He freed me! I came to the sepulcher while it was yet dark and found that the stone had been taken away. I ran to tell Peter and John, who came to the tomb, went in, looked around and returned home. I stood outside weeping. When I looked into the sepulcher I saw two angels who asked me why I was weeping—I said, "Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him." When I turned back I thought the gardener was standing there. He asked me, "Woman, why weepest thou? Whom seekest thou?" "Sir," I said, "If thou hast borne Him hence, tell me where thou hast laid Him, and I will take Him away."

Then He said, "M A R Y."

I knew Him then—I fell at His feet. I saw the risen Lord—My Master.

Peter:

So quickly do I speak! Jesus said that He was going away and that where He was going we could not come. But I said that I was ready to go with Him both into prison and to death. Then He foretold that I would deny Him three times before the cock crowed. How sure I was of myself—.

How wrong I was!

I slept while He prayed in the garden. I thought it was up to me to defend Christ so I cut off one of the high priest's servant's ears. Little did I understand that His kingdom is not defended by man's weapons.

Far off did I follow Jesus. I stood in the courtyard of the high priest's hall warming myself. Then, then I denied that I even knew Jesus. Three times I lied instead of witnessing for Him. The cock crew and He looked at me—I remembered His words and went out and wept bitterly.

I wondered if my sin would ever be forgiven. But He arose! He left a message with an angel for me—for me! He was going to Galilee and we would see Him there. I met Him face to face. He forgave me. Three times He asked me if I loved Him—this grieved me (that He asked three times). From that time I no more fished for fish, but for men.

Cleopas:

We were walking to Emmaus, talking about the happenings of the past days. It seemed like a horrible nightmare. Then a stranger came and walked with us, inquiring why we were so sad. I was astonished at his question and wondered if he was the only visitor at Jerusalem who didn't know what had happened there these days. He asked, "What things?" We told him concerning Jesus of Nazareth how He was condemned to death and crucified. We had hoped He would be the one to redeem Israel and besides it was the third day since these things were done; moreover certain women went to the tomb and found it empty and an angel who said Jesus was alive. Some of us visited the sepulcher and found it as the women had said but did not see Him.

"How foolish of you to wonder; didn't Christ have to suffer and enter into his glory?" he replied. Then He expounded to us the Scriptures.

We drew near to the village and the day being far spent we constrained Him to stay with us; and as we sat at meat He took the bread, blessed and brake it and gave it to us. It was then that our eyes were opened and we recognized Him as the risen Christ!

He said to us, "Thus it is written, that the Christ should suffer and on the third day rise from the dead and that repentance and forgiveness of sins should be preached in His name to all nations.

Mary, Mother of Jesus:

My firstborn Son! How strange, how wonderful! Many times we did not understand why He was away from us so much. Why did so many of our most religious men hate Him? Why was He so misunderstood? But why do I question? He was mine, yet not mine, but God incarnate. He came to die for the sins of the whole world, even mine. My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior.

Thomas:

Three years I walked with Jesus. I said I believed Him to be from God; yet when He died I lost faith—perhaps we had all been deceived. Then three days after the disciples told me that Jesus had arisen, they had seen Him. I thought it was only their hopeful imagination—I said, "Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe." A week passed and nothing happened—at least I didn't see Him—so I thought that my doubts were verified. On the eighth day I was with the disciples again, and the doors were shut. Then Jesus stood in the midst and said, "Peace be unto you." He said to me, "Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing." My doubts turned to faith that He was my Lord and my God.

"Thomas," He continued, "because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen and yet believed."

Friend, do you believe that Jesus died for you and rose again? Someday He will come again and you too will see the hands and side which was pierced for our sin.

USING THE MATERIAL:

To set the spirit of the evening it might help to have a large background behind the platform, picturing the empty tomb, and the three crosses and Jerusalem in the distance. This could be left in the church for the Easter worship service, adding perhaps the words, "He is not here—He is risen."

It should be quite easy to dress the characters according to the dress of the Bible times.

It would not be necessary to use all the characters. They could appear one by one with suitable organ music played as they come and go. The effectiveness will depend to a large extent on how they say their lines.

Some suggested songs: (All but one from the Mennonite Hymnary)

"Tis Midnight"—103; "Alas and Did My Savior Bleed"—118; "Jesus Is Standing in Pilate's Hall" (Not in Hymnary); "Jesus I Never Can Forget"—533; "Majestic Sweetness"—120; "Man of Sorrows Now My Soul Shall Greet Thee"—537; "Christ the Joy of All the Living"—535; "O Jesus I Have Promised"—212.

PROGRAM NO. 2

THEME: Jesus Christ Is Risen Today
PURPOSE: Praise God for Easter

SUNRISE SERVICE:

Place: Out of doors. Away from people.

Time: At sunrise Easter day.

Suggestions for the Service:

Some time could be spent singing Easter hymns. A poem or two read. A short talk on the resurrection; perhaps recalling the events as recorded in the Scriptures; or the importance or results of the resurrection (see additional suggestions). Instead of a talk you might wish to have the Scripture account read from one of the four Gospels or 1 Corinthians 15. Some time might be spent in quiet meditation, thanking God for His great plan of Salvation, rededicating yourselves to a closer walk with Him in the newness of life. After the service you could have a fellowship breakfast; go sing at the windows of your older friends (don't forget the pastor) and return to church in time for the Worship Service.

ADDITIONAL SUGGESTIONS

1. Panel Discussion:

(I) The Importance of the Resurrection.
- —Very center of the gospel (everything stands or falls on the belief of the resurrection). If He did not rise our faith is vain, the apostles were false witnesses, we are yet in our sins, there is no hope that the dead will rise, as Christians we are the most miserable on earth.
- —The risen Lord is the head of the Church.
- —His present life perfects our salvation (Rom. 5:8-10).
- —Because of the resurrection we bring fruit to God.

(II) Nature of the Resurrection.
- —It was an actual resurrection—He was really dead, therefore really arose.
- —It was a bodily resurrection—the tomb was empty, they held His hands and His feet.
- —It was a unique resurrection—He was not limited by physical laws, entered closed doors, He rose never to die again.

(III) Credibility of the Resurrection.
- —Eyewitnesses, more than 500 reliable persons testified to the resurrection at the risk of their own lives.
- —The empty tomb, if enemies had taken the body they would have produced it, if disciples, they would never have risked their lives, becoming martyrs for a lie.
- —The Lord's Day, the Christian Church, and the New Testament itself.

(IV) Results of the Resurrection
- —Proves Jesus truly is the Messiah, the Son of God.
- —Assures the acceptance by God of Christ's atonement.
- —Made Christ our High Priest.
- —The Holy Spirit came.
- —Assures believer of all necessary power for life and service.
- —Christ is a life-giving spirit
- —Our own bodies will rise
- —Death has lost its sting.

2. Presenting an Easter Play.

Here are three plays which acted have proved quite effective.

(I) Barabbas—by Mattie B. Shannon

A play of two scenes which tells the story of Barabbas, who after he is set free realizes that Christ died on the cross in his stead, and Barabbas becomes a believer. (Price 30 cents per copy)

(II) A Great Inheritance—by Mattie B. Shannon
Three acts tell the story of the Rich Young Ruler who went away sorrowful because of his great possessions, who after Christ's resurrection decides to sell all he has and follow Jesus. (35 cents per copy)

(III) Mine Eyes Have Seen Him—by Eleanor Heim
The story of a Jewish family where the Mother becomes a believer of Jesus after her son who was unjustly put into prison is released and testifies that he has seen the Christ, and Peter and Mary Magdalene witness of Christ's resurrection. Two acts (30 cents per copy)

3. An Easter Parade:

No, not getting a new hat or new spring outfit! Instead, take some of your own warm clothing and bring them in an Easter parade to church where you could pack them for MCC. Your local MCC could give you information on how to pack them, etc.

Jesus said, let him who has two coats give to the person who has none. How far we are from that!

Does it matter to you that in Korea (this is true of much of Europe) countless hands and feet are cold because there are no mitts and socks to keep them warm? We have so much—they so little.

If you don't believe it, count your clothes to find out—I did—don't ask for the total—it would make me blush!

Let us give in the name of Christ. Let us henceforth walk in the newness of life (Romans 6:4). May God help us to learn to give more sacrificially.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Two deaths have entered the Bethel College fellowship the past week. On Thursday morning, March 10, Sara Marie Ensz, a Bethel graduate, died in Hutchinson after a very brief illness and on Sunday morning, March 13, John F. Moyer, on the Bethel staff since 1920, passed away.

In her college days Sara Marie Ensz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Ensz, Newton, took active part in a variety of student activities involving music, dramatics, and journalism. She was a member of the student council, the a cappella choir, assistant editor of the Graymaroon, associate editor of the Collegian and member of the Beta Kappas. Since her graduation in 1952 she had been teaching in the McCandless School, Hutchinson.

Rev. J. F. Moyer joined the Bethel staff in 1920 as dean of men, later to be dean of the college, teaching history and economics, and from 1927 to 1950 in the business office as assistant treasurer and custodian of endowment funds.

Total spring enrollment now stands at 376, according to Eldon Graber, registrar. This includes 127 freshmen, 78 sophomores, 70 juniors, 61 seniors, and 40 special students. Enrollment for night classes totals 79 of which 53 are extension students. New students enrolled for the spring quarter are Daniel Chase, Samuel Chou, Maxine Hall, Orrie Klassen, Clinton Krehbiel, Don Moultry, Norman Pankratz, Loren Reusser, Ann Stone, and Kenneth Voth.

Horton Flaming, junior student from Reedley, Calif., took first place in the men's oratory division of the annual Kansas Intercollegiate Forensic league tournament at Southwestern University, Winfield, March 12. His oration was entitled, "Cosmos or Chaos."

Three dramatic organizations co-operated in presenting a night of one-act plays, Saturday, March 19, in the Memorial Hall Auditorium.

"Shadow of a Dream," was presented by Pi Kappa Delta, under the direction of Horton Flaming. "Balcony Scene" was presented by the Drama Society under the direction of Marian Kaufman. The third play, "A Marriage Proposal," was presented by Alpha Psi Omega, and directed by Don Kaufman.

The Mennonite Singers of the college have recently appeared in public at Halstead, March 6, at the Southwestern Music Educators Conference in Hutchinson, March 13, and in the evening of the same day in the First Mennonite Church of Hutchinson. They also sang at the funeral of Sara Marie Ensz, Mar. 12.

Dr. E. G. Kaufman is spending the month of March in Canada speaking in various Manitoba churches. Pres. D. C. Wedel spoke at a youth retreat in North Battleford, Sask., March 11 and in Saskatoon, March 13.

In the evening the choirs joined and gave a concert directed by Mr. Sateren.

Students in the Teachers' Training classes have begun their practice teaching assignments. Eight schools are co-operating to make this possible. The one-year students are practicing in rural schools and the two-year students in town schools.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

The Men's Quartet of the Maine General Hospital, Portland, Maine, presented a program at the morning service of the Woodlawn Mennonite Church March 13. MENTAL HEALTH SURVEY UNDERWAY

A study to determine the extent of mental illness and mental retardation among Mennonite, Brethren in Christ, and Amish church groups in the United States is being made by the Akron Mental Health Services Office.

This constituency-wide survey is occasioned by a special study in the four-state area of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, and Ohio to determine the advisability and possibility of extending MCC institutional services to that area.

It was felt this would be an opportune time to gain information which the Mental Health Services office has needed to serve the constituency in a better way and to compile current mental health statistics. The last study surveying the mental health needs of Mennonite groups was made in 1945.

Information for this study is being gleaned from a questionnaire submitted to Mennonite, Brethren in Christ, and Amish pastors or ministers around the middle of March. In addition to inquiring about the extent of mental illness and mental retardation, the questionnaire seeks information about hospitalization, such as how many persons are currently being treated in institutions and whether in public or private hospitals.

1955 CHRISTMAS BUNDLE FOLDERS AVAILABLE

Folders listing packing instructions and containing labels for 1955 Christmas bundles are now being distributed to local churches. Additional copies are available from the clothing centers in Reedley, Calif.; North Newton, Kan.; Ephrata, Pa.; and Kitchener, Ont.; as well as the MCC offices in Akron, Pa.; Waterloo, Ont.; and Newton, Kan. Last year nearly 28,000 Christmas bundles were contributed and at this time it appears that at least an equal number could be used to good advantage this year.

WHAT MATERIALS ARE MOST DESIRED FOR FOREIGN RELIEF?

The continued distribution of clothing, bedding, soap, and sewing supplies to the poor and unfortunate overseas is made possible by the continued contribution of these materials by Mennonite, Brethren in Christ, and Amish churches in the United States and Canada. Frequently persons ask where relief supplies are needed and what kinds of materials are required.

At present the largest amounts are shipped to Jordan and Korea for distribution among refugees and poor people. Another needy field is Austria where large amounts of relief supplies are dispersed in refugee camps. Bedding, household articles and clothing are important items in the operation of the children's homes in Bad Duerkheim, Germany, and Valdoie and Weiler in France. Similar materials are used in Formosa children's homes and hospital. Other supplies go to Indochina, Java, and to other areas as needs arise. An increasing emphasis in the relief program are self-help projects in which people are given materials to make goods for themselves or to sell as a source of income.

To have a good supply of relief materials available makes it possible to disperse them to areas where needs suddenly arise. Last year 216 tons of clothing were contributed and the goal for clothing contributions for this year is slightly higher.

Here are the materials most desired for foreign relief—shoes: men's and children's (new or repaired), no women's high-heels; clothing: new or second-hand (clean and mended), men's coats, suits, pants, jackets, shirts, socks, underwear (heavy preferred), pajamas (warm preferred), and work clothes; women's coats, suits, wool skirts, jackets, warm stockings, underwear and night clothes (warm), dresses of wool or cotton, durable material; all kinds of children's and babies' clothing; knitted articles (hand-knit or manufactured such as sweaters, caps, mittens, afghans, wool socks, stockings, and scarfs); bedding and household articles: quilts, blankets, sheets, pillow cases, towels, wash cloths (new or secondhand, clean and mended); soap, toothbrushes, tooth paste, and powder; sewing supplies: sewing cotton, darning cotton, pins and needles (in packages), safety pins, scissors, and elastic; yard goods and knitting wool.

Clothing and other supplies should be carefully selected and repaired, if necessary. They should be shipped to the nearest clothing center—Reedley, Calif.; North Newton, Kan.; Ephrata, Pa.; or Kitchener, Ont. Only such materials should be contributed as are worthy of the sticker, "In the Name of Christ."

BUILDING HOFFNUNGSFELD-FILADELFIA ROAD IN PARAGUAY

Construction of the Hoffnungsfeld-to-Kilometer 145 roadway in Paraguay has been completed and work has started on a Hoffnungsfeld-to-Filadelfia roadway. This road construction is the work of Vern Buller of Richey, Mont., the five PAX men, and several Mennonite colony men. The Hoffnungsfeld-to-Filadelfia road connects Menno and Friesland colonies and is extensively used for the shipment of freight. The completed Hoffnungsfeld-Kilometer 145 road connects the freight terminal of the three Chaco colonies to the end of a railway, also known as End Station. Construction of these roadways can do much to improve the economy of the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay.

(An explanation: Regular forms are sent to our correspondents for their use in writing church news. At the bottom of these forms is a "Sample Jotting" intended to give an idea of the kind of news to be submitted. This sample was taken from an actual Jotting of the Hebron Church some years ago. Several times since, this sample has inadvertently found its way again into the regular news. We apologize to our readers for this slip, and especially to the Hebron Church of Buhler, Kansas. We hope the mistake will not be repeated. Ed.)

Mrs. Pete Unruh was a recent patient at the Warroad Hospital. Joe Dick also spent several days in the hospital. We are wishing them both renewed health and strength. Missionary John B. Jantzen from Africa was to speak Sunday, Feb. 20, but the biggest snow storm in five years prevented. Several families could meet the following Monday. Four families joined church by letter Feb. 21: Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Harder, and Mr. and Mrs. Peter H. Heppner, of Mountain Lake; Mr. and Mrs. Jake Goertzen of Alsen, N. D.; and Mr. and Mrs. Joe Dick of Munich, N. D. We sincerely welcome them to our church fellowship. Pulpit and piano lamps were placed in the church purchased from memorial gifts. Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Unruh have returned from their two months vacation in Kansas. Nancy Mitterling was taken to the Warroad Hospital Feb. 28, with a broken leg. May God bless you, Nancy.—Mrs. Nick Fast, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: On March 5, several members of our congregation went to Archbold, Ohio, to help to organize a Mennonite Disaster Unit for Ohio. Representatives of many Mennonite groups will help in the project which is being set up to do relief work in case of local disaster—flood, tornado, etc. A number of our young people attended the Wayne County Christian Endeavor Banquet at Smithville Inn on Jan. 31. Mother's Study Group invited their husbands as guests when they met in the church basement on Feb. 14. Guest speaker was Superintendent Donald Baker of the Dalton schools who discussed the subject, "Are Our Schools Competing with Our Churches?" Levi Amstutz is spending some time with relatives in Pennsylvania. Recent births recorded are: a daughter, Janis Lynn to Mr. and Mrs. Earl Slutz on Nov. 21; a son, Guy 3rd, to Mr. and Mrs. Guy Guzzo on Dec. 10; and a son, Michael John, to Mr. and Mrs. Roger Martin on Dec. 11.—Mrs. Earl Hofstetter, Corr.

—Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kan: During the month of February our church is conducting a visitation campaign inviting friends to make this their church home while in Wichita. We appreciate being notified when members of Mennonite churches in the surrounding area move to Wichita. Feb. 6 Marie J. Regier spoke to our Sunday school in a combined session. She told of her work in South America. Our pastor is leading a teacher training class on the subject of "The Teachings of Jesus" for our Sunday school and weekday schoolteachers. This class meets on Sunday evenings, and will continue for about ten weeks. In January, the Men's Brotherhood sponsored a discussion, with Dr. J. Lloyd Spaulding, executive secretary of the Institute of International Relations, presiding. The Ladies' Friendship circle entertained their husbands on the evening of Feb. 8 with a social evening built around a Valentine theme. One of our former members, Miss Bette Unrau, was married to Robert Harpenan in Blessed Sacrament Church on Feb. 12. We extend them our best wishes and sincere prayers. Two rosebuds were displayed in our sanctuary Feb. 13, in honor of Doreen Kay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Frantz, born Jan. 29; and Philip Roger, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Regier, born Feb. 7. The following Sunday the birth of Philip James, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dean Stucky, who was born on Feb. 15, was announced in the same manner.—Mrs. Emry A. Ruth, Corr.

—Immanuel Church, Downey, Calif. Special speakers obtained were Erwin Goering, Director of Public Relations at Bethel College, who gave an interesting talk to the young people and encouraged them to consider attending Bethel. Also, J. J. Esau, representing the Home Missions Division of the Board of Missions, brought a most inspirational message. Robert Harkness, internationally known composer-pianist, gave us a unique service of music and inspiration. He played several wonderful piano selections, told some hymn stories and actually set a Scripture verse to music. Feb. 25 the World Day of Prayer services were held in our church. The church sponsored a junior craft and recreational program, Feb. 25, which consisted of supervised games, craft projects, and Bible lessons. This was well attended and enjoyed by children from 6 to 12 years of age. The monthly Southern Division sing was held in our church Feb. 13. The church was filled and a wonderful and inspiring time was had by all attending. Elsie Heer graduated from Fremont High School Jan. 28. The young married Sunday school class had a Valentine party. It was a potluck dinner and enjoyed immensely by all. Elaine E. Franz and Nick Lepp were united in holy matrimony Feb. 19. About 200 people attended the beautiful wedding.—Elsie Heer, Corr.

—Emmanuel Church, Moundridge, Kan.: Dr. Bittinger, president of McPherson College, will be the guest speaker in our church each evening at 7:30 beginning Tuesday, April 19 through 22, for the evangelistic meetings. Roy Roth, president of Hesston College, will bring an evangelistic message Sunday evening, April 17, at 7:30. The public is cordially invited to attend any of these services. The Friedenstahl Christian Endeavor Society presented a program in our church Sunday evening, Jan. 23. Our midweek Bible study this winter has been the book of Ephesians. Quite a number of our families attended the George Brunk meetings in Hesston, Kan., during his evangelistic campaign in January. program. "The Children of Moses Singers" a colored family from Emporia, Kan., presented a program in song. Our pastor, Garman Wedel, showed part of his series of colored slides with accompanied recorded message at the Pleasant Valley School located east of Goessel, Kan., Monday evening, Feb. 14. Consecration services were held Sunday morning, Feb. 27, for James Ray, son of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Wiens and for Robert Lee, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Edward Becker.—Corr.

—Deep Run Church, Bedminster, Pa.: Two offerings were taken for the Northeast Philadelphia Project. Violet Keiser of the West Swamp Church who did VS work in South America spoke and showed pictures of the work carried on by her brother, Arthur Keiser and family, and others laboring there, at our Ladies' Missionary Society meeting in February. Members brought knitting yarn as their special project for the month. A musical program was given for the Vesper Service at the Home for Aged at Frederick Feb. 20. An offering was taken for "The Mennonite" Every Home Plan. Many of our members wrote to Harrisburg, protesting the Horse Racing Bill. Earl Wismer left for the service Feb. 24. New members will be received April 3. An architect is drawing up plans for an expansion of our church building. Pre-Easter meetings are planned for March 27-29. Four conference men will be the speakers.—Corr.

—Glendale Church, Lynden, Wash.: Myron Hilty became the Superintendent of the Lighthouse Mission, a rescue mission, in Bellingham, in October, 1954, after serving as pastor of our church for three years. Our church is now looking for a new pastor and is prayerfully considering this problem. The building for the primary Sunday school was moved about 30 feet west of its former location by the men of the church and will be joined to the main building with an addition which will be for a hallway, storage space, and furnace room. Another improvement is the purchase of a furnace for central heating for the church. Jan. 23, Erwin Goering and Harry Martens of Bethel College shared the time in the morning service to bring us their messages. That evening J. J. Esau, the conference evangelist, began his series of meetings which lasted through Jan. 30. D. G. Regier of Alsen, N. D., was here for a series of meetings from Feb. 24 to 28. —Mrs. Ralph Boese, Corr.

—Grace Church, Chicago, Ill.: We were privileged to have in our midst Rev. and Mrs. Kliever from Arizona, Sunday, Feb. 27. We enjoyed hearing about the work of our General Conference among the Hopi Indians. Rev. Kliever has a message for us, and our children who hear so much about the Indians on the radio and TV. At persent we have many sick in our congregation. One father hurt his leg and is in the hospital. One young mother had to go in for surgery. Mrs. Bant, a very faithful member for many years, has not been able to attend services. Mrs. Andreen and Mrs. Fleiss also are not able to come and need to be visited. Mr. Schnell, father to missionary Russell Schnell of Belgian Congo, is somewhat better again. We have begun a special crusade of prayer on Wednesday evenings during the Lenten season. We expect to have several speakers from the students in the Seminary during Easter week. Walt Neufeld has been helping us and teaching our adult Bible class. Ernest Neufeld, a first year Seminary student, teaches in our weekday church school program and a high school Sunday school class. Our Hi-C Christian group has been meeting in our home and in several other homes. There were 28 Christian high school boys and girls at the last meeting of various denominations; Mennonite, Old Mennonite, Lutheran, Presbyterian, and Methodist. We thank God for His blessing and pray for many others who need to hear the gospel.—Mrs. John T. Neufeld, Corr.

of the church, but it is also another phase of our outreach into the world. It is part of our reason for being.

But then our outreach into the world must proceed along the line of service. Of course, you cannot draw a hard and fast line around education, missions, and service as expression of a vital Christian experience. For, in actual practice, they merge into one. Each is the outward evidence of the same saving experience, each is an expression of the same mission to the world.

Some time ago, I picked up an MCC bulletin which comes from our relief unit in Jericho. One of our PAX men stationed there, wrote that while he was registering patients for their clinic recently, an elderly woman came in with a bundle of torn and dirty rags. But it was not an ordinary bundle of rags, for inside the bundle was a little seven months old baby girl that was literally starving to death. Fifteen days after this girl was born, her mother died, leaving her and her brothers and sisters to the care of their aged grandmother. The grandmother tried to keep the girl alive on goat's milk, but that proved too strong for the child, and instead of gaining weight, she lost. That day, as she was held before the relief worker, she was, according to his own testimony, "one of the most pathetic scenes I have ever seen." Through proper medical care, that child may yet have a decent chance to live.

I have said many times that the Arab-Jewish problem is one of the most difficult problems in the world today. I do not know what the answer is. But I know there are boys and girls, there are men and women in Jordan who need help. There are people all over the world who need help. But not just help; help in the name of Christ. They need relief with a plus. They need a love that re-establishes them spiritually as well as physically.

Let us, then, give ourselves to the work which God has called us to do. Humbly, yet without apology, let us support with our prayers, our gifts, and our service that program which is ours. Let us believe that there is a mission for the Mennonites in the world today, as there are within the body of Christ members with gifts and responsibilities differing one with another.

"THE FIELDS ARE WHITE . . . ." WILL YOU HELP?

Recently a church member asked her pastor for information about the General Conference Annuity Agreements. The pastor in turn directed the question to the office of the Conference Treasurer, which was pleased to send the information. Perhaps there are some members in every church who, like this Christian sister, feel a strong desire to have part of their accumulated estate serve the Christian cause through an old established and progressive organization such as the General Conference. The opportunities in our Conference to invest for Christ are greater and more urgent now than ever before.

There are several ways to make gifts to or investments in the General Conference, such as:

1. Life Annuity Agreement with life-time income.
2. Large outright cash gifts for the work in general or some specific cause.
3. Gift of farmland or city property.
4. A bequest in the will.

Last year several of such gifts were received by the Conference. The Conference Boards spend much study, time, and prayer to meet some of the needs that are brought to them. Naturally they are very thankful when a substantial gift is received to take care of some of the needs that are simply more than annual budget receipts permit. So we strongly urge pastors and people to consider this matter seriously. Write in or call for information, and the office of the Conference Treasurer, 722 Main St., Newton, Kansas, will be glad to send it; or we can call personally to discuss the matter with you.

1955 CHRISTMAS BUNDLES FOLDERS

Since a considerable number of congregations seem to have been omitted last year a different approach will be used. One folder has just been mailed to each minister for our congregations in the U.S. and Canada. If your congregation has not received a copy please let us know. Each congregation can order as many additional folders and labels as needed from the MCC offices at Reedley, Newton, Akron, or Waterloo.

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

1. To work for a Conference unified in Christ.
2. To teach the gospel of Christ effectively.
3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

I BELIEVE IN THE RESURRECTION AND LIFE EVERLASTING

This final affirmation of the Apostles' Creed is like a mighty trumpet blast that topples over the walls of death. It is a great conception, almost too great for the human mind. As Christians we are convinced beyond doubt of Christ's resurrection and consequently death loses its terror for we are assured that there is life beyond death.

I believe in life everlasting because I believe in God the Father. He would not mock His children with so great a hope if it were not true. He would not grant more years to a turtle or to a tree than He would to His highest creation.

I believe in life eternal because I believe in Jesus Christ. He arose triumphant over death and said He would prepare for our homecoming. He taught life beyond the grave and demonstrated it through His Resurrection. And because He lives, we, too, shall live. Because I believe in God the Eternal and in Jesus Christ His Son, I must also believe in life big enough to match such convictions.

What should such a belief mean to us? For one thing, it should give us a new view of death. It is not a blank wall but a door opening to a greater life beyond. So death need not be feared but becomes a messenger ushering us into the presence of God.

The belief in immortal life also gives a new concept of life. Here in this little space of time we must build and prepare for eternal dwelling with God. Life is not merely something to be shuffled through, but to be lived nobly and gloriously, under God, since it will be everlasting. We must have interests and concerns that stretch far beyond this short span of life on earth. All of life becomes sacred as we think of preparing it for an eternal fellowship with God. We wish to submit this life fully to Christ Who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life.

The day demands great beliefs; nothing small and narrow will do. We need beliefs that thrust us into great Christian living. Such beliefs are well expressed in the Apostles' Creed. I believe in God the Father Almighty, and my soul lays hold of Him and He of me. I believe in Jesus Christ as my personal Savior and Lord, and I must let Him rule within my soul. I believe in the Holy Spirit and must keep myself sensitive to His voice and guidance. I believe in the Church as the avenue through which God does much of His work. I believe in the fellowship of the saints, and the forgiveness of sins. I believe in the resurrection and life everlasting, and thus build eternity into my soul here and now. "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief!"

MENNONITE EXCLUSIVENESS

One common criticism that those outside of Mennonite circles frequently bring against us is that we are too exclusive and too self-centered. They say we want to group off into little communities and there live by ourselves without feeling any special obligation to those around us. We may send missionaries to the ends of the earth, but feel little responsibility for the people living just outside our little close-knit circle.

Perhaps some of this tendency has been carried down through the generations from the times that our forefathers were persecuted and driven from place to place until they came to distrust any "outsiders" and to huddle too closely to themselves.

Our Lord showed great interest in all kinds of people, not simply the people of His own inner circle. The worse sinners they were, the more He longed to help them. The outcast He treated with rare tenderness and understanding. As His followers we would do well to use His methods and to reflect His loving-kindness to all about us, whether inside or outside our immediate circle.

DAILY DEVOTIONAL BOOKLETS

In the spring of 1935 there was published the first issue of a pocket sized devotional guide that has since set an amazing record in the field of worship material. The publication was entitled The Upper Room. Its plan was to provide a Bible reading, a meditation, a prayer, and a thought for each day, all on a single page.

People seemed hungry for this simple type of devotional guide. The circulation has been growing steadily at the rate of more than 100,000 copies per year. At present the circulation is over three million. There are twenty-nine editions in twenty-five languages, all sharing the same Bible reading, prayers, and meditation for each day. There is also an edition in Braille for the benefit of the blind. The present editor, when asked how he accounted for this extraordinary world ministry, said, "We cannot account for it except to say that it has met a need and that God has been in it and blessed it."

Since its appearance twenty years ago there have been a number of other devotional guide booklets published patterned after The Upper Room. Simple devotional material for daily use has met a real need. We do well to avail ourselves of these guides to devotion.

Wanted: A Conference Unified in Christ

PAUL R. SHELLY*

One of the objectives of The Mennonite for the year 1955 is "To work for a Conference unified in Christ." I suppose that this is not only an objective of The Mennonite but is also an objective of each member of the General Conference Mennonite Church. The Board of Education and Publication has not chosen this as one of the objectives for The Mennonite for 1955, because there is a marked absence of unity in our Conference today, since there is possibly a greater unity in our Conference now than there has been in the last quarter of a century. Yet, each of us is also aware of disunity in our Conference and, consequently, the objective of a Conference unified in Christ should be prayerfully considered. In order that this objective will be of the greatest value to us I want to mention six ways in which our Conference should be unified in Christ.

I. A Conference Unified Through Prayer

"Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." (Luke 24:49)

The early disciples were not unified prior to the crucifixion; instead each was seeking a place of priority in Christ's kingdom.

The disciples became unified through a ten-day prayer meeting and then they received power, became witnesses, and began to transform the world of their day.

There are some signs of disunity in our Conference. I believe that if we truly want to be unified in Christ that the best method to use is prayer. As local churches pray together, they will be unified in Christ. Prayer will also unite members in district conferences and in the General Conference as a whole.

This call to unity, therefore, is in the first place a call to make prayer primary in our Conference. There is no other way to achieve unity. Let us follow the early disciples in their prayer experience in the period following Easter, and we will achieve the same results of unity and power.

II. A Conference Unified in Doctrine

"There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, and through all, and in you all." (Ephesians 4:4-6)

As we read the New Testament we are reminded that the people did not always agree in all details concerning the various doctrines of the church and yet in the passage from Ephesians Paul reminded the Christians there that there was only one Lord, one faith, and one God.

I have been happy to see a growing sense of unity in our Conference in the area of doctrine. I have preached in churches in all of the districts in the General Conference and have found that there was a ready response to the gospel since all of us serve the same Lord and the same God. I have also noticed a deep sense of unity in relation to the basic doctrine in various conference committee meetings, in our sessions of the council of boards, and in our General Conference sessions.

Our major problem in our General Conference in regard to unity of doctrine is that in some instances we have set up man-made barriers and have feared to communicate with each other. The Holy Spirit through Paul would speak to us telling us that there is "one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, and through all, and in you all."

III. A Conference Unified Using All Its Leaders

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets, and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

Paul was speaking here about a team which was united in a common task, the work of the ministry in order to edify the body of Christ.

Putting Paul's statement in terms of functions in our Conference, we would say that God has called ministers, evangelists, missionaries, professors, executive secretaries, and relief workers in order to carry out the total purpose for each life He has entrusted to us.

We are possibly less unified in our use of these various leaders than in some of the other aspects of unity. I have been happy, however, that leaders in a number of retreats have been unified in their task "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." I recall a number of rich experiences in which there were ministers, missionaries, evangelists, professors, and relief workers on a retreat staff. God used the combined talents of all of the leaders to fulfill His purpose for each life.

I have been disheartened that we do not always have the same vision on the local level regarding the use of our various leaders. Some churches, for example, will utilize our missionaries and our relief workers but will not permit the teachers of our educational institutions to speak from their pulpits. The concept of a team of leaders is sometimes broken down by churches who have a spirit of mistrust for one or more types of leaders. Yet, in many instances the doctrines and depth of Christian experience of all these leaders is similar.

IV. A Conference Unified in One Task

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," (Matthew 28:19-20).

*Professor in Bible, Bluffton College; Associate Editor, THE MENNONITE.

Jesus is pointing out that the task of the church is threefold. The Great Commission can be related to three of our Conference boards: making disciples, Board of Missions; churchmanship, Board of Christian Service; teaching, Board of Education and Publication.

Whenever the church throughout its history specialized in one or two of these aspects of the one task, the church became weak. One of the most direct examples of this occurred in the church in the middle ages. For the first six hundred years the church was very much interested in evangelism as well as in churchmanship. It failed, however, in its task of Christian education. The church became corrupt, weak, legalistic, and powerless.

I feel that we tend to specialize too much in our General Conference. There are churches which specialize in each of these aspects of our one task. Some stress evangelism, some churchmanship, and others Christian education. I feel that we have made some progress toward working for our total task, and yet I feel that God is definitely calling us to be unified in our total work.

In order to accomplish the work God has entrusted to us, we must see our unified task in our local churches, our districts, and in our total General Conference. God has not called us to be specialists but to fulfill His whole plan.

V. A Conference Unified, Through Each Member Sharing His Conviction

"Then saith he to Thomas, reach hither thy finger, and see my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and put it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing. Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord and my God. (John 20:27-28)

I am not asking for a Conference unified in Christ in which all of the members blindly follow one or a group of leaders.

The New Testament clearly teaches that unity should come through each person responding personally and arriving at his own convictions. Thomas had to have his own convictions. The experience of the other disciples did not suffice for him. At the Council of Jerusalem each leader was asked to express his own attitude toward the issue. The unity there was achieved through each person sharing his own convictions and then the group arriving at a joint conclusion.

This means that the unity that is achieved in the General Conference should be arrived at through a genuine sharing of each person in the Conference.

There is a complete revelation in Jesus Christ. However, none of us possesses this complete revelation in its entirety. Consequently, in all of our discussions we should welcome the ideas of all of the members of our Conference.

This is one of the areas of weakness in our General Conference Mennonite Church. We are not always free to share our convictions. If anyone disagrees with what is the established approach to an issue, we are not anxious to listen to him. We need this principle of genuine sharing and seeking in order that we may achieve a unified Conference in Christ.

VI. A Conference Unified in Christ

"He is before all things, and in him all things hold together." (Colossians 1:17 RSV)

This statement by Paul is a corrective for any possible misuse of the principle of sharing. Our sharing is not a sharing without any common center. Our center must be Jesus Christ. Paul in this verse tells the Colossians that in Christ all things are held together.

This suggests the nature of the unity we need in our General Conference Mennonite Church. This unity is not arrived at through argument or debate. It exists even though there are minor differences among us, since it centers around a common experience the members have with Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord.

This is the kind of unity Jesus prayed for in John 17. It is a unity around an experience with Jesus Christ. I am sure that all of us have experienced this kind of unity in groups. It existed even though there was no uniformity of ideas. Some of us have experienced it in our home churches. Some of us have experienced it in committees. Some of us have experienced it in other groups.

We are about in the middle of the three year period in between our General Conference sessions. I am convinced this is the kind of unity which we need as we continue to accomplish the work God has given us. As we plan for the General Conference session in 1956 this is the kind of unity we need both in our preparation for the session and in the Conference session.

"To work for a Conference united in Christ" is one of the objectives of The Mennonite for the year 1955. Will you make it your objective too? Let us each work for a Conference unified through prayer, unified in doctrine, unified by using all its leaders, unified through a dedication to one common task, unified by each member sharing his convictions, and unified by all of us being unified in Christ.

An Easter Verse

'Tis the spring of souls today;
  Christ hath burst His prison,
From the frost and gloom of death
  Light and Life have risen.
All the winter of our sins,
  Long and dark, is flying
From His light to whom we give Thanks and praise undying.

Resurrection and Experience

JOHN F. SPRUNGER*

Christ arose! Over one hundred times the New Testament declares He arose. The mighty power of God wrought Jesus Christ's resurrection from the dead. Jesus experienced resurrection. We too, can experience resurrection.

Easter has arrived for the year 1955. This is the time of year to think about resurrection. Majestic, triumphant resurrection hymns, inspiring resurrection sermons, interesting Easter articles, all these invade our senses during this Easter season. Do these lofty thoughts, sincere hopes, and worshipful feelings constitute the extent of resurrection we are to experience today or is the experience of resurrection power more than a sermon to thrill the soul or an urge to worship?

Consider the experiences of the followers of Christ on the first Easter and during following days. How do our experiences compare?

Mary Magdalene heard the voice of Jesus calling her by name. Thomas experienced the sound sensation of Christ's words commanding him to thrust his hand into the scarred side. The seven disciples at sea responded to the call to cast their net on the other side of the boat. Peter heard the words and felt the emotional impact of Christ's demand, "Lovest thou me?" Commonplace sounds took new significance because they were stirred by Resurrection's voice. Sound became the vehicle carrying swift messages to Christ's followers—He was risen.

Two on the road to Emmaus—disheartened, discouraged—met a stranger. They invited Him in. He broke bread for them. Suddenly they recognized Him—Christ risen from the dead. The disciples gathered behind closed doors. Christ appeared! In the light of the burning lamps He stood. His body reflected the light rays casting shadows upon the floor. He had risen. Later the followers of Christ gathered with Him on the side of a hill over near Bethany. All observed closely as He gave final instructions. Suddenly before their eyes He ascended into heaven. Their eyes received the testimony of light that He had risen. Light heralded His resurrection.

Sight, hearing, and even touch brought experience of the resurrected Christ. Actual real stimuli declared in their conscious experience with unmistakable shout Christ had risen from the dead.

Together the early followers of Christ gathered in the upper room to await the promised coming of the Holy Spirit. They were rewarded. The Holy Spirit came and dwelled in them. He took their resurrection experiences and transformed them into renewed lives—resurrected lives. Christ's resurrection, their resurrection made them flaming evangels testifying of the crucified and risen Savior!

The resurrection life of Christ radically transformed their behavior patterns. Those early glimpses of Him caused them one by one to change attitudes, walk and actions. Then, upon knowing the indwelling power of the Spirit, they moved in new living. All of their future actions resulted from the resurrected Christ in their life.

Christ, the Son of God, risen from the dead. In the framework of our human existence and our human predicament containing inevitable death no other human experience could be so tremendously thrilling or so far reaching in effect. The resurrection of Christ as experienced by the disciples proves the greatest evidence of the validity of Christianity. It displays God's greatest exhibition of power. It reveals to all the greatest truth of the gospel. It provides the greatest reality of our faith. It releases for our use the greatest hope—immortality.

When the resurrected Christ entered the daily experience of the disciples, He pronounced God's "Amen" to His purpose for coming from heaven to earth. He declared completed His substitutionary work on the cross. He presented to us the possibility of resurrection in our experience.

Experience of resurrection today means a revivified life. This is more than mere hopes and thoughts of life after death. This is our hope of resurrection, but resurrection life is more than simply hope. Experience of resurrection today is more than hymns, sermons, and articles bombarding us on the subject. Resurrection experience means newness of life. It is transformed behavior conformed to the person of the resurrected Christ.

Salvation is such a resurrection experience. Jesus told Nicodemus he must be born again. Scripture declares again and again we must believe if we are to experience eternal life and life abundant today. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus and believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead thou shalt be saved," (Rom. 10:9). Vital faith in the resurrection brings salvation home to the heart. Resurrection power makes possible salvation. To experience salvation is to experience newness of life—resurrected life.

Justification is also an experience of the resurrection work of Christ. "If we believe on Him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead; who was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification," Rom. 4:24, 25. In the power of the resurrection our justification is completed. By our act of faith we bring into our life resurrection experience unto justification.

In resurrected life we also experience fruitbearing unto God. It is through our relationship to ". . . Him who is raised from the dead, that ye should bring forth fruit unto God," Rom. 7:4. Fruit in the Christ life is the product of the resurrection life of Christ surging through us.

Although our eyes have not seen the risen body of Christ, although our ears have not heard his audible

Easter Bridges

A little girl, not accustomed to traveling, was on board a train. The train on this day had to cross several branches of a river. The water seen ahead always awakened doubts and fears in the child's mind—she did not understand how it could be safely crossed. As they drew near to each river, however, a bridge always appeared and furnished a way over. After two or three experiences of that kind, the child leaned back with a sigh of relief and confidence and said: "There is nothing to worry about, someone has put bridges for us all the way!"

That is how we find life, too—God has built bridges for us all the way. Easter is the way across one of the big rivers—the river of death. There are also bridges across other rivers and streams . . . trials, doubts, disappointments, loneliness. Thank God, there is always a way across!

For those of us who are Christians, this Easter—dawning upon a suffering, bewildered, war-threatened world—holds the triumph of Jesus' resurrection and our own assurance of everlasting life. Earthly losses and trials cannot becloud the vision of everlasting union with Him who gave His life for us.

But for far too many the day will mean nothing deeper than new clothing, the budding of flowers, the Easter bunny, an Easter dinner, and, perhaps, attending a church service for the first time this year!

What does Easter mean to YOU? What difference does it make to you that there was a Christ who suffered, was crucified and buried, and who rose again . . . who today sits at the right hand of God, and who, some day, perhaps sooner than we think, is coming again? New Easter clothes will not suffice then—only the garments washed white in His precious blood will be sufficient.

Just as Easter always follows Good Friday, so eternal judgment always follows death. Have you crossed the Easter Bridge into salvation and eternal life? God's Word tells us that if we shall confess with our mouths the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in our hearts that God has raised Him from the dead, we shall be saved (Rom. 10:9). What easier way could there be to cross the river of death into eternal life?

voice, although our hands have not touched His resurrected body, yet along with the disciples, we can know the experience of His resurrection in our lives. Our every motive, our every attitude, our every behavior pattern can and will be colored, with resurrection shades and hues. Our experiences will be resurrection permeated.

Flashes of Thought

A True Spirit

Walter Gering

We joked about it as we stepped back into the study with the folders. But the fact remained, there was no other way. This was one place where all were on the same level. On several occasions I had become painfully aware of the fact that it makes no difference who you are—that rough beam is absolutely no respecter of persons. She was on the staff of our teachers directing the work with the children at the midweek services. On this particular evening she was interested in using a folder produced by the Mission Board of our Conference. So it was that we had gone into the storeroom where such material is often stored. The folders were quickly found; she knew exactly where they were having seen them there before. We were on our way out in a few moments.

Then it was that I remembered. Often I had gone into this same storeroom for other materials. It is the one place in church where stray pamphlets, magazines, and articles are stored. There is nothing attractive about the place as it is merely an attic under the choir loft. No attempt has even been made to utilize the space for any other purpose than for storage. Consequently it has never been painted or boxed out. Almost instinctively as we turned to go back into the study I cried out in warning. Too often I had hurried out of the storage room only to be painfully reminded that you cannot leave the room that way. You see, there is a large sturdy beam which crosses the ceiling as you approach the door. That beam is so low that you cannot stand erect. You must bow down and bend under its protruding edges. There is no other way out. More than once I had hurried out only to stop, holding my head throbbing in pain from the blow against the beam. I have learned to bow meekly as I go out. So it was that the warning went out: "Watch out for the beam . . . bend down."

We laughed as we commented on the fact that here was one spot where all must bow their head and meekly bend the knee. But the truth in its application lingered on. Sooner or later we learn that in all of life we must proceed meekly with bowed head if we would escape injury. The world has yet to learn that the words of Jesus are more than poetic phrases of idealism. "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth" was a fundamental principle laid down centuries ago. It is still truth which we must accept if we would escape the penalty of a proud haughty spirit.

Life's New Dimension

ALBERT GAEDDERT

Easter transforms death into the dawn of the greater life to come. A woman who had suffered the loss of her very devoted husband, could yet say that now she really knew him better than she had ever known him before. She said that it was because you are so close to the picture that you don't see the whole individual. You need to step back from the picture far enough to see the whole individual, so that the details do not stand out so large that they hide the total individual. She added, that the canvas really is not complete without death. When death comes it completes the picture. You step back from the picture then, and you see it as a whole, and you find beauties in it that escaped you when you were so near it.

And is it not true, that when we are so near the canvas on which we paint, that we need to step back away from the canvas so that we can see the picture as it really is? Easter adds this new dimension to the canvas of life.

Some time ago I looked through a new type of glass in an instrument which focused two films into one picture; this process then made the picture to reveal another dimension that ordinarily one does not see. It lent perspective. Members of the family in the picture stood near an orange tree, but you could actually see the space between the people and the orange tree. The orange tree stood some distance removed from the mountains in the background, and you could almost measure the distance between the tree and the mountains. It revealed in the picture the relationship of these objects to each other. It added a new dimension to photography.

This is what Easter does to life, it adds a new dimension. Easter enables us to see life in its right relationships. Life is a matter of right relationships, to God, to others, and to the things of this world. Sometimes these relationships get entirely out of focus, and we see only the things in this world. The risen Lord gives us the view of life that counts in terms of the values that survive even the grim event of death.

Christ did not give any detailed description of the life beyond. Our view of that new life is limited. But, as He did in other areas, He bade us to "come and see." He led His disciples from belief to trust. And when the end of His days was nigh He said to His disciples: "Let not your heart be troubled, ye believe in God; believe also in me. In my Father's house are mansions . . . I go to prepare a place for you." What kind of place would He prepare for us? We may not know the details, but knowing Him as we do we know of some things that would be included in the mansions prepared for us. Christ loved beauty, and I can imagine nothing but a place of beauty which He went to prepare. He taught His disciples: "Know ye the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The home above will reveal the truth about life; the mysteries of life will become clear; the misfortunes encountered here will come to full light, and no longer will we see through a glass darkly, but face to face. While here Wrong seems so often to be on the throne, and truth forever on the scaffold, knowing Christ, one is certain that in the home above justice and righteousness will prevail. The wrongs of this earth will be righted, for there we shall be like Him; we shall see Him as He is.

The life that is to be gives a new dimension to the life here and now. Easter brings to life a new dimension. —The Co-op Messenger

Lenten Fear

Who nailed Christ upon the tree,
Shouting curses in their glee
At the God they would subdue?
Was it Gentile, was it Jew?
  Do we now our Lord deny
  As did Peter, you and I?
  Who like Judas, still betray
  Jesus with a kiss today,
  To the thoughtless, careless bands;
  Then like Pilate, wash our hands?
Oh, how long must Jesus bleed?
When will we His teachings heed?
  Sins of yours and sins of mine
  Still crucify our Lord Divine.

Film Review

STEPHEN, THE FIRST CHRISTIAN MARTYR. B and W, 16 mm., sound, available from Associate Films, 79 E. Adams, Chicago, Illinois, rental, $7.00, 24 minutes. Available in Canada at General Films Limited, 810 Confederation Life Bldg., Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, $6.00 rental.

This film portrays the life of the early church: the persecutions of the apostles, the choosing of the seven deacons, and the life of Stephen including his being stoned. It shows very graphically the willingness of these early Christian leaders to suffer for the cause of Jesus Christ. The ending of the film introduces Saul, who is guarding the clothes of those who are stoning Stephen.

This is one in a series of twelve films produced by Cathedral Films on the life of Paul. It follows the biblical account very closely and helps to make the message of those early chapters in Acts meaningful.

The committee felt that this film on Stephen would be more useful if it were used as one in a series on the life of Paul than if it were used separately. The entire series could well be utilized on successive Sunday evenings. Probably one would be selective rather than use all twelve. The series also would be helpful to use in relation to a study of the life of Paul.

The stoning is pictured with some reserve and yet pictured realistically so that it would be better if this film were used with age groups from senior high school through adult.

Ah, dearest Jesus, how hast thou offended,
That man to judge Thee hath in hate pretended?
By foes derided, by Thine own rejected,
O most afflicted!

Who was the guilty?
Who brought this upon Thee?
Alas, my treason, Jesus, hath undone Thee!
'Twas I, Lord Jesus,
I it was denied Thee:
I crucified Thee.

For me, dear Jesus, was Thy incarnation,
Thy mortal sorrow, and Thy life's oblation;
Thy death of anguish and Thy bitter passion,
For my salvation.

Therefore, dear Jesus,
Since I cannot pay Thee,
I do adore Thee, and will ever pray Thee,
Think on Thy pity
And Thy love unswerving,
Not my deserving.

—From the Mennonite Hymnary

Meditation

The beating wings stretched taut. Death rigors cracked apart the snowy feathers in two slim fans. Wire barbs caught in their netted sheaths and held them, like outstretched arms. The pigeon, in desperate haste to waylay a predatory hawk from her nest of young, had impaled herself on a large spike protruding from the fence post.

The quivering corpse against the rough ash post startled my sidelong glance as I passed it in the dawn. In the dim light it became a ghostly crucifix.

I approached with beating heart and so saw what it was. Its head hung limply over one shoulder, the feet dangled. The soft purity of the breast was stained with clotting red, red which seemed but a darker reflection of the growing streaks on the eastern horizon. A bird hawk dipped and rose again with a frantic bundle in his claws, telling in that mute act what had happened.

A fluttering and shrill cheeping sounded behind me. I turned to the bushes and saw another half-grown pigeon vainly working its untried wings and crying for help. I searched for its nest, but so well was it concealed that it could not be found. I saw that this chick too would fall prey to the enemy. If these young had stayed hidden in the nest, no harm would have come, and the male pigeon could surely have cared for them until they were grown.

I turned to the poignant symbol on the ash post with a new sense of its tragedy. Oh pure, loving heart that dares all for what is loved! Your willing sacrifice cries out against its careless object, that was destroyed in spite of it. There was nothing for those in peril to do but accept the sacrifice. Yet they would not, and rebellion was their end.

The futility of such an act oppressed me. My thoughts dwelt on that supreme sacrifice so necessary for my own salvation. That too must be in vain for all who will not receive it. With pity and awe I gazed upon the ghostly bird and thought of One who gave Himself, knowing full well that His gift need not be accepted. My heavy heart pondered

Jesus Lives!

Jesus lives! thy terrors now
Can, O death, no more appall us;
Jesus lives! by this we know
Thou, O grace, canst not enthrall us.
Hallelujah!

Jesus lives! for us He died;
Then, alone to Jesus living,
Pure in heart may we abide,
Glory to our Savior giving.
Hallelujah!

Jesus lives! our hearts know well
Naught from us His love shall sever;
Life, nor death, nor pow'rs of hell
Tear us from His keeping ever.
Hallelujah!

Jesus lives! to Him the throne
High o'er heav'n and earth is given;
May we go where He is gone,
Rest and reign with Him in heaven.
Hallelujah!

again the question, must it have been? What was your victory, oh Christ?

Without acclaim, unnoticed, the sun had stolen above the hills and now its oblique rays crept up and suffused the dead, white wings in rosy-golden light. Remembrance soothed my doubts and brought knowledge rushing to my heart, for this dawn brought another Easter day. That dead bird would never fly again. No Spirit would quicken it to life. Not so our only Savior. The empty tomb is signal of His triumph. He is risen. "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory?"

Something to think About

How would you feel if you received The Mennonite with the front page blotted with ink, the titles of articles in different heads, many words in the articles misspelled, and one or two articles incomplete? One would be very displeased and, quite naturally, the editor would hear many complaints about the issue and perhaps some would cancel their subscription. Why don't things like this happen? Because all those concerned with the paper work together. The editor makes sure all material is complete before sending his manuscript to the press, those running the press try to set the type the way it has been specified, the proofreader trys to catch all mistakes before the issue finally comes off the press. All work together to put before the public something attractive and worth reading. You say to yourself, "Isn't this the way it should be? How else would an issue be fit to read?"

What about the church? Aren't we all to be working together to put before the public something that is worth-while? How can a church move forward when there is a continual squabbling and quarreling? Can we, the young people and future leaders of the church, help it to move forward with one accord and find ways to help everyone work together?

A 1-W Unit Leader Sees a Challenge in Nursing

I have always held the nursing vocation high on my list, but since working in a general hospital as an orderly, I have even greater respect for nurses.

A nurse must have outstanding patience. Sick people can be so demanding and so unreasonable that the patience of a nurse must be more than average. Each patient feels that he is the sickest one in the hospital and as such wants the most service. At times it is next to impossible to give him this service. There may be twenty to thirty-five patients to care for and the nurse cannot spend all his or her time with one patient.

As a nurse or orderly, what does one say to a patient in his late teens who has bone cancer and wants to know when he will be able to go home? What does one say to a patient who has luekemia and wants to know when he can go home? What does one say to a patient who has just been shot in the stomach and is in great pain? What does one say when a patient tells you that he is to lose his leg, or legs tomorrow? What would you do if you got slapped in the face by a patient whom you are feeding? What would you say if a patient cursed you and swore at you while you were trying to help make him comfortable? What does one say to a patient who has a broken back and is paralyzed from the waist down, when he becomes downhearted? What does one do when a patient who has had a stroke and is paralyzed on one side asks you something and you cannot understand him because he cannot move his lips properly, or when an elderly patient with a broken leg or hip becomes so discouraged that he just gives up hope of recovery? What does one say to a patient who, silently, is scared to death of surgery the next day? Those are a few of the problems nurses and orderlies meet each day of their work.

However, it is not all like this. The nurse and orderly get their reward when they see a patient recover and leave the hospital in good health. It makes them feel as if he has helped in a small way to ease the suffering in this world.

Since working in the general hospital these past months I have had my eyes opened to many things. I see that the patient needs the help of someone with a great deal of patience and love. I see the need for more Christian nurses and orderlies. This is one way of showing love to fellow men who need it in a real way. Yes, it is hard work and little pay, but pay day comes when a patient recovers and goes home. It makes one feel good inside to know that he has helped give him back good health. All of the hard work seems like nothing when one sees men get well and go home. I am truly thankful for the opportunity of working in a general hospital. It has shown me much that I did not realize before.

In conclusion I would like to say that if as a Christian girl or boy, you want to serve your fellow men with love, try working in a hospital, general or mental. I hope more Christian girls will become nurses and more Christian fellows will work as orderlies to help our fellow men to better health.

Methodist Youth Uphold Conscience

The National Conference of Methodist Youth, on August 27, 1954, passed ten resolutions, of which five were concerned with the problem of war. They are as follows:

"I. We believe that Christianity and war are inherently incompatible. Christianity affirms that the law of God is the ultimate fact to which man is responsible. War regards the law of the biggest battalions as the final authority (to which man is responsible). Christianity upholds the dignity of human personality. War reduces human personality to an instrument of equivocating national policies . . . . We therefore hold that it is the Christian's obligation to oppose the way of war and to identify himself with those forces which truly seek peace . . . .

"II. We hold in fellowship every Christian who acts according to his deepest understanding of the will of God in his approach to the problem of war, whether he be a conscientious objector, participant, or nonregistrant . . . .

"III. The National Conference opposes in principle any type of universal military training . . . .

"IV. We, the National Conference oppose compulsory ROTC on any educational level . . . .

"X. The Christian gospel of love, brotherhood, and the worth of the individual demand that we oppose methods of mass destruction of human life. . . ."

Members of the cast are: Marian Kaufman, Charles Hamm, Maynard Janzen, Darlene Galle, and Lowell Teichroeb.

Bethel College debaters, Carol Gering, Kay Ewert, Marian Kaufman, and orators, Horton Flaming and Dale Mueller with their coach and instructor, William T. Wilkoff, will leave Newton April 1 for Redlands, California, to attend the National Pi Kappa Delta convention to be held at the University of the Redlands.

Janver Krehbiel, freshman at Bethel College, was awarded a certificate of merit at the annual audition sponsored by the Women's Federated Clubs of the Seventh District held March 16 in the First Methodist Church, Hutchinson.

This was Janver's second year of participation and the award of the certificate will entitle him to enter competition next year. Janver was sponsored by the Pretty Prairie Study Club which has previously sponsored Florine Voran and Marjorie Waltner, both former students at Bethel.

Son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. R. Krehbiel of Pretty Prairie, Janver has participated in musical activities while in high school at Pretty Prairie and is at present singing tenor in the Bethel College Vocal Ensemble directed by Elvera Voth. The selections he used in the audition were, "Du Bist Die Ruh," and "I Am Thy Harp."

"The Seven Last Words" by Du Bois will be presented by the Mennonite Singers of Bethel College, Sunday, April 3, at 3 p.m., in the college Memorial Hall as announced by Dr. W. H. Hohmann, director of the choral group.

Soloists for this thirty-third annual event of the Easter season are Leona Kaufman, soprano; Marles Preheim, tenor; and Bruce Loganbill, bass. A small orchestra will accompany the singers. Helen Zerger will be at the piano.

Mennonite churches in the Bethel College constituency area have been organized into Bethel Fellowship districts, several of which have already had Booster Banquets or dinners to promote the interests of Bethel College.

There will be further banquets and district Fellowship meetings in the constituency area of the college. Each district promotes the interests of Bethel College in whatever way it finds most agreeable. Many districts have in the past two years used the booster banquet to which tickets are issued to people who donate $10 or more to the college.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Four members of the Peace Club, Palmer Becker, Allen Schmidt, Helen Voth, and Winona Waltner and their advisor, Orlando Goering, attended the 6th annual meeting of the Intercollegiate Peace Fellowship of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges at Tabor College, Hillsboro, Kansas, last week. Freeman has 15 Peace Club members this year.

Petrea Bruun, a college freshman, placed first in the vocal division in an audition held on the University campus, March 5. The audition was sponsored by the National Federation of Music Clubs. This entitles her to an audition in the district contest held at Minneapolis, March 26. She was also awarded tuition and expenses for a six-week opera workshop at Pennsylvania College for Women at Pittsburgh, this summer.

Elmer Ediger who visited the Freeman community to help organize church groups into disaster relief units spoke in chapel March 14. He centered his talk around the question, "When Was God Most Real in Your Life?"

On April first the Peace Club and the Freeman Ministerium sponsored a one-day Peace Institute. The speaker was Dr. Henry H. Crane. In the forenoon he spoke in chapel, in the afternoon and evening he spoke in Pioneer Hall. Dr. Crane, who is one of the outstanding Christian pacifists of our country, has an interesting background. On his father's side he is a fifth generation Methodist minister and now that his son Frank is also a minister, they have the unique distinction of having six generations in the ministry. Dr. Crane is known in Freeman, having served as Founders' Day speaker in 1950.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

The Dublin Players, celebrated company of actors from abroad, will appear in Bluffton's Founders Hall on April 22, at 8:00 p.m., in George Bernard Shaw's play "Pygmalion."

Called one of the foremost acting companies of our time, it is made up of the finest actors from Ireland. The company is now completing another leg of its coast to coast tour of American cities presenting great Irish and English classics and modern plays.

recognition were: Catherine Diller, Eleanor Wismer, Earl Campbell, Walter Shelly, John Basinger, Edmund Leech, Betty Brown, Martha Jo Emerick, Marion Keeney, and Els van Lier.

Dr. Robert Kreider, dean, was elected to serve as a member of the North Central Association Committee on Liberal Arts Education for the academic year 1955-56. This committee is responsible for establishing the policies for the North Central Study, a program of co-operative study in which approximately 70 midwest accredited liberal arts colleges are engaged.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Gerrit Veendorp gave the morning message at the Woodlawn Mennonite Church on March 20. Gerrit, a member of the senior class, comes from the Leiden Mennonite Church, Leiden, Holland. "Forgiving Love" was the theme of his message.

Dr. Pannabecker returned March 19 from a trip east. While in New York City he attended the annual meeting of the Japan Committee of the Division of Foreign Missions in behalf of the Mission Board. He also visited former and future students of the Seminary.

The week of March 21-25 Dr. Jesse M. Bader gave the Wieand Lectures on Evangelism at Bethany Biblical Seminary. Dr. Bader is General Secretary of the World Convention of the Church of Christ (Disciples).

Rev. and Mrs. J. N. Smucker and Rev. and Mrs. Paul Wenger journeyed to Bluffton, Ohio, the week end of March 19-20. While there they attended the dedication service for the new Memorial Home in Bluffton.

The combined choirs of the Woodlawn Mennonite Church and the Calvary Baptist Church, 80th and Crandon, are preparing to present DuBois' "Seven Last Words" during the coming Easter season. The rendition at the Woodlawn Church is scheduled for the evening of April 6, and at the Calvary Baptist Church on April 10.

April 14 the Freeman College Choir is scheduled to present an evening concert at the Woodlawn Mennonite Church.

REPORTS HEARTENING RESPONSES IN BUENOS AIRES WORK

Martin Duerksen, who serves the approximately 500 Mennonites in the vicinity of Buenos Aires, Argentina, writes of recent heartening responses to the presentation of the gospel and various church services. A number of young people found new life in Christ at the youth retreat held in February, Brother Duerksen reports. He also tells of a good response to the ministry of Abram G. Neufeld, a representative of the General Conference Mennonite Board of Missions. G. B. Giesbrecht, Mennonite Brethren missionary, planned to visit Buenos Aires in April. Several persons are preparing for baptism. The work in Buenos Aires is difficult because Mennonites in the area are widely scattered and because of some indifference toward the work of the Church. The independent Mennonite congregation in Buenos Aires has achieved government recognition and deserves the prayers of Christians that it might become a more vital force in the lives of Mennonite residents in the area. Brother Duerksen is pastor of the congregation.

APPLICANTS FOR PAX SERVICE NEEDED

Draft-age Mennonite and Brethren in Christ men interested in fulfilling their alternative service requirements through PAX (the MCC overseas rehabilitation program for drafted conscientious objectors bearing the Latin word for "peace") are urged to register their interest with MCC or their conference office.

An immediate need for PAX applicants is for 25 men early this summer as replacements for Germany. These men will continue the construction of refugee housing projects.

Similar overseas opportunities for 1-W service develop from time to time for young men interested in applying their manual skills in their Christian witness for peace. An expression of interest on the part of a young man enables MCC to explore and develop such projects as are suited to his interests and ability. And at the same time, such registration of interest may well result in a young man's finding a service opportunity to his liking when a project suddenly develops.

The LeTourneau project in Peru is an example. Several draft-age fellows with mechanical skills and interests had indicated their desire for foreign service many months before ready to begin work. When the Peru PAX project was initiated, these fellows found work to their liking. And at the same time, had these applicants not been available, such a project would not have developed so quickly.

Dietrich H. Epp, publisher and editor of Der Bote, Rosthern, Sask., passed away on Thursday night, March 31, two days after his eightieth birthday.

A very active and vigorous worker, he edited Der Bote for nearly 32 years, the paper being originally planned as an organ of communication for the Mennonites that escaped from Russia after World War I. He was its founder, publisher, and editor. In 1947 Der Bote was merged with Der Christlicher Bundesbote and the paper became a General Conference publication with Cornelius Krahn as assistant editor. It serves Mennonites in Canada, United States, Europe, and South America. Epp made of Der Bote one of the finest German Mennonite papers in existence.

D. H. Epp was born March 29, 1875, in Chortitza, Russia, where his father, Heinrich Epp, taught in the well-known Chortitza secondary school (Zentralschule). Later his father became elder of the large Chortitza Mennonite Church, of which his grandfather, David Epp, had also been elder. D. H. Epp received a good training in Mennonite schools and was one of the first Mennonites to attend the University of St. Petersburg, after which, at the age of 20, he became a teacher of the Chortitza Zentralschule in which capacity he served from 1895 till 1923. In 1923 he left Russia and settled in Rosthern, Sask., establishing a publishing house in which he printed Der Bote, The Saskatchewan Valley News, Conference and other publications.

In Russia Epp held many positions in the educational realm as well as other phases of public life. In Canada he was the chairman of the Central Mennonite Immigration Committee (1925-1934), chairman of the Board of Directors of Rosthern Junior College, mem-

"TO TEACH THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST EFFECTIVELY"

The subject will be recognized as one of the objectives for the Mennonite in 1955. Why should the churches of our Conference give themselves wholeheartedly to the task of teaching the gospel of Christ? Judging by support given to Christian education projects, scant attention is given to Christian teaching in some quarters. What are the consequences of our failure to teach? In the long run experience demonstrates it results in a lack of Christian discipleship, spiritual immaturity and instability, formalism, and fruitlessness. Weaknesses in our churches and on the mission field can be traced directly to our failure to teach the gospel of Christ.

What is included in the teaching ministry of the Church? Stated briefly it includes all efforts and processes which help to bring persons into a vital and saving experience of God revealed in Christ and thereafter stimulating, instructing, and guiding them in their growth toward the fulfillment of Christian character. Christian education is not a man-made process of lifting ourselves into the kingdom by our own bootstraps! Christian growth is God's work. It is man taking great pains to see that what he does is in line with what God does. It is following Paul's counsel to the Philippians, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." In the religious realm we see clearly that there is no age limit for spiritual growth.

Why should the Church teach? The ministry of teaching is not something the Church may or may not do. It is something the Church must do. There are three compelling reasons why we must teach the gospel of Christ.

In the first place Jesus commanded us to teach. "Go therefore and teach all nations . . . teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you . . . ." The Church must not only preach Christ; it must also teach Christ. If we question Jesus' intention of accenting teaching in the Great Commission we are still faced with His example. He taught everywhere and under all circumstances and by all possible means: He taught in parables, in conversations, stories, in sermons, and by friendly example. He taught in the fields, by the lake side, on the water, on the highways, in the home, from the hillside, and in the synagogues. He taught the apostles, His disciples, the common people, children, tax-gatherers, the publicans and sinners. So much did Jesus teach and with such consummate skill that His disciples called Him Master which means, Teacher.

Our job is not done when persons repent and believe. This is the beginning and from that point they must be led on step by step until they so understand their faith that they can bear convincing witness to it by word and deed. Fellowship with God should become a growing experience through reverent meditation and prayer. The will of the Father must become the deciding factor in solving life's perplexing problems. A growing understanding of the Bible and training for Christian service are important aspects of this new life. The obligations of church membership must be understood and its missionary program must be presented. This kind of a program can only be sustained and carried forward by the creative teaching ministry of the Church. The Christian leader who refuses to come down from his platform and to participate in the work of teaching is like the farmer who scatters seed on the land and refuses to do anything until the harvest.

We can judge the importance that was set upon teaching by the example of the apostolic church when we consider the large numbers who in response to the gospel were asking to be received into the church. Whether they had a Gentile or Jewish background, they required a period of instruction and rethinking if they were actually to leave behind their old world and become in any full sense sharers in the kingdom of Christ. The thoroughness with which this work of re-education was done in the early church by helping new converts to become effective Christian disciples should make us aware of the importance of the ministry of teaching.

In the second place we must teach in order to keep our direction in an environment which is pagan in so many ways. We live in a confused world with conflicting ideologies and where the standards of the market place tend to dominate our lives. In so many ways the impact of evil upon our lives dulls our spiritual sensitivity. Take for example the case of the new Sunday school teacher who when he is first called upon to teach feels and thinks and acts more like a member of such a society than he does like the Christian who understands the meaning of the gospel for the day in which he lives. He has become so much a part of the world that it is difficult for him to be a constructive critic of it in terms of Jesus' teaching. If this is true of some teachers what shall we say of the average Christian? Someone must help us understand the meaning of the gospel for daily living so that we can make truly Christian choices. It is at this point that the Church must teach the gospel of Christ. It must proclaim the truth so often reiterated by John and Paul that the Christian is being saved from the power of sin. It must speak against all wrongdoing and in this age of moral relativism proclaim what is right and what is wrong. The church is the avowed enemy of everything that threatens God's purpose for man and would make out of him something different from what he ought to be.

A third reason for the necessity of the teaching ministry of the Church is the fact that for any program of world-wide outreach we must have strong churches at the home base. The architect who plans a tall building knows that it must be based on bedrock. It seems strange that Isaiah should have reminded us of this principle long ago. Looking forward to a day when the knowledge of the Lord would fill the earth, he challenged his countrymen to

The Petitions of the Lord's Prayer

FRANK R. MITCHELL

Before we study the various petitions of the Lord's Prayer it will be helpful if we stop to consider them first in a general way.

Jesus put these petitions in a few brief sentences. It is evident that He meant to show how simply and yet comprehensively all of men's needs can be expressed in prayer to God. His pattern prayer is found to be elemental, complete and perfect. Nothing necessary has been left out and not one word can be omitted. It is one unit and it is indivisible. It clings together. The invocation is not a part of the petitions, but the petitions grow out of the invocation. Likewise the petitions are inseparable and grow out of each other. They are in their proper order and they may not successfully be transposed.

In many of the treatments of the Lord's Prayer an attempt has been made to divide the prayer into two parts with three petitions directed toward God and the rest of the prayer taken up with the earthly problems and needs of men. This interpretation sees Jesus classifying the petitions into two distinct sections—one which has to do with the things of God, and the other which is concerned with men's earthly struggles and needs.

However, in the words "in earth as it is in heaven" Jesus seems to be taking the opposite position. For Him all life is one. He would avoid compartmentalizing spiritual and temporal needs. His words express the desire to bring heaven on earth and to bring earth into heaven. The two-part theory tends to set one petition up against another in a way which seems inconsistent with Jesus' purpose.

The petitions are so familiar that it may come as a surprise to discover that they are not all actually cast in the form of petitions or requests. The first three petitions do not ask for anything, but have the nature of trustful affirmations yielding consent to God in His character and work. They have the spirit of a wholehearted response to God; a full co-operation with Him; a glad going along with, or a walking with God. Our desires become significant when they harmonize with God's desires. When our requests can be made to express His will, then it is that His promise comes alive in us: "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you," John 15:7.

The language of the three petitions, "Hallowed be thy name," "Thy kingdom come," "Thy will be done," then, expresses much more than a simple petition. These three with their fervent spirit clothe all the other petitions with warm confidence and trust in God. It is the sure-footed method of Jesus' own praying. His deep joy and exulting assurance are in God. He himself is here in the midst of His petitions.

This brings us to the last point of our preparation. How many petitions are there in the Lord's Prayer? It seems strange that in the seeming simplicity of the prayer there could be such a diversity of interpretation. There are at least seven good answers to this question. The answer depends upon what we mean by petition.

There are those who see only one petition in the prayer. "Thy kingdom come" includes all other prayers. Jesus says "Seek ye first the kingdom of God . . . and all these things shall be added unto you," Matt. 6:33. All the other petitions compliment this master prayer.

There are those who see two petitions in the prayer. The two foci "Thy kingdom . . ." and "give us . . . bread" representing the mysterious co-operation between the spiritual and the material around which all life seems to revolve.

Others see only three petitions in the prayer, "give us," "forgive us," and "lead us," with "deliver us" explaining "lead us."

Much might be said in favor of the position that there are actually only four true petitions which are the last four. In this position as well as the preceding one the petitions are prefaced by the three expressions of confidence and trust in the beginning of the prayer.

Those who see five petitions follow the prayer as it is found in Luke with the two petitions omitted, "Thy will" and "deliver us."

Many hold to six petitions making the "deliver us" equivalent to "lead us."

Finally, there are those who see the seven distinct statements as petitions. This position we hold because we do not see any repetition in the prayer. All of the parts are needed and have their unique place. We do not feel that Jesus was influenced by the number seven. Next month we shall try to consider each one briefly but carefully.

CORRECTION. The next to the last word in the third paragraph in last month's paper should be changed from "any" to "this."

Highly recommended for family night program, the film will hold the interest of all ages. The story centers around a dispute that develops between neighbors when a relative visits one of the families and breaks down a fence. The visiting relative represents a typical blustering, non-Christian get-what-you-can approach. The host family, however, is not interested in taking advantage of the situation but wants to have good neighborly relations. The picture demonstrates the goal and way of Christian love in its efforts for direct settlement. Such a film could profitably be followed by a discussion on how we can help to settle disputes in our own community without the use of courts.

Flashes of Thought

Satisfaction

Walter Gering

I thought he would run her ragged. Up and down the aisle she kept going all day long. It was perfectly evident from the very start that this little fellow was going to be the life of the party. Only four years old, he was the attraction of the whole section of the coach. As the train went speeding along his alert mind raced from question to question. There was hardly a moment in which his shrill little voice did not ring through the car.

He was on his way home to see his parents. After an extended visit with his grandparents he was on his way back home to Virginia. Three months had passed very quickly. All in all, it had been an exciting time and it was no wonder that he was bubbling over with excitement. Only after hours of travel did he finally drop off to sleep.

But the moment he awoke it was the same procedure. Once again there started the regular trip up and down the aisle. You see, at the end of the car was the water fountain with its fascinating cups and spout. I was never quite sure; was he really so thirsty all day long or was it the fountain itself which intrigued him?

No one will ever know. Probably little boys are made that way. He was only repeating a procedure which many a little fellow has pursued in his day. Water fountains will never lose their appeal to the boys. They were born to be thirsty.

So are we! Deep within the soul of man there is a thirst for living water. We may not always recognize it; there may be times when we seek to brush it aside. But we were made that way and we shall never know what it means to live until we yield to the desire and drink of the Living Water.

The words of Jesus are still the challenge which comes to all of us. "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

LORD, GIVE US THIS WATER THAT WE THIRST NOT

The Year of Jubilee

"My heart is so full of joy it can find no adequate words to express the innermost feelings. . . . The everlasting true and all-governing God and Father has at last brought it to pass that the banner of the Cross shall also be erected by Mennonites among the Indians who are so often unjustly dealt with. Thanks and praise be to God!" So said Daniel Krehbiel in 1880, when our work among the American Indians was first opened. Now, seventy-five years later, we thank God for the more than one thousand Cheyennes and Arapahoes who have come into the new life in Christ Jesus. In these years we have been permitted to see mission work in other areas as well begun and prosper. Truly, God has done great things for us.

Our missionaries are publishing a descriptive pamphlet highlighting our work in Oklahoma.

It is especially fitting that this Jubilee is being celebrated at Canton, Oklahoma, on CONFERENCE SUNDAY, APRIL 24. This climaxes the services held at Seiling, Thomas, Hammon, Longdale, Concho, Clinton, and Fonda, Oklahoma.

Diamond Jubilee of Mission Work

AUGUST SCHMIDT

The year 1955 is a milestone of great importance in our Conference. This year we will celebrate the diamond jubilee of our first foreign mission undertaking. Through the leading of the Holy Spirit the first field was among the Arapaho and Cheyenne Indians in Oklahoma. Before the field was selected it was studied from every angle: the spiritual need of the Indians, the level of their social and economic life and the work it would take to win them to the Lord Jesus Christ as their Savior. It was with some misgivings that the task in this difficult field was undertaken.

The difficulty of the task at that time was not primarily due to the fact that it was hard to win the confidence of these Indians or that they lacked intelligence or their low moral and economic condition. On the contrary these conditions have probably been less favorable among other peoples and yet great advances have been made in less time than we have labored here in this field.

The difficulties here were primarily of a different nature. The Cheyenne Arapaho Indians had been for several centuries free roving nomads. The time when our Conference took up mission work among them marked the end of this free hunting, roving life. Their spirit had been broken by the encroachments of the white man and the government's policy of confining them on reservations. They had been a proud independent people; now they were forced to submit. Since their former means of livelihood, hunting, was taken from them the government felt obligated to support them with food and clothing until the time when they would be able to take care of themselves again, so a program of paternalism was begun which to a more or less degree has been kept up to the present time. As a result of this program the Indians have been taught to look to the government for a solution of many of their problems of subsistence, education, and training.

History teaches us that when governments have carried on such a paternalistic policy of supplying their people with all material needs initiative, self-reliance and moral vigor have been retarded or have vanished. We have an example in the people of the later Roman Empire or the trend toward such conditions in the modern socialistic welfare states and also in the communistic states of the Iron Curtain countries.

Our Indians have been subjected to such unfavorable conditions. In spite of all these difficulties many were well on their way toward an independent vigorous self-sufficient life when the depression brought on the New Deal government. Through the Indian Bureau our government encouraged and made it easy for the Indians to return to former tribal customs and practices, some of them pagan. These conditions have had their influence on their spiritual and religious life. Much of the work that had been done by our missionaries and also government and other welfare agencies was set back as greatly retarded. From a religious and spiritual viewpoint it has brought confusion and instability of character, they are easily swayed by every "wind of doctrine" and unwilling to assume responsibility.

We praise God, however, for those who in spite of all difficulties have grown into mature Christians, who are taking responsibilities, who are deeply concerned about the eternal welfare of their own people. The seed of the Word of God has been faithfully sown and as we lift up our eyes we see the field white unto harvest. Our prayer is that the Lord of the harvest may send forth the reapers to garner in the precious souls before it is too late.

Then and Now

It is seventy-five years this spring since our General Conference began its mission work and the work was begun in Oklahoma, or Indian Territory as it was called at that time. If those early missionary pioneers that began the work here could see the field now they would find many changes.

At that time the Indians were still more or less nomadic. They had just shortly before been assigned to their reservation. They at that time lived mostly in large camps in tents and tepees. Now most of them live on their own land in frame houses. Some do their own farming, while others lease their land to the white man. Many also move to surrounding towns or to larger cities where there is more opportunity to earn a living. About ten families have been living at Medicine Lodge, Kansas, over 100 miles north of here, where they work in a gypsum mill, in construction work, etc. Monthly services are provided for them from here.

When missionary work began here there was hardly a Christian among the Indians. During the past three quarters of a century, however, many have been baptized upon confession of their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Savior. Many of these have gone on to be with their Lord. In our own district, which includes Longdale, Cantonment, Fonda, and Seiling, 332 have been baptized. At present there are 151 living church members. Others are receiving baptismal instruction now and are to be baptized in the near future. Sunday and midweek services are held at all the above churches with the exception of Cantonment. At Seiling the meetings have been held in the Indian homes for the last few years. However, since it was often hard to accommodate all that attended the Board of Missions bought a church building at a little town about thirty miles away and moved it on to a vacant lot at Seiling, which adjoins a house that was also bought and which is to serve as a parsonage. The church building is being remodeled and renovated under the supervision of Rev. H. T. Neufeld and is to be dedicated before long. The church will be greatly appreciated by both Indians and missionaries. It is very gratifying to have so many Indians as well as members of neighboring churches (and even from churches 200 and more miles away) come to help on the building, donating much or all of their time.

Linguistically also a great change has taken place. Seventy-five years ago there were hardly any of the Indians that spoke English. At present there are very few that do not speak some English and some of the smaller children hardly learn to speak Cheyenne at all. With the older ones, however, Cheyenne is still the mother tongue in which they can express themselves best. When it comes to communing with the Lord in prayer Cheyenne is the most natural mode of expression. This is easy to understand for those who have grown up in one language and later acquired another one. The same also applies to singing. While we sing many English songs, they also like to sing the Cheyenne translations of the same, and perhaps best of all those songs where words and music have been composed by some of their own people. It is not of great significance whether we use English or Cheyenne when we commune with the Lord in song or prayer. The most important is that we do speak to Him and that we understand when He speaks to us through His Spirit. As everywhere, so here, the future of the church is with the children and young people. We are glad for the interest these show in spiritual things. Our hope and prayer is that the time may not be too distant when Oklahoma will no longer be a mission field but when the Indians will have their own teachers and preachers. And not only that but when missionaries will go out from here to other parts of the world.

—Alfred Wiebe

American Indian Testimonies

We read in Acts that after the Day of Pentecost there were added to the church daily those who were being saved. These early Christians went everywhere witnessing to the saving power of the gospel. Among the Indians also has this been true. Eternity alone will reveal the results.

The Oklahoma missionaries have asked some present day Indian Christians to write a brief statement for The Mennonite. May these testimonies raise many prayers of thanksgiving in the hearts of readers, and then bring about a resolve to renewed intercession for all young Christians everywhere.

—Arthur Friesen

I am a Christian because I know the Lord Jesus is true. I believe and trust Him as my personal Savior since I became a Christian. I want to live a better life and praise His name.

LaVerne Lime, Cheyenne

I'm going to become a Christian, because I believe and trust in Him. I want to follow Him and be saved from sin, and I'll live a better life.

Ralph L. Raven, Arapaho Indian

I enrolled in the fall of 1899 at the Mennonite Indian Mission School at Cantonment, Oklahoma. I was the smallest boy in school at that time. The school was soon closed as a government school was opened just east of the Mission School. The government school was soon filled as all Indian children of school age were enrolled and so some of us that went to the Mission School were sent to another government boarding school down at Darlington, Oklahoma. There was also an abandoned Mennonite Mission School building at that place.

That was in 1901 and 1902. After that I was enrolled in the boarding school at Cantonment. In 1906 I was baptized in the Mennonite church at Cantonment by Rev. John A. Funk.

In 1909 to 1912, I enrolled at Haskell Institute, an Indian school, at Lawrence, Kansas. Ever since then I have been here at home in Canton.

For our new church I had a part in the ground breaking ceremony. I also helped to build our church. I have tried to be a faithful Christian and help in the church work, for our Lord.

Bill Williams, Arapaho Indian, age 61

"For in Him we live and move and have our being," Acts 17:28.

When about 9 years of age I accepted the Lord at the Mennonite Church at Cantonment and have been a member for over 50 years. During the first World War I had an experience in the hospital in Paris, France. I began to pray and from that time I began to go to church. I also began to work in the church as interpreter for Mr. Wiebe and Mr. Friesen.

Walter Fire, Arapaho Indian, born August 9, 1895

In October, 1940, while at work in a timber land on fuel wood as a hired laborer for my neighbor, the day unusually hot for the season of the year, I rested during the day for short periods and in the lull there came upon me thoughts of my conduct of my life and I wondered why it was that I must labor so extremely hard when not even a soul was about to see to it that I worked productively for the meager pay that I was receiving for that sort of rough work.

There are a good many thoughts and thinking of that day and of all sorts which in the final analysis the one and only sole thought to linger in my mind before the day ended was to make a definite decision of my future on that day. I felt as if something was urging me because of the fact that at a very young age I was converted a Christian and having backslid for many years and now it dawned upon me that my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ was calling me more strongly than ever before to correct my life of sin and repent. I thank my Lord Jesus and I thank Him again always how on that October evening, not knowing how to pray fervently and reverently, I humbly with an effort offered up a prayer of forgiveness of all my sins that I ever committed to that date of the visitation that I had sensed it was, because of the fact from thence I have gradually aspired to do and live an improved life and I do not regret to this date that my decision on that beautiful autumn day was to live for Jesus Christ and His teaching.

Bertha Little Coyote, Cheyenne

I am glad I am a Christian for I know what a joy and life worth living is, with Christ in my life. I'd hate to think of living without Jesus as my helper and Redeemer. Pray for me that I may be a true Christian.

Kate Osage, Cheyenne

When I was 14 years of age I accepted the Lord in 1907. My people always took us to church. In 1920 Miss Williams (missionary) took care of my mother while she was sick and we lived near the church as janitor for Miss Williams and Miss Kinsinger. I have worked as helper in the church with Mr. Linscheid, Mr. Toews, Mr. Friesen, and Mr. Wiebe.

I am glad I learned to read Cheyenne. The Lord has blessed me in every way. God has answered my prayers many times. I have had much sickness in the family and often no money to take them to the doctor or to the hospital. I just prayed and the Lord made them well. I have never gone back and have not gone to other churches, though many have asked me to.

Guy Heap of Birds, Clinton, Cheyenne

I was born March 16, 1903. I became a Christian in 1918. I was raised by Christian parents.

In 1918 I was down with flu and pneumonia. I was down in bed for two and one-half months. When the crisis came two doctors agreed I would not live. My father prayed all that night. I heard part of the prayer. From then on I became better.

Two weeks later my father carried me to a window and showed me the church and said always go and serve it for God. Three years later my father died. Again three years later I joined the regular army for three years.

I came back and went to church now and then. Then Rev. Ediger began to teach me how to serve God. I didn't ask him and he didn't ask me. The Spirit of God was working. Then I prepared my first sermon. I picked out Scriptures that would force people to accept Christ. But God thought otherwise. We must win them through Jesus.

I had many wonderful experiences through the help of God. I fall and go again. God has been very gracious with me. Looking back and seeing what He has done for me and my family I began to plan to fill His house with people by giving them worldly promises. But He reminded me He wanted steadfast Christians and not temporary Christians.

Homer Hart

Mrs. Sophie Sanchez

Today I know that serving God is not just one day or one week or year but a lifetime, and to win Christians, His way not our way.

Homer Hart, Cheyenne, 37 years a lay minister. See picture.

There is not a friend like Jesus. I found that friend in my tender age. I came to Him in order that I may be saved. I learned more about Him by reading the Bible, attending meetings, thus slowly but surely gathering knowledge. Finally I realized that others needed a friend too.

Not too long after that I was soon interpreting for our missionaries to my people. Since I helped him on in the work we studied the Word of God together. The task is enjoyable to bring relief to a troubled soul. There are few who have seen the eternity to be with God. There is life forever for those who wish to live for God. We need help as the harvest is great. Who will help to throw out the lifeline? Read Psalm 39.

Mrs. Sophie Sanchez, Arapaho. See picture.

A year ago in January the Church Committee was appointed and I was asked to serve for a year. There were four adults, two women and two men, and one of the young people. Being one who was chosen to serve, I felt rather reluctant to accept the responsibility—not because I didn't want to work for the church, but I didn't know what the responsibilities were and I just felt I wasn't qualified for that position.

As I thought about it, I tried to decide whether or not to serve, then I thought this was a challenge for each one of us and so I accepted.

We meet once a month to discuss various problems and plan the work in our church. We also study the Word of God together which to me has been very interesting and helpful.

A year has passed since we were elected, a year of service to God, our church, and its members. With God's divine guidance much has been said, done, and accomplished.

Once again we have been asked to serve for another year. I do not feel reluctant to serve again, instead, I feel I am ready and I am willing to continue my work. In Luke 1:38 (Moffatt) Mary said, "I am here to serve the Lord. Let it be as you have said."

Too often when some new opportunity for service, or some needful task for us to perform comes to us we begin by making excuses and we repeat all the timeworn and wearisome excuses. Jeremiah was a reluctant prophet. He tried to evade the call by making excuses. He said he was too young and like Moses, Jeremiah also said he was no speaker. Even if he didn't want to be a prophet, Jeremiah obeyed God. He accepted God's choice for him and was faithful to the end. Tradition says he died a martyr's death.

All of us have times when duty seems unwelcome and often we let our own desires rule us and so fail to obey the voice of God. When we do this unhappiness follows. We enter the road to true living through the gate of obedience to God.

So I will continue my work for the church and trust the other committee members will have the same desire. I am sure we can continue to serve God, our church and the people who have placed this responsibility on us and we will endeavor to do the best we can.

In 1 Corinthians 3:6-11 we read that we are laborers together with God. Christ counts on us, everyone, from the youngest to the oldest. Unless we dedicate ourselves to God we cannot do His will.

In time of doubt and fear, temptation, criticism, hatred, and despair this poem has helped me to see how true God really is to all His children.

Mrs. Mousetrail has been a Christian for 25 years, while Mr. Mousetrail was baptized two years ago. Here are their testimonies:

Why I am a Christian: Because I believe the Lord is true. Since I was young I have attended church and know that some day I would be saved. That is why I was baptized to save my soul.

—Barbara Mousetrail

Why I became a Christian: Many years that I heard the word of God but delayed some way. Since I heard that the Lord Jesus is true in every way, then I believe and trust Him and was baptized in His name that some day I shall meet Him as He has promised. —Andrew Mousetrail

Light and Dark

One missionary writes, "Encouragements and disappointments alternate in the work. Here and there there is one that takes a new interest with the determination to live wholly for the Lord and before long the enemy gets him down again. 'Die Sach' ist Dein, Herr Jesu Christ die Sach 'an der wir stehn, Und weil es Deine Sach ist, kann sie nicht untergehn.' "

Another says, "We are happy that in some of the churches we have faithful members who have a concern for their own people and are working together with us. We lean heavily on these for help and advice and enjoy their fellowship in the gospel and in the work in the church. God is able who has called us into this work and we are certain that with the tasks will also give the necessary strength and wisdom to do them to His Own Honor and Glory."

We all need to remember the new converts who were baptized at Easter need our prayers very much, for the devil will not let them go easily. We know we can depend on you to intercede for them with us. We all need your prayers.

Mennonite Youth

Sponsored by the Young People's Union of the General Conference, Editor, Lois Duerksen, North Newton, Kansas

History of Deep Run Youth Group

General Background—The forming of a good working Youth Fellowship is no easy matter. To accomplish anything really worthwhile takes time and determination. It requires a great deal of patience and fortitude; especially when plans do not materialize according to schedule. It cannot be accomplished in a day, a month, or even a year.

We have always had a Youth Group at Deep Run. Originally we had two separate organizations, the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor. The Sunday school met every Sunday morning and Christian Endeavor one Sunday evening per month. Thus we had two separate programs and separate officers. But we felt the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor were not properly meeting the needs of the young people. There was not enough varied activity. There was no actual plan or method to follow. Therefore we tried to bring the two groups together with one set of officers, elected from both groups, to form a "Youth Council."

Youth Council Formed—This Council was formed and they planned the year's schedule of activities. It was at this time we first tried the three area emphasis. We alternated the activities so that one month we would have a fellowship meeting, and the next month a service project. With the C. E. program we had two meetings a month. This worked fairly well, although we still were lacking in so far as organization was concerned.

YPU Plan Adopted—Our pastor then introduced to us the YPU Youth Fellowship Plan, at a C. E. meeting. We discussed it back and forth, and at another meeting voted for the adoption of the YPU Youth Fellowship Plan. We were ready for the next step.

Our Present Youth Fellowship

Central Purpose Is in Christ—Before a youth group or any organization can form for a successful working unit, it is imperative that they are founded on a strong, sound foundation. They must have a unified purpose for forming and strive with utmost effort toward attaining that goal. In our group at Deep Run we have found that central purpose in Jesus Christ. We feel that all our efforts whether spiritual or social should be planned and carried out with the conception that Christ be placed at the center of all activity. In Jesus Christ lies the answer to all the problems that confront the bewildered, frustrated, and purposeless lives of many of our youth today. It is our belief that by elevating the position of our Creator to His true place in our lives we may find the answers to frustration and hopelessness and realize our purpose in His kingdom.

Pattern of Organization—The organization of our Youth Fellowship is primarily that which is suggested by Elmer Ediger in, "Youth Fellowship Manual for Local Church Groups" as published in August, 1953, by the YPU of the General Conference Mennonite Church. Our executive committee is composed of a president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and the three area chairmen. We follow the three area program as suggested by Mr. Ediger consisting of Christian Faith and Life, Christian Service, and Christian Fellowship. A chairman is elected for each area and is responsible with his two committee members to present one program each month. A constitution governing our organization was drawn up, mimeographed, and distributed to each of our members. This constitution was unanimously approved in November, 1954, and now serves as our guide and help to our leaders and members.

Faith and Life—the spiritual—The Christian Faith and Life area is the most important area of our organization because it emphasizes the spiritual aspect of our Christian life. We have one Sunday night meeting each month which is planned by the Faith and Life Committee. We feel that if a person is equipped with a strong spiritual conviction he will naturally take an active part in fellowship and service. Therefore the first and most important aspect of a Christian's life is spiritual. Our programs at Deep Run are planned with several goals in mind. First of all they must revolve around the spiritual. They also must be interesting and thought provoking. There must be variety in the types of programs presented. We have used panel discussions, topics, movies, skits, etc., to stimulate interest and encourage attendance. We plan to use debates, outside speakers, and outdoor programs in the coming year so that variety is continued. We also try to plan our programs so that a maximum number of people can participate. We feel that there is something that the "wallflower" type of individual can do. In the coming year we also plan to advertise our programs by sending post cards announcing meetings and making posters of coming events.

Christian Service—Motivated by love—The Christian Service Area is next in line as far as importance because it emphasizes our love for Christ through service to others. We try and have a service project each month in keeping with our over-all program. These projects are planned by the service committee when a need arises for service. The projects are planned with several goals in mind as are our religious programs. First for the person who is being served our goal is to bring him happiness and joy, show him his need for Christ, and instill in him a desire to serve. Second, we as servants want to be truly happy in serving, we want to increase our desire to serve Christ by helping others, and show our love for Him through service. Some of the service projects we plan to carry out this year are: rolling bandages for the Cancer Society, collecting toys and repairing them to be sent to a mission field, arranging our church harvest home display and then delivering the goods to the Frederick Home, and doing small jobs at the church should some arise.

Christian Fellowship—in Christ!—In the Christian Fellowship area the socials are also planned with Christ as the center of activity. We find that Christian Fellowship in a Christlike atmosphere is far more satisfying and rewarding than the types of recreation that are offered in taverns and dance halls. To a large extent our socials are dependent upon the seasons and holidays of the year. In the winter we plan ice skating parties, roller skating and bowling parties, indoor games, etc. In the fall we have a Halloween party, hayride, doggie roasts, etc. In spring and summer we take advantage of the outdoors by going on hikes, playing softball, picnics, swimming, and boating. These socials are planned by the Fellowship Committee and they are also responsible for the refreshments.

YPU Plan Meets Needs!—By adopting the Youth Fellowship Plan as suggested by the YPU we feel that we have been meeting the needs of the youth of our church more satisfactorily than we were in our previous programs. The three area emphasis of Faith and Life, Service, and Fellowship provides the necessary variety and balance needed to create a well adjusted young Christian. A Christian must have spiritual growth and the natural outgrowth of this attainment is the desire to help and serve others. This desire is met very aptly by the service area. A young person must also find release for excess physical energy. This need is met by the fellowship area which plans wholesome physical activities. With Christ as the center of the total program any youth group will surely achieve the desired results.

An Analysis and an Exhortation

"What Led to the Adoption of the Plan?"—In any form of organization, one thing is of utmost importance. You need an aim, purpose, or goal. There must be something toward which you strive, and which itself becomes a guide or rule by which you live and work.

This our group found in the YPU Plan, with its threefold emphasis of faith and life, fellowship, and service. We saw in it, a plan that would meet and fulfill the motives and desires that lay behind our searching for a Youth Fellowship Organization. As we review our progress, these several basic desires stand out. It was these that led to the adoption of the YPU Plan.

A Desire for Interesting Programs—The YPU Plan, if allowed to work, does fulfill this desire. The Program Helps, which now appear in The Mennonite, offer splendid suggestions for religious programs. Much can be done to make a discussion or program on matters of Christianity and the Christian life, something more than the usual "cut and dried" type. The suggestions are varied! There is opportunity for the local group to be original and creative. There is a challenge to make the programs interesting. The use of debates, round-table discussions, drama, music, panels, etc., all create an atmosphere of interest.

A Desire for An Integrated Program—This is the splendid feature of the YPU Plan. Imagine having three meetings a month, and each one of a different nature! Not only does it become extremely interesting, but it integrates the desires we have. We can be led to think about our Christian faith, express it in a service project, and project it in a party or social. There is also a very good feeling in knowing that you are a part of a program that is the adopted plan of the General Conference YPU.

A Desire for Activity—The YPU Plan is one that demands action! As young people we demand it! We want to do things! This plan will help you to action. Each month a religious meeting with a score of program ideas! Each month a service project—serving your fellow men in the name of Christ. Each month a fellowship meeting—getting to know each other and other young people better. Activity? Sure, this gives you plenty! We like it! Why not try it?

"It Will Work for You—IF"—The YPU Plan works! We tried it, and so we know! Oh, we have not nearly explored or exhausted the possibilities. And we went through the usual pains of adapting to something new. But we have begun and are eagerly pursuing other avenues of usage.

It will work for you too, if you are willing to do some very basic things!

Give It a Chance!—This Plan will not work as long as you think it won't. Give the Plan a chance! Do not feel because it is comparatively new or different it is faulty. Such thinking never results in progress. Find out about it! Talk to your pastor about it! Maybe he needs convincing too. Try it for a few years! (You cannot possibly test it in one year). It is only fair that you do this. You will find it will work, if you give it a chance.

Work with It!—The YPU Plan demands work. You must be willing to follow it and the suggestions it has. You must be willing to work hard at these. Did you ever hear of anything that was good and worth-while, that did not demand work? Two other important things must be mentioned here. First, each person must be willing to co-operate with the leaders and the group. Secondly, each person must be willing to do his share and accept his or her responsibility. This Plan, with its threefold emphasis, will work for your group—if you will work with it!

Dedicate Yourself to Christ!—This is very important! The YPU Plan is not the result of some wild, wishful thinking. It is a product of those who have dedicated themselves to Jesus Christ. It resulted from years of hard work and much prayer. This makes it an answer from God. Is it not only fair that each group also dedicate themselves to Him? A group, dedicated to Christ, using a plan, itself dedicated to His service, can be an instrument of effective Christian witnessing in a world that sorely needs just that.

A Word from Those in the Youth Fellowship

It is amazing how the members of the Youth Fellowship have adopted the YPU Plan, and have adjusted themselves to it.

Even more amazing and gratifying is the result this has had in the activity and interest of the group, and in the lives of individuals within the group.

Interest, co-operation, and acceptance of responsibility have been exceptional. There is free sharing of ideas, problems, and concerns. There is good support and attendance at all meetings—be it social, service project, or religious meeting.

We have made mistakes! There is room for much improvement! But the YPU Plan has shown us a whole new realm of activity. It certainly meets the needs of the age group (15-30). The work of dedicated young people, their eagerness to witness for and serve Christ, certainly is a splendid testimony to the work of the YPU Plan.

Claude F. Boyer
Pastor—Advisor

Upon taking my memory back the past year, with our Youth Fellowship, my thoughts roam to different meetings. The year was a year of learning and trying to solve different problems that arose.

I feel that the use of the three area emphasis has provided a well-balanced program, and has guided us in our daily living. It has given our youth a sense of responsibility and makes us an active part of our church. It provides wholesome recreation and fellowship.

I feel that every youth who belongs to this organization has an important part in making it work successfully.

Albert Tice
Member—Faith and Life Committee

I think Youth Fellowship means a group of Christian youth gathering to learn more about the Christian life, to learn to help others in a Christian way, and to fellowship together in a Christian way.

I find many of my problems solved after a Youth Fellowship, Faith and Life meeting. When a group of young people meet, many of the problems are identical.

I think Youth Fellowship is a wonderful organization for Mennonite youth, because the youth of today need an active organization in the church to keep them interested in church and the Christian way of life.

Robert Swartz
Treasurer

"Whee! Youth Fellowship tonight!"
That's the attitude I take. Why?

At our Youth Fellowship we don't just sit around and talk all the time; we get to know people better.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Several Bethel students, former students, and faculty members participated in a 1-W orientation program held in the Hoffnungsau Mennonite Church, Inman, Saturday, March 26.

Mennonite young people from surrounding churches of the different Mennonite groups were invited to this workshop set up by Rev. Albert Gaeddert, field secretary of MCC—1-W work, and Rev. Harold Duerksen, now serving the Hoffnungsau church.

Presentations on the CO and his work in 1-W service were made by Albert Gaeddert, Rein Peters, Paul Holdeman, Jesse Harder, and Elmer Ediger, with devotional messages by O'Ray Graber, Irvin Richert, and Arnold Nickel. 1-W and Voluntary Service personnel on the program were Don Burkhart, Delmar Reimer, Vernon Pauls, Willie Regehr, Delbert Goering, Loretta Goertz, Carol Gaeddert, Marlo Ediger, and Carl Thiessen.

Erwin Goering, college public relations director, served as discussion leader and Ozzie Goering, recreation director of the college, spoke on "Off-the-Job Activities" and directed a period of recreation before the evening meal.

The Concert Trio featuring two accordions and bass viol will be heard in Memorial Hall of Bethel College, Friday, April 22, at 8 p.m., as the final number of this year's Memorial Hall series.

Dean R. C. Kauffman attended the 60th annual meeting of the North Central Association held at Chicago, March 23-25. The emphasis at this meeting centered on the preservation of academic freedom especially as it is related to the activity of the faculty in using the freedom granted them in their work.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

"To have the personal experience of union with Christ is the greatest thing of life—that, and that alone, is life." These words, stated by Rev. Peter Dyck of Moundridge, Kan., summarize the main emphasis of the talks which he gave during Bluffton's annual Christian Life Week held March 22 to 25.

The morning series were centered around a brief survey of the Book of Colossians. Topics for the evening series were: "When Young People Remember," "Nonresistance Under Test," "Providing for Failure," and "Christ's Departure Our Advantage." This final message was part of an inspiring candlelight communion service which served as a fitting conclusion to the week of meetings and discussion groups.

Piano solos, vocal numbers, a string ensemble, and a Silver Tea were all included in the piano dedication held in Lincoln Hall (girls' dorm) on Sunday afternoon, March 27. The dorm became the proud possessor of this Hamilton baby grand piano through the united efforts of the girls, parents, friends, and campus organizations. Special projects have been carried on to help pay for the piano.

Coach A. C. Burcky was elected president of the Mid-Ohio League at a meeting of the League in Cincinnati on March 26. The Mid-Ohio League is comprised of seven colleges including Ashland, Findlay, Defiance, Cedarville, Wilmington, Ohio Northern, and Bluffton. At this meeting it was also decided that the track and tennis conference meets will be held at Bluffton this year.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

The Christian Youth Volunteers gave programs recently at the Kingsburg Church near Avon, and at the Salem KMB Church near Bridgewater.

Two rural schools taught by Verlyn Fast and Kathryn Kleinsasser presented a program to the student body during chapel on Thursday.

A representative of the Horace Mann Insurance Company spent some time on the campus seeing those interested in group insurance by this company. Horace Mann is endorced by the South Dakota Education Association as well as by fourteen other similar state associations and is limited to the teaching profession in its coverage.

Five students received straight "A" grades during the second quarter. They are: Marilyn Huber in the college, and Lola Eisenbeis, Rita Fliginger, LaVonne Graber, and John D. Unruh, Jr., in the academy.

We visit sick people, hospitals, and old folks homes. We do projects such as husking corn, painting some disabled family's porch, or dig a garden for someone that is not as capable as we are.

When you nervously stumble through a passage while leading devotions, or bruise your knee while roller skating—and not one teases you for it—that's Christian Youth Fellowship.

FIVE MORE PAX MEN DEPART FOR PERU

A farewell and dedication service for the second group of Mennonite PAX men made available to the R. G. LeTourneau colonization project in Peru was held in the Bethel Mennonite Church, Lancaster, Pa., on the evening of April 1.

Participating in the service were Mr. LeTourneau, well-known Christian industrialist, and his son, Roy, who is in direct charge of the Peru project. Following the service the five PAX men accompanied the LeTourneaus in their private plane to Longview, Texas, where they will spend several weeks in orientation before going on to Peru.

The names and addresses of the five men enroute to Peru: George R. Ediger, Inman, Kan.; Virgil R. Ewy, Kingman, Kan.; Stephen S. Stoltzfus, Elverson, Pa.; Owen M. Witmer, Salem, Ohio; and Paul M. Wyse, Harrisonburg, Va.

Their orientation will include instruction in the handling of diesel engines and land-clearing and road-building machinery. In Tournavista, Peru, they will join the five Mennonite and Brethren in Christ PAX men who have been with the LeTourneau organization since July 1, 1954. Five of the original 10 PAX men in Peru were transferred to Paraguay in December to aid in the construction of Mennonite colony roadways.

50 VACANCIES IN US SUMMER SERVICE

With April 30 as the deadline for submitting applications, there are still 50 opportunities for service in the summer Voluntary Service program in the United States. A good interest in summer service has filled approximately half of the 100 openings in the United States program.

The most pressing personnel needs are for workers in New York and California migrant camps, a child-care center in Wichita, Kan., and a community service workshop in Mexico. Men applicants are particularly needed. Persons interested in contributing a brief period of Christian service in these or other summer service projects are urged to express that interest at once by writing to the Voluntary Service office, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pa., or their conference headquarters.

The Mexico community service work camp, like several other projects, needs additional personnel if it is to materialize. Plans are for the party to meet in and leave Kansas around June 13, spend three weeks touring in Mexico and then spend four weeks in a work camp set up in the area of Cuauhtemoc—a region where Mennonites live and where MCC assists. The work camp will include study in Mexican history, culture, and related subjects.

CONTRIBUTED FOOD GREATLY APPRECIATED IN BERLIN

A report from Mrs. David P. Neufeld, Rosemary, Alta. MCC worker in Berlin, indicates how much contributed food is valued and appreciated by persons enjoying the services of Menno-Heim. "One week end a month some 35 to 50 Mennonites from the East Zone come to Menno-Heim. Here they receive food for the body as well as food for the soul and clothing to keep them warm. The meals we serve are plain and simple, but for them it's a real treat. When chicken noodle soup was served on one occasion, some regarded it as something very extra-special. They said they had not tasted chicken noodle soup for 10 years and had had such a craving for it. The lard, the beef, the cracklings (of which the Prussian Mennonites are so fond), the tasty chicken and the beef broth (which you in America contribute) all help to make each meal different and delicious."

PROJECT BEGUN IN WASHINGTON ORPHAN HOME

The assignment of Niel Kehler of Abbotsford, B. C., to German Orphan Home marks the beginning of a Voluntary Service unit in that institution in Washington, D. C. The administration of the home is eager to acquire the services of one more man and two women volunteers. German Orphan Home cares for 26 children ranging from five years on up until the time they are ready to seek an occupation. The institution has a very home-like atmosphere and volunteers assume the role of big brothers and sisters. Their work ranges from maintenance jobs to aiding children in their studies and music lessons. These associations offer many opportunities for volunteers to make an effective Christian impact upon the lives of the children. German Orphan Home is approved for 1-W service. The institution received its name from its founders who were of German immigrant origin.

fall in line with God's plan. "Enlarge the place of your dwellings," and "lengthen the cords . . . strengthen the stakes," he declared. In other words, if you want to enlarge the tent you must get longer, stronger ropes and drive the stakes down deeper.

This is God's way of enlarging His work. If we would successfully lengthen the mission and relief lines to India, Africa, Japan, Formosa, or any other needy part of the world we must have spiritually strong churches at home. We must send forth trained and spiritually qualified preachers, teachers, and missionaries. To back them up we need active, mature, consistent, praying, and giving Christians at the home base. The teaching church is dedicated to this task.

He was an active member of the Mennonite Church in Chortitza and of the Rosenort Mennonite Church at Rosthern. For many years he served as the director of a choir. Even during the last years of his life he maintained a vigor and alertness which characterized his whole life. He was a very popular educator, inspiring students to achieve high Christian ideals.

His eightieth birthday on Tuesday, March 29, had to be commemorated in all quietness. Two days later on Thursday night he passed away having lived not only a long life but a life which was filled with many tasks and activities in the service of the Lord and his fellow men.

Vocations Conference For Girls

This conference for students and young working girls will be held at the Salvation Army Camp near Wichita, April 22-24. It is hoped the conference will provide an opportunity for serious-minded girls to think through vocation and service questions from a Christian viewpoint.

The Conference is sponsored by a special committee of the Board of Christian Service in co-operation with representatives of the Western District Women's Missionary Association and the Bethel College Student Christian Fellowship. Norma Jost will serve as director of the two-day conference. Many other leaders will be present. Those interested should make inquiry with Elma Esau, 213 No. Pine, Newton, Kansas.

DEAR PREACHER: . . . A PROBLEM

Social Security for ministers of the gospel is now possible in the United States. An article on the following pages ably describes the Social Security Law recently enacted by the Federal government. To us who are already active pastors it poses a lifetime decision which must be made before April 15, 1957. But shall we preachers enter? Is it an opportunity or are there problems?

We believe there are problems to be faced. A problem does not presuppose a negative answer; it rather suggests a cautious evaluation.

Some of these problems are spiritual problems. For instance, the Church versus State problem. The following article states that the plan does not involve the local congregation. A Social Security officer in Sioux City, Iowa, pointed out to us that this was consciously planned to avoid Church-State entanglements and we may be grateful that this problem is seemingly avoided.

The Pastor versus State problem, however, is not avoided. Will the preacher and his message someday be harnassed to a demanding state? This is possible though our article argues against this convincingly that Social Security comes under the concept of a tax similar to and connected with the income tax a few ministers already pay.

The spiritual problem that should give us greatest concern is the Anabaptist versus State problem. The Anabaptist vision, as we understand it, does not demand that our preachers today support themselves with their hands, nor does it allow an aloof and coldly professionalized class called clergy, salaries notwithstanding. The Anabaptist vision, we believe, stresses the brotherhood of the believers, preachers, and people alike. If in the Mennonite Church there are at heart no "clergy" nor "laity" but brothers helping one another, what impact does government Social Security have upon our brotherhood ideal? Should we say, "Since we are brethren and many of our people are on Social Security, should not our preachers the same?" and let it go at that? Or should we say, "No, the brotherhood has failed to support the ministers, granting them an income equal to the average in the membership. Let us increase their salaries and pension plan to meet their old age needs." True and needful as this is, is this an argument for or against Social Security for pastors? Or, as a third alternative, should we say, "Social Security is outside the brotherhood. Let our ministers enter it, rendering unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, but let them carefully preserve the things of God."

Some of the problems of Social Security for ministers are economic problems. One of these is the Old versus Young problem. Pastors soon ready to retire will reap where they have not sown under this plan. Younger men in the ministry will pay in for many years. The latter may feel it unfair not to reap a similar windfall. In answer to this, someone has pointed out the analogy of the parable of the laborers in the vineyard. There all received the same reward which was a fair reward, even for those who began working in the morning. So, it is pointed out in Social Security, those who pay for 30 years or more receive a fair reward upon retirement.

Perhaps the key problem to all of Social Security comes at this point. That is the Present versus Future problem. Will the present legalized rates of yearly payments continue to 1975 and after as now contemplated, or will Social Security some day prove to be an overgrown Frankenstein monster with a bottomless pit appetite for taxes? To change the figure, some have called Social Security a "long, barbed hook." They say that 90 million people have been lured to "bite" on the present low Social Security payments. The bait was much for little. But once covered they will have no other choice but pay increasingly higher payments to offset the present windfall retirements and future deficiencies. They could not see how long and barbed was the hook on which they bit. So runs the argument and it gives one serious thoughts. Other economists strenuously deny such suspicions. So what shall a common country preacher do?

What do you think?

YOURS TRULY, . . . A DECISION!

Each minister must do something with Social Security. He must ignore, reject or accept it. We have weighed the issue with care and prayer and have come out on the acceptance side. But, let us quickly add, this is not a mandate for every minister. Some may say "No." But for ourselves, we may say "Yes." We say "Yes" not because the dangers mentioned in the above editorial are any less possible, but because the following reasons are more probable:

(1) We believe too many General Conference ministers are underpaid. From all appearances in many General Conference congregations ministers and their families have incomes much below the average in their membership. Is this the Anabaptist vision of brotherhood? Everybody talks about this but few do anything about it. Social Security for ministers may help here.

(2) We believe it is a financial aid to the minister, though not a cure-all nor substitute for brotherly help. The preacher lives in the same world that everyone else lives in and under the same economic system. Social Security for ministers may help here.

(3) We believe the argument that it is a tax and connected with taxes seems reasonable. The Bible is on the side of paying taxes, and there were many taxes in our Lord's day. Furthermore, under our form of government the taxpayer may voice his conviction on the use and abuse of taxes. Social Security for ministers may help here.

What is your decision?

Three Questions Concerning Christian Service

CORNELIUS J. DYCK*

There is more than talk today concerning Christian Service. Hundreds of our church young people are serving faithfully on a multitude of difficult frontiers, and are, withal, giving a good account. And yet, before we can really be effective in our service we need to be certain in our own minds what can truly be called "Christian service." Secondly, any young person contemplating service needs to know why he or she wants to do it, and thirdly, he or she will need to decide where to do it.

What Is Christian Service?

When Christ was on earth a Christian servant was one who followed Him and served Him. Whoever did His will was His disciple. But soon this concept changed. Christians found it too demanding. A few selected individuals were elevated to the rank of Christian servant and the rest were just "workers." The monk and the nun were the only ones engaged in full time Christian work. A double standard of conduct developed.

It is surprising how this medieval concept continues with us. The minister and missionary receive a "call" of God, the farmer—well, he just farms! And to think that our fathers were the ones to revive the biblical concept of the priesthood of all believers!

Whenever an individual hears the call of Christ and gives himself completely in response, that person is "called." And that call applies not only to Sunday piety but to the activities of each day. Every Christian is called to full time Christian service, while a few are called to special church vocations. There is nothing "secular" about anything done in the name of Christ. "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus," Col. 3:17. Christian service is always an outgrowth of Christian experience.

Why Shall I Serve?

Christians serve from obedience. When they hear the call of God they respond. The call may come in many ways: through the seeing of an unmet need, through the working of circumstances and talents, through fellow men, through the still small voice of God; but when the call comes, the disciple responds. There seems to be a distinct correlation between our obedience and our faith.

Christians serve out of love. God's love kindles their response. Because of the tremendous sacrifice of Jesus Christ upon the Cross, His followers feel a holy compulsion to be channels of that love. Before anyone can talk of "Christian" service something must have happened to him at the foot of the Cross. And because something wonderful is constantly happening to those who follow Christ this gratefulness overflows into the lives of others—through service.

Christians serve because they have only one life to live. They want to live it for God. If they had several lives things might be different, but because they have only one life to live, and that of unknown length, they have a sense of urgency, proceeding from an inner calm, about everything they do. They remember too, that God, who gave them gifts with which to serve, may alter or revoke them at any time.

Finally, Christians serve because of the tremendous need for their type of service. In an age where "gimme" is the rule, the Christian seeks to give. He believes that in Christ he has the answers to man's basic needs, and so, as he works, he shares this Christ with others. Arnold Toynbee is but one of many who have emphasized that the world needs most a "Christian plus."

There may be other reasons for Christian service. Uncle Sam has a way of reaching down and demanding several years of work in a special field. But Christian service in its true sense—service for Christ—begins when we respond to the call and never ceases, whatever else we may be doing, by way of occupation.

Where Shall I Serve?

The answer is clear—wherever you are! But having said that we add immediately that the Christian will never be where Christ does not want him to be. Some 70 per cent of all Americans have chosen their life's work by the time they are fifteen. They do so in response to a want ad, or "the first chance I got," or to follow out family tradition, or for other capricious reasons. When the young Christian is confronted with a choice of vocations his first and most important question is "What would Jesus do?" and his decisions are made in the light of it. His second question is, "Where can I serve my Lord best?" Second best is never good enough (2 Tim. 2:15). Just serving the Lord is not good enough, but "Where can I serve Him best?"

To those who have heard the call of God and keep these questions in mind, the choice of a field of activity will not be difficult. Christ is still the best vocational counselor. The field is the world. Specific needs at this time are in our mental hospitals, in our PAX service, with our church service agencies at home and abroad. From Formosa to the Chaco to North Battleford a call goes forth for Christian servants. The demand will never be met—it is unending. In gratitude to God we realize that our Mennonite Church is today offering more opportunities of service to young people than almost any other religious group.

And then there is the need for young people to enter church vocations. Missionaries today must know more than the Bible; they must be well trained in many areas. Ministers must feel the call not only to preach, but also to prepare themselves for preaching. Teachers must continue to develop a balanced

ROBERT W. HARTZLER*

For years the Seventh Day Adventists have been the Protestant denomination most successful in fund arising. Only the tiny Wesleyan Methodists have even approached the Adventists in this vastly important aspect of church work, while all other groups have lagged far behind.

In 1953, for example, the Adventists reported per capita giving of $173.35 for their 275,000 members. The same year the General Conference Mennonites ranked fourteenth in the list with per capita giving of $56.79.

Few of us would argue that the Adventists are more convinced Christians than the members of our churches. Therefore we must believe that their phenomenal financial success is due to the system which they use. What is that system?

First of all, the Adventist approach to Christian stewardship has two prongs—the tithe and the offering. The tithe is defined as ten per cent of the net income of the individual. Adventists believe that the giver may not choose how this tithe must be spent; the sum is simply paid into the church treasury whence the full amount is sent to area headquarters where it is disbursed for the maintenance of ministers and other church workers. All local ministers are paid by the headquarters rather than by the local congregation directly. They, with all missionaries, many teachers, and other church employees are paid from this tithe money. Adventists find justification for this in the biblical practice by which the tithes of the eleven tribes of Israel went to maintain the twelfth, or priestly, tribe.

Beyond the tithe are the offerings which all Adventists are asked to give. These offerings are always earmarked by the giver for a cause in which he is specially interested. Numerous special collections received in the course of a year provide the members with ample opportunity to support missions, local church budget, day school, the ministry to the poor, institutions and the like. Many devout members of these churches give as much as a second tithe as an offering; the average of the offerings falls at about 5 per cent of the people's income. It must be clearly understood that with these people money contributed in Sunday school offerings and special drives is all in addition to the tithe.

The Adventists have another technique which some of our people have encountered in the past. Each year they promote an "ingathering"—which is a season when they solicit the gifts of the general public for the work of the church. Sums raised in this way, while impressive, percentagewise tend to be not large.

To get the full impact of the way this works out look at the summarized financial report of a specific congregation—the Little Colonial Seventh Day Adventist Church, of South Bend, Ind. It is a congregation of 300 members, average people, ably led.

In 1954 the tithes paid by this congregation amounted to $47,056.31. In addition, the offerings reached $43,588.14. Of this latter amount $7,000 came in by way of the "ingathering"—which means it was contributed by persons outside the congregation. This adds up to over $83,000 contributed in a single year by the people of this 300-member congregation.

Are these figures higher than usual for some reason? They are in that they contain a figure of $17,000 contributed to a building fund, but the other figures are slightly below those of 1953, accounted for by a sharp economic recession in the South Bend area.

All this, obviously, is wonderful, but how do you get the people to do it?

Adventists will tell you that they are not continually harranged about money. They believe that an eagerness to make one's financial resources available to "finish the work" is an evidence of honest commitment to Jesus Christ. At the time of reception into church membership they are instructed in these matters and it is assumed that they will fit into the pattern. To do so is only what all their fellow members are also doing.

Three observations may be made concerning this approach to Christian stewardship:

1. Such a measure of giving is a wonderful testimony to the depth and sincerity of Christian commitment. What other motive, save honest commitment, could move a man to such generosity with the kingdom? The old-time Anabaptists believed one could tell whether a man was a Christian by the way he lived. We are often disturbed that today there seems to be so little difference between the Christian and the non-Christian. The Christian's relation to his money provides a perfect spot for a refreshing, convincing testimony.

2. Something like this measure of financial consecration is the direction of the future for us if we are to meet our responsibilities in the kingdom today. The demands will continue to grow rather than shrink; our vision will continue to enlarge; no miracle will be forthcoming to provide easy funds for the work of salvation; the hands of our leaders will remain tied by inadequate or unmet budgets. All this unless we are prepared to have the courage of our convictions financially.

3. Now is the time for persons all over the conference upon whom the rightness of this approach to stewardship "sinks in" to seize upon it in their personal practice. To wait for a day when all our people can simultaneously begin giving so adequately may mean inordinate delay. Why don't you start now, and be an inspiration to others?

Social Security for Ministers

AUGUST EPP

The latest changes in the Social Security Law makes social security benefits available to ministers. This law went into effect January 1, 1955. The ministers may enroll now and pay their first tax along with their income tax for the year 1955. If a minister delays enrolling beyond April 15, 1957, he forfeits his right to come under the act from then on. In connection with the Social Security Act, the minister is considered to be self-employed and therefore must pay the entire tax. He can come under the Act if he has a net annual income of $400.00 and the maximum on which he pays is $4,200.00 per year. If a minister receives a car allowance in addition to salary, that must be included. Following is a schedule of the percentage he will pay on his net income:

1960-1964	3 3/4%
1965-1969	4 1/2%
1970-1974	5 1/4%
1975 and after	6 %

Since we are showing the cost of the plan it is only fair to show its benefits. Below are the benefits at various salary levels:

OLD AGE RETIREMENT BENEFITS

Average Monthly Earnings	Retired Minister	Retired Minister and Wife Both 65 or over
$ 70	$ 38.50	$ 57.80
$120	62.50	93.80
$170	72.50	108.80
$220	82.50	123.80
$270	92.50	138.80
$310	100.50	150.80
$350	108.50	162.80

PAYMENTS TO SURVIVORS

Average Monthly Earnings	Aged Widow or Widower	Widow and One Child Under 18	Widow and Two Children Under 18	Widow and Three Children Under 18

$120	46.90	93.80	96.00	96.00
$170	54.40	108.80	136.00	136.00

$350	81.40	162.80	200.00	200.00

Why Social Security?

Social Security, in its broadest sense, was conceived as a measure by the government to give employment to more people at a time in the 1930's when there were many millions of people out of employment. Its basic principle was to provide retirement to people at age 65 and thereby make room for more young people to step in and take over the work vacated by those retiring.

There are several concepts that one should get clearly established in his thinking about social security. One is that it is not a measure of relief, a dole, nor charity. It is a plan into which the minister will pay money while he is earning and in return will draw out money when he retires. A minister who enrolls in Social Security at any age should realize that the money he himself has paid into the plan has not entirely purchased for him his retirement benefits, since it is after all a social plan. What it amounts to is: that the money paid in by the many pays for the retirement of the few. That is especially true of the ministers who enter into the plan near retirement age.

A minister should always keep in mind that his entrance into the plan does not involve his church. It is not necessary to consult the church on this matter nor need it give its approval of the plan or the minister's entry into it. The government in no way intends to involve church and state relationships. It certainly is aware of the deplorable financial condition that many of the ministers are in during their later years, and I rather feel that making Social Security available to them can be viewed as a friendly means of extending a benefit to a neglected area. In no way can anyone buy so much monthly income for so little cost as can be done through Social Security. Roger Babson once made the statement "Social Security is the greatest factor in every man's life."

It is possible that a minister could through neglect or indecision fail to avail himself of the opportunity to enroll and discover that he could never again elect to come under the act. If he delays doing so by April 15, 1957, he has forfeited his right to pay in and also to receive benefits in his retirement years. As proof that the government does not intend to invade the premise of the state and church relationship, it has made enrollment into the plan entirely on a voluntary basis. Any minister having real scruples in this regard, need do nothing about it and that is the end of it. It is, however, the experience of the Pension Committee that ministers who have harbored certain convictions through their active life regarding old age assistance, suddenly develop almost reverse convictions when faced with hard realities.

For those ministers who feel that enrolling in Social Security will be yielding to the encroaching power of the state, let us look at it a bit more realistically. By no stretch of the imagination can we believe that Social Security contributions actually pay for Social Security benefits. Further, Social Security payments are not even collected by Social Security. They are collected by the Department of Internal Revenue. Furthermore, every minister must pay an income tax, like everyone else. A portion of that tax, therefore, must be used to make up the deficits that must arise if the government is to keep its performances up to its promises with Social Security, and if this is then a tax item, it becomes a part of the very social fabric of the time in which we live. So in other words, if the minister is already paying for Social Security whether he is in it or not, he should likewise take advantage of the bill that he is helping to pay.

So it is my feeling as well as that of the Pension Committee, that we can do no less than urge ministers to enroll in Social Security if we are going to be true to our convictions as well as advise our ministers to take advantage of an opportunity they cannot afford to pass up. Much more could be said in favor of Social Security as it pertains to the survivor benefits in the case where a young minister dies and leaves a widow and young children. In this connection I should like to urge the reader to again study the schedule of benefits listed in this article under "Payments to Survivors." No other plan of insurance nor pension can duplicate such benefits.

So far this article has dealt mostly with Social Security, but it is entirely conceivable that there might be the tendency on the part of some ministers to confuse Social Security with the General Conference Pension Plan so that they might feel they ought to discontinue the Pension Plan to enroll in Social Security. Our committee has prepared a comparative analysis of the two plans and by this time most of our ministers should have received this information. If not, these forms are still available at our Conference Office and will gladly be mailed to anyone requesting them. But it is NOT a matter of choosing one or the other, but using both plans to give the minister and his family for the first time a program

Ugly Trees

Walter Gering

Those trees—what ugly things they were. Like the proverbial sore thumb they stuck out all along the way. There had been so many interesting things. The first rays of the early morning dawn had already been prophetic of things to come. And so it had been. There was hardly a cloud in the sky. The panorama of constantly changing scenes as we went speeding along the rails was a thrilling sight. No wonder God pronounced it good as He viewed His creation. There is something about the touch of nature which inspires the human soul.

But those ugly trees; why must they clutter the beauty round about? Surely there was nothing inspiring about them. Other trees, such as the birch were beautiful even in this winter season. Stripped clean of every sign of life, the white bark gave them a beauty all of their own. The pine trees, still green even in the cold of winter, were a tonic to the soul. But these ugly trees, literally covered with old, dead leaves still clinging tenaciously to the branches—what hope was there for them? If even the stormy blasts of wintry days, the freezing cold and hoary frost could not strip them of these ugly dead leaves, how could they ever be restored to a thing of beauty?

And yet it is always that way. These ugly dead leaves hang on for dear life every year. They refuse to be torn loose, however bitter the storm. If anything, they seem to be even more tightly anchored with each blast. Dead, ugly leaves do not let go that easily.

But there comes a day when even the most stubborn leaf must drop off. What the forces from without have been unable to do, the miracle of God's grace performs in a day. The miracle of spring begins its task. Slowly but surely the new life begins to fill the roots, the trunk and on into the branches. Explain it we cannot; it is one of God's miracles. And as the new life permeates the branches, the stubborn ugly leaves are literally pushed off. Where there was once nothing but ugly leaves there is now beauty which thrills the soul.

So it is in my life and yours. Ugly leaves disfigure the whole of life. They will not drop off, no matter how hard we try to eliminate them. Then in one solemn moment new life flows through the soul. The indwelling presence of the Lord Jesus Christ becomes a reality. What the human will has not been able to accomplish the Spirit of God brings to pass. The old, lifeless leaves drop away and the beauty of God's holiness becomes evident.

Ten Reasons Why You Should Attend a Christian College

RONALD VON RIESEN

One of the most important and far-reaching decisions in the life of every young person is the matter of selecting a college in which you wish to receive your undergraduate training. All too often this is a choice that is made on the basis of secondary issues, such as: cost of tuition, proximity to the home, availability of student jobs, prestige of the school, my friends are attending there, etc. While these issues certainly ought to have their fair share of attention, they ought never to overshadow the more important issue of "Where can I best prepare for life?" For the task of making a living is, after all, secondary to the art of making a life and preparing yourself for those intangibles of character, good citizenship, honesty, integrity, purity of heart and soul which are of eternal dimensions and significance. As such, I would urge you to think seriously about the possibilities of attending a Christian college.

There are at least ten good reasons why you should attend a Christian college.

1. Your faith in God will be strengthened. This is the most important contribution that can be made to your life. Your life will become meaningful and such elemental questions, as: "Who am I?" and "What am I here for?" will be answered for you. Your life will be fortified for every day and for every emergency as long as you live, if you are in contact with God. Everything else is secondary to this fundamental fact. Some years ago a student commented to his Bible professor, "You have no idea how much this class has helped me. Thanks for taking all doubt out of my mind about God and Jesus Christ." Your faith will be strengthened in a Christian college.

2. You will be taught by men and women who will be living Christian lives before you. One cannot overestimate the advantages you will have in a Christian college which comes from the impact of the lives of your professors. To be able to receive instruction in the various fields of a Christian liberal arts college from those who are not only adequately trained in their specific fields, but who have accepted Jesus Christ as the Lord and Savior of their lives is one of the most important advantages of the Christian college. Whether in Bible, history, English, biology, chemistry, music, psychology, education, mathematics, the languages, or on the athletic field in basketball, track, or baseball, the process is the same. You are being taught by those who honor Christ by their lives. Choose a Christian college.

3. You will be associated with young men and women who are committed Christians. Christian friends and associates are among the most priceless possessions of the Christian life. One does not really have friends unless of course he is willing to give of himself as a friend. It is only as we learn to share our friendship with others that we begin to realize the great possibilities of Christian friendship. If you want to make friendship — if you want to make friends with other young men and women who are committed Christians then you will want to choose a Christian college.

4. Whatever vocation you may wish to choose, you will want to render that service as a Christian. Not everyone will prepare for the ministry or missionary work. Many will want to choose other occupations such as: business, teaching, medicine, or law. And this is as it should be. But above all, we want to train Christians, and doctors to perform their services with a Christian motive. If you want to be in an environment where the service motive is held high and exalted; where missionaries and servants of the church are held in high esteem and where you will be constantly challenged to live out your life in Christian service to others then be sure to choose a Christian college.

5. The social and recreational life of your college will be kept on a Christian basis. With all the strong pressures that come upon you from the world outside of Christ, urging you to stain the purity of your life in the pleasures which the world calls "a good time," it will be a source of satisfaction to attend a Christian college and share together the real good times that are planned in a Christian atmosphere. You will be taught how to spend your leisure time with activities and entertainments that are truly Christian. Your contacts with other Christian young men and women will reinforce and confirm what you have attempted to build and develop in your own spiritual life.

6. You will be prepared to render to Christ and your church a greater and more effective service. You will be given opportunities to take courses in Christian Nurture and Education under teachers who are actively engaged in the work of the Church. As a member of the Christian Youth Volunteers you will learn how to prepare and render programs of worship and inspiration to youth groups, the sick and the aged; to witness for Christ to the unsaved—all of which will prepare you for active membership in your home church or whatever denomination you may wish to make your home.

7. Your chances of finding a Christian partner for life are better in a Christian college. By your constant association with other Christian young people you will no doubt, find a partner for life who is a follower of Christ. This is the basis for the Christian home which is so sorely needed in our generation. Very few marriages which are the product of a Christian college end up in divorce. Students living together on a Christian college campus learn to know one another in a way that other opportunities seldom provide. You will become acquainted with those of common ideals and convictions which are essential to any successful marriage.

8. Christian colleges offer a well-rounded program for the development of Christian personality. While the most important part of life is often neglected in general educational institutions, or at least left out of the picture as far as the required curriculum is concerned, the Christian college places Jesus Christ at the center and the Bible is exalted and revered as the textbook which will lead us to Christ until our lives are hid with Christ in God. This process produces Christian personality at its best.

9. Your experiences in worship and inspiration in the chapel hour in a Christian college will make a deep impression on your life. In the daily chapel hour you will be brought face to face with the most important issues in life. Special periods throughout the year are devoted to a deepening of your spiritual life led by men who have experienced the riches of God's Grace. You will be strengthened by the testimonies of your fellow students as they conduct the chapel services. You will learn to "Be still, and know that I am God." These mountain-top experiences will not only help you to gain a spiritual perspective, but will assist you in meeting your own personal problems.

10. Student prayer meetings provide wonderful opportunities for spiritual development. Here students have an opportunity to counsel with each other and with God. They learn to pray publicly. They are strengthened for their tasks later to be performed in their local church or community. They are preparing themselves to become "pillars in the church" and real servants of our Lord Jesus Christ, whom to know is life eternal. BE SURE TO CHOOSE A CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

Film Review

THE CONVERSION OF SAUL. 16 mm., 30 minutes, rental, $9.00, Association Films, 79 E. Adams, Chicago, Ill. Available in Canada from General Films Limited, 810 Confederation Life Bldg., Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada. Rental $8.00.

This film begins with the stoning of Stephen and shows the subsequent persecution by Saul which is recorded in Acts 8:3: "As for Saul, he made havoc of the church . . . ." It shows his conversion on the Damascus road. It also recounts how God came to Ananias and told him to go to Saul and how through this mission Saul's sight was restored. The film ends with Saul being baptized.

The committee felt that this film would be very effective both for use in a worship service as well as for a background of a discussion on how a person becomes a Christian.

There are certain items included in the film which are not recorded in the Bible. These additional items are the recounting of some details of the persecutions which Paul directed before he left for Damascus. Jonathan and Deborah together with Deborah's father are persecuted. The young couple go to Damascus because of the persecution. In Damascus they meet Ananias. The committee felt that these additions do not do violence to the biblical story but really help to make it more real. In presenting a film to an audience that is unfamiliar with the biblical story it would be well to point out some of these additions.

This is the second in the series produced by Cathedral Films of twelve on the Life of Paul. It could be used from the junior high school age on up.

that approaches an adequate state of protection for his family in the event of his death and a reasonable amount of income in his retirement. The General Conference Pension Committee has never felt that our Pension Plan was sufficient, but it rather considered it a beginning in the right direction. Possibly the churches should take their rightful position in this matter and pay for the entire cost of the Pension Plan as do other employing organizations. At the present time the churches whose ministers are enrolled in the Pension Plan of the General Conference, pay three-fourths of the cost. If the churches would pay the one-fourth which the minister has been paying in addition to what they are now paying, the minister would find it a bit easier to enroll in Social Security. Any minister under age 55 is still eligible to come into the Pension Plan and both he and his church should have the minister enrolled as soon as possible. The proceeds of the Pension Plan can be used to purchase a home for the family in the event of the death of the minister (or as income to the family) and Social Security will provide income to the family, but never does Social Security furnish a lump sum of money to the family which can be used to purchase a home. So it can be readily seen that it is extremely important for the minister to be enrolled in both plans.

It is the sincere desire of the Pension Committee that the ministers give serious consideration to enrolling in Social Security. This, however, should not be done as a substitution for the Pension Plan, but rather as an addition to it, since it takes both plans to do what should be done for our ministers. The government is very clear in its advice that Social Security was never meant to replace any now-existing Pension Plan.

No doubt there will be some questions in the minds of some of our ministers in connection with this very important step that they should take. The General Conference Pension Committee will be glad to assist in any way it can if correspondence will be addressed to:

Billy Graham preached a thriller on "Repentance" tonight. It was one of the finest sermons I've ever heard. But at the end of it a man shouted out of the crowd, "Mr. Graham, why don't you pray for your President Eisenhower to stop this cold war?" Billy never even looked toward the man; he bowed his head for a moment, and then he said, "It's time we stopped looking to man. Let us turn our eyes toward God!"

Thank You, God, for that divinely inspired answer.

Indian Etiquette

Missionaries arrive in India knowing that they come from lands where Western culture is accepted, to a land where Eastern customs and practices prevail. In many instances you will not want to force your ways on the people. You will find that the Indian has some very definite rules of etiquette and it is well to learn them. It is also important from the beginning to inquire into and differentiate between customs that are simply different and those that have religious significance. When practices clearly oppose the teachings of Jesus Christ and the Bible, then courteous ways of avoiding them can be found. In the main Indian people are genuinely respectful, hospitable, and friendly and appreciate free association with missionaries.

Greetings

Probably one of the first customs with which you will become acquainted is the Indian method of honoring a person by placing a garland about his neck. Of course, you will quickly learn to "salaam," with the accompanying gesture of the right hand raised to the forehead; or to "namaskar," with hands brought together and raised to the level of the face, and head bent slightly forward. Indian people attach very great importance to their greetings so be sure to always acknowledge them. Also acknowledge the greetings of your servants when they come to work in the morning and when they leave in the evening. Do not broach a business matter or question of inquiry to shopkeepers, vendors, or even passersby, without first exchanging greetings. Handshaking is an imported custom and it is best not to expect it nor promote it.

Conversation

As you start studying Hindi, you will be surprised to find no equivalent for our much used "thank you" and "excuse me." In conversation Indian people mention themselves and their families first, not last, and they think nothing of passing in front of a person. They feel uncomfortable if we insist on standing in their presence for any length of time, so in order to carry on a conversation, accept a chair, stool, or bed, and be seated. In India, wherever you are, you will be stared at, and asked personal questions that would be very bad manners in America. Certain matters that we consider private, they may ask first of all, for example, the price paid for things, the reason for your marriage or failure to marry, etc. These are normal questions in India.

Avoid asking a married woman the name of her husband. She is honor-bound not to speak his name, as a sign of submission and respect. In common practice the husband speaks to her and of her as "the mother of so-and-so, naming the oldest child." Likewise the mother speaks of him as the "father of their oldest child," naming him. (It rhymes nicely in Hindi). It is quite appropriate for a woman to speak about her husband, referring to him by some title as pastor, evangelist, cook, or teacher.

At Mealtime

When you eat in an Indian home, you will remove your shoes at the door and wash your hands with water provided by the host or hostess. You will learn to eat with your fingers, making little balls of the rice and curry. At first the curry will burn all the way down until your eyes water and your nose runs. After a year or so, you will very likely come to relish the fragrant, over-spiced foods. Be sure to eat with the right hand only. To use the left hand is a sign of disrespect, always wrong. When invited to an Indian home it is quite correct to bring along your own glass and boiled water. You will very probably sit on mats on the floor and may eat from leaves.

Do not expect all members of the family to sit down to a meal together with you. The father often does, several smaller children may, but the mother and older daughters very seldom do. Ordinarily the mother never eats until her husband has finished his meal, and when there are guests she serves. (Much stress is being laid these days in the Christian Home Movement to encourage families to eat together). It is not uncommon for the guests to be seated by themselves. After or during the meal, it is considered perfectly proper to belch—a sign that the meal has been enjoyed.

Expect your host to grant your permission, or if he does not do so, at the psychological time, by hint or request, ask permission. In the same way, when you have Indian guests in your home, grant them clear permission to leave at the termination of a social gathering or meal. They will consider it a breach of etiquette to rise in order to leave without some word from their host or hostess. If any girls or young married women, unaccompanied by their husbands, are your guests, be sure to provide safe chaperonage to their homes.

Whenever you are invited to non-Christian festivals, meals, or marriages, it is well to consult experienced Indian Christian friends to make sure that you may not inadvertently partake of some part of food that has such religious connection that you would wish to avoid. When traveling and in homes it is not at all uncommon to be offered foodstuffs. Coconuts may have been offered to idols, about certain other things one cannot be too sure. It is safe to accept hot tea, both from hygienic and social reasons. In turn, before you offer food to non-Christians, consider that caste rules are very rigid and complicated and you may cause offense without meaning to do so. Most anyone will accept your tea, but your cookies may be unacceptable because they have eggs in them. To flaunt meat and egg eating in the presence of Hindus may give offense. Fruits and sweets (candy) are usually acceptable.

Men-Women Relationships

The freedom of relationship between men and women here in India does not prevail like it does in America. Even though you will soon feel called upon to help change attitudes in the matter, do not be shocked at the conservative and custom bound practises which you will find. The freedom of women in the matter of public appearance, speech, choice of career, marriage, etc., is not the same here. In India, many important decisions are made for women by the men, parents, or older relatives. More and more Indian girls are being consulted and their desires respected regarding their engagements and marriage, and in no way should we conclude that their place and opinions are not important. In money matters they exercise considerable control, and in influence their part is very great.

There are certain rules of etiquette for Indian women which we as missionaries do well to take cognizance of. An Indian woman does not converse at length inside a room, a train, or even on the street with one man alone. She will call a companion or, in conversation, be seated on an open veranda. Neither will she travel alone nor will she choose to live all alone or go about her work in too independent a way. It is very necessary for missionaries, both men and women, to try to give no cause for misinterpretation or stumbling in these matters. For the protection of her own name, no unmarried lady missionary should have only men servants. She should have an ayah or a woman companion. The question also

We, as young people like the sensational. We are impressed by hearing of things being accomplished. This is true of every phase of our life, including the religious. Let us take an example of a religious broadcast over the radio. We hear that the group sponsoring this broadcast is supporting missionaries in various parts of the world. The announcer further states that there is no money in the mission fund. The listeners must send in support immediately or missionaries will be called home. Our first impulse is to think of how much we can send to this particular group. It never enters our mind that we lose contact with this money. We really don't know any of these people individually. To us they are mere names and voices. So often giving to a cause of this sort is on the emotional level. How do we feel about our own Conference mission work? Do we realize the tremendous task that is given to us through our own church in missions? Here is a place where we can see the results of our tithes, we can know Conference executives and mission board members, as well as the missionaries on the field. If we choose, a visit to a home mission station can be arranged. How much are we giving to our own mission work in comparison to "faith missions" we hear about over the radio? To which cause do we feel most responsible?

We Got Home on a Shoestring

It was nine o'clock in the evening when we turned off onto the last five mile stretch into Jagdeeshpur. We were returning from Raipur in Waltner's station jeep with a heavily loaded trailer behind as usual. A steady rain had accompanied us almost all the way, and it was with some trepidation that we set out on this repaired, yes, but still miserable jungle road.

On the high embankment of the talab (reservoir) the car began to sway dangerously, and we attributed this to the trailer. I looked out of the window to see which way it was pulling, but could see nothing. Cornelius, the driver, then peered out on his side, and lo, and behold! there was no trailer. No trailer? How could that be! All of us got out at once. Mr. Moyer, Rev. J. Walters, Mr. Ram, Vernelle, and I. Some walked a way back to look for it, but in the darkness and rain not much was visible. We feared it might have slid into the talab, but as there was no indication of this, we breathed a little lighter. Cornelius turned the car around, and we all got back in to look for the trailer. No one remembered having seen it in Basna, either. There was a possibility of our having lost it on the highway somewhere, and that might prove quite a way back.

Fortunately that was not the case. It was, just a little distance out of Basna, stuck tightly in deep mud, on a place where the road was narrow and built up, making it almost impossible for the car to turn around. "It can't be done," was Mr. Moyer's comment as he surveyed the situation. "Well, you see, sir," said Cornelius, "it's this way. . . ." And he began to unravel his plans. He was quite optimistic. Vernelle and I looked on with fear and trembling, expecting the car to turn over every time he tried to bring it down the embankment and up again. Inch by inch, turning the wheels in just the right angle, Cornelius managed to keep the car upright. What seemed impossible to most of us had become reality. The car was back on the road, in the right position, and headed for Jagdeeshpur.

But how was the trailer to be attached? The hook or hasp was broken. "Well, you see, sir," Cornelius began again. His optimism kept our spirits up too. Part of the rope that was around the trailer could be used and Cornelius was quite confident that that would hold. Mr. Moyer wasn't quite so sure.

Slowly we moved forward. The trailer now hit against the car some, but careful driving kept it from injuring the car too much. Repeatedly we looked back to make sure the trailer was following us. After we had crossed the high embankment of the talab once more, we found we had lost the trailer again, this time quite close. The rope had torn. The mud was too deep, the load too heavy.

For a moment we all looked on in helpless consternation. Cornelius had an idea. "Well, you see, sir, it works this way," and he began to haul out a small chain. He thought this would prove strong enough arises as to whether a husband whose family is in the hills should use only men servants. This depends very much on the age of one's servants, their relationship with one another, and various other circumstances. Men should remember that it is not proper to unnecessarily touch a woman or to casually lay their hands on the shoulders of young girls. Often when one goes into the villages or out visiting, one is offered a bed to sit on for that may be the only "chair" the family possesses. At such times one should remember that it is improper to sit on a bed with one of the opposite sex to whom one is not married.

Adapting to Indian Living

Books have been written and many discussions held concerning the advantages of adapting one's living to Indian ways. Should one "go Indian," in housing, in dress, in eating? One of the attributes of Mennonite culture is simple living. In comparison with American standards, missionaries live simply; in comparison with Indian standards, there is a wide gap. This is a problem that each must work out for himself, taking into consideration one's family, work, morale, intellectual and health needs.

There are a few things all of us can do. For one thing, learn to like Indian food. If you can eat a heaping plateful of rice and down the hot peppery curry without blinking, you will be looked upon with greater esteem. If you can "talk like a native—how they admire anyone who can use correct idioms and the more local, vernacular speech like Chattisgarhi and Oriya. (But right here let us say that the word "native" has acquired many unfortunate connotations and it is better to practically leave it out of one's vocabulary. In referring to the people of India, it is much better to use the words "Indian" or "national.") The people appreciate it when we wear Indian clothes on occasion, even though that does not change our color or personalities. Wearing "sarees" solves the problem of a hat for the ladies, and Indians do consider it respectful to have one's head covered in church services. Another thing we can do —be considerate about their division of time or sense of time. Americans say "take it easy." Indians do "take it easy." And you might just as well settle down to their more leisurely pace of life. Clock-controlled living is not Oriental, and an adapted or tempered insistence on punctuality will save your temper and nerves.

And so there are some things that we can do to adapt to Eastern culture. Whether you want to take further steps, you should decide after living here awhile. The fact always remains that we of the West are not of the East. For Christians a much surer bond of understanding and consideration comes from a common faith, with a common book, the Bible, giving the standard of conduct.

FREEMAN COLLEGE ACADEMY ACCREDITED BY NORTH CENTRAL ASSOCIATION OF COLLEGES AND SECONDARY SCHOOLS

Freeman College Academy was formally accepted for accreditation by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools at its annual meeting in Chicago, March 25. This is the accrediting body for universities, colleges, and high schools in a 19-state area extending from West Virginia to Arizona. Schools accepted must meet high standards and must submit to thorough inspection by educators appointed by North Central. Eight leading South Dakota educators, including two members of the North Central Committee for South Dakota spent three days on the campus visiting classes, inspecting, and evaluating the entire program of the Academy.

North Central accreditment is a real achievement for any school and brings with it the responsibility for continued growth and improvement. A word of appreciation is due to the administration and staff, to the board of directors, and to the students, parents, and friends who all worked together to make this possible. It is a real satisfaction and a genuine pleasure to be able to offer our young people their secondary education in a fully accredited church school.

PEACE CONFERENCE ATTENDED BY DELEGATES FROM TEN SCHOOLS

New officers of the Intercollegiate Peace Fellowship were installed at Tabor College on Friday, March 18, at the close of the sixth annual conference held in Hillsboro. They are: president, Joe Smucker, Bethel College; vice-president, Victor Stoltzfus, Goshen College; and Carolyn Schnell, Bluffton College, secretary. Thirty-six representatives, from ten Mennonite colleges and seminaries, attended the Fellowship Dinner ending the conference that evening in the Tabor cafeteria.

A high light of the conference was the panel discussion of the question "UMT and You," on Friday afternoon. Dr. Harley J. Stucky, Bethel College, was chairman of the discussion with Prof. Wesley Prieb, Tabor College, and Rev. Elbert Koontz, pastor of the First Mennonite Church in Hillsboro, participating. This discussion was followed by a session of letter writing to influencial congressmen against passage of the pending UMT bill in Congress.

Three foreign students presented their views on the subject, "Peace As We See It" on Friday morning. Mr. Mina Mina, formerly from Egypt and now attending Bethel College, was the first speaker. Miss Yt Veenstra, formerly from the Netherlands and now attending Tabor College, portrayed how far present day Christianity has fallen short from the theme of the Christian story, "Peace on Earth and Goodwill to Men."

Hans Wiehler, formerly from Eastern Germany and now attending Goshen College, discussed how living in a war situation for many years makes for a realistic searching of God's Word in search of permanent peace. This peace can only be found in the hearts of Christians today, he concluded.

An audience of over four-hundred heard Dr. C. N. Hostetter, President of Messiah College, deliver the last conference message on the subject, "The Bible and War."

BETHEL COLLEGE

Recent speaking engagements of Dr. J. W. Fretz include two appearances at Tabor College. On March 30 he spoke on "Economics in the Christian Community," in the chapel, while on April 5 he spoke to the class on Marriage and the Family on "Economic Aspects of Family Life." On April 14 he is scheduled to speak at the Berean Academy spring banquet while on the 19th he is to give the commencement address at the Sunflower Consolidated School, Moundridge, Kansas.

Speakers at the tenth anniversary of the Walton Mennonite Church, April 3, included Erwin Goering and Harry Martens of the college staff.

On Sunday, April 3, Henry D. Penner, graduate of Bethel College, was ordained as elder of the Medford Mennonite Church, Medford, Okla. Erland Waltner of the Bible Department officiated at the service.

From March 27 through April 3, Dr. E. G. Kaufman spoke in Winnipeg churches and in the Canadian Mennonite Bible College. His series, March 29 to April 1, at the Canadian Mennonite Bible College was on the theme, "Basic Christian Convictions."

MCC TO AID REFUGEES AND EVACUEES ON INDONESIAN ISLAND

MCC is preparing to make shipments of food and clothing available to groups of refugees and evacuees on the Indonesian island of Celebes who have lost their homes and been forced to flee at the hands of a local terrorist group.

Relief supplies of powdered milk available from U. S. government surplus, light clothing and such self-help materials as yardage and cotton goods will soon be shipped. These materials are being shipped in response to investigations made by Robert W. Miller of Akron, Pa., MCC worker in Java who visited Celebes in February.

According to an official estimate, there are 160,000 refugees or evacuees in Celebes as a result of the activities of the terrorist group which consists of fanatical Moslems and persons who oppose the present Indonesian government. Of these 160,000 about 80,000 are Christians.

These people have been forced to leave their homes and land because their homes have been burned and their crops often destroyed. Some persons have tried to return and rebuild only to have their homes burned a second time.

The food and clothing being made available to alleviate the suffering of these people will be dispersed through the assistance of local Christian groups and a local women's relief organization. As this relief activity progresses, it is possible that shipments of canned beef and Christmas bundles may be sent to this area.

This situation in Celebes, the spider-shaped island lying east of Borneo, illustrates the importance of having relief supplies on hand when such needs for assistance to suffering and distressed persons develop. To have a variety of clothing and food items available enables MCC to dispatch such materials without delay.

MILK FEEDING AND MEDICAL SERVICES IN FORMOSA

The MCC relief team in Formosa with the assistance of local Christians continues its extensive ministry of milk feeding and medical services to many of the island's people who otherwise would not receive such assistance.

A report at the end of February indicated that approximately 5,850 children were receiving a bowl of warm milk each morning. Milk-feeding stations set up in co-operation with local churches are in operation in 34 villages. In addition, an average of 25 patients at the Hualien hospital receive free milk twice a day.

For the same month there were nearly 9,500 medical and surgical treatments at the Hualien hospital, the three treatment centers operated in connection with the mobile clinic and the one eye clinic all operated by MCC personnel. These services include treatment of diseases, dental work, and care of eye difficulties.

to bring the trailer home. Vernelle was asked to take the steering wheel to back up the car, Mr. Moyer, Mr. Ram, and Cornelius lifted the trailer to fasten it to the car, and I tried to do my bit by holding the flashlight, weak though it was. I offered, too, to hold the bolt and nut with which to close up the chain. Mr. Moyer, somewhat reluctantly, handed it to me. He probably feared, and justly so, that female help at such a time is not too reliable. Desirous to be of more help, I reached forth to push the trailer, and in doing so, dropped the nut. I immediately bent down and ran my fingers through the water and the mud in search of it, but no such luck. Did I feel foolish! Here I had insisted on holding the nut and would have to drop it where it could not be found.

The next best thing would be a strong string, but who had a strong enough string to hold the chain together? Vernelle had an idea. Her new American shoestring! That did it. We got home at 11:30 that night, on a SHOESTRING!

They also bought furniture for one of the rooms. The wall to wall carpet, the furniture and the drapes in the large living room were all gifts of friends. THREE QUESTIONS CONCERNING CHRISTIAN SERVICE approach, an approach that is spiritually sound and academically respectable. Truly, the field is the world.

It Is Clear that the Lord has a place and a plan for every person He has created. Some merely occupy that place, some fill it, some never find it. But any person will be ineffective and a nonentity until he finds the plan God has for him and identifies himself with it. The value of our Christian service depends upon our degree of commitment.

Dwight L. Moody once heard a minister assert that the world had yet to see what God could do through a man fully consecrated to Him. Moody resolved to be that man and his life was a blessing to many. Yet he had no monopoly upon the power and the grace of God. It is still available in overflowing abundance to those who have heard the call and have responded. I trust that this includes each one of us.

Mission Advance in 1954

In a little folder just issued by the Board of Missions, we have described how our work has taken on new dimensions.

If anyone had asked you, would you have guessed it? We sent out forty-one missionaries last year. In 1953 we sent out ten and it looked as though mission interest was shifting to Canada because seven of the ten came from there. In '54 there was a much better representation from our whole Conference. Although Indiana is leading with ten missionaries, we continue right down through the states Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas (second in line with five), and then into Canada, British Columbia in the extreme west, and Saskatchewan pretty far east. Of the missionaries from these states and provinces more than one-half are going out for the first time. In 1953 it was about two-thirds of the group who were first term workers.

Where have all these people gone? Ten of them have gone to the Congo. This is as it should be because in Africa the doors are still open, but they may not be for long. Hence it is important that an indigenous church be well established before the doors close to the white man. Nine have gone to India even though it is still a slow matter to get visas, five to Arizona, two each to Liberia (American Bible Society), Mexico, Paint Rock, North Carolina, Formosa, Paraguay, Oklahoma, and one to Colombia.

Have you thought of Formosa? That is a new field. Our veteran missionaries, W. C. Voth's, have gone there to join the Hugh Sprunger's who are at work on the language. It seems as though it were just the other day when it was a real act of faith to start work in Japan. But today we have eighteen missionaries there. What will we do in Formosa? If we have faith as a mustard seed, may we not expect that the Lord will prosper our work there too? Have I been saying "we"? What I mean was that God has graciously permitted us to be instruments in His hand to do His work, or as Paul puts it, we are privileged to be His co-workers. Wonder of wonders, first God comes in the form of man and then He permits man to be His co-worker. It is ours to accept and measure up to this challenge.

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

1. To work for a Conference unified in Christ.
2. To teach the gospel of Christ effectively.
3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

WANTED! MORE MINISTERS

The number of churches in the General Conference who are looking for ministers seems to be increasing. There simply are not enough young men going into the ministry to meet the needs of our churches. This is a serious situation which is causing real concern. The article this week on "Recruiting for Christian Service" deals with this problem.

One key person to help solve this problem is the present church pastor. If he will prayerfully consider the young men of his church, perhaps of high school age or even younger, he may discover some likely youth who seems to have the qualities of a good preacher. If so, he should have a talk with the youth and lay the cause before him. He may discover that the matter has already been given consideration, but there was uncertainty about what steps to follow. Even if the youth had not given the matter serious thought the very fact that his pastor brings it to his attention may lead him to do so. God may be trying to call the youth through his pastor.

Of course, parents too, have an important influence in this matter. But the pastor is in a specially favored position to bring this to the attention and consideration of our young men. Let each minister consider prayerfully what he may do to recruit youth for this form of Christian service.

"THE FAMILY THAT PRAYS TOGETHER, STAYS TOGETHER"

This is a slogan for National Family Week, observed this year, May 1-8. Is it true that where a family prays together, they can more easily solve their differences and difficulties? Is it correct to say that when we pray for each other and together we are not likely to drift apart? We believe it is, and that this is the best way to hold a family together. For when a family is united with God it is then more easily united with each other.

The old-fashioned method of the Family Altar had a powerful influence in the home and in keeping it together. We need a re-emphasis on this too much neglected practice. The family is the unit of society, and where there is discord in this primary unit, not only do individuals suffer, but the church, the community, and the whole world.

The methods and the times may vary, but certainly there can be found some way by which the family can daily pray together, and bring their problems and their gratitudes before the understanding Father. National Family Week is a good time to check if our family is giving proper attention to the things of the soul.

SAY NO TO U. M. T.!

The matter of Universal Military Training for all our boys is at this writing a very live issue. But there is danger of the general public becoming lax in expressing itself on this subject, thus giving the proponents of the measure a chance to push it through without the opposition needed to stop it. Perhaps too few realize what a calamity it would be if military training became compulsory for all our youth.

We believe U. M. T. is wrong on every count. But primarily we believe it is contrary to the spirit and teachings of Jesus. We hope the measure may be soundly defeated. While there is still time may Christians speak out clearly against it.

CHRISTIAN WRITERS

The Mennonite Writers' Conference to be held at Hesston, Kansas, May 3-6 grows out of the feeling that Christian journalism has not been given the attention it deserves. The field is large and has great possibilities, but so far few have been the young people who have dedicated their full time and energy to this work. Perhaps in the past there were not the openings we now face in this type of service.

People seem to be reading more religious articles today than ever before. Where formerly leading magazines seldom carried articles of a religious nature, today many of them feature such articles quite regularly. The heart of the world seems hungry to read more of the Good News and the right way of life and peace. Many writers are trying to meet this need, but the number is limited, and in our own denomination is quite scarce indeed.

The kind of writing that moves people toward God is not easy. Where some have a natural gift of writing it should be trained and developed that such writing may be done more effectively. There are techniques and principles in Christian writing perhaps wholly unfamiliar to the ordinary person. Where one feels called to be a Christian writer, such a person should be eager to learn of all the best methods and skills that can be developed.

Those who enjoy writing and have the urge to follow in that line would do well to give serious thought to the matter of making it a life work. We need more good Christian writing and hence more good Christian writers. Where God calls we should be faithful to respond.

Come Now, Let Us Take Council Together

HARRY YODER*

During the month of April throughout the Church of Christ we have meditated upon the happenings of Passion Week of our Lord. Among the various events of these days one of the foremost in our minds is the gathering of Christ with the twelve disciples in the Upper Room. He had often gathered them together during the several years of his ministry but this was a unique conference. Christ had planned this meeting with some specific purposes in mind. There was work to be done and loyal workers were needed. As we look into that Upper Room conference many details could be pointed out to our benefit. However, let us consider only a few of the important points which should be meaningful to us at the opening of our Central Conference sessions.

1. First, we notice that some preparation needed to be made for the gathering. Certain ones were designated to go and prepare the room. It didn't take a large percentage of them but thoughtful and trustworthy preparation was a necessity. For a successful conference someone must always serve as host in meeting the common needs of the people. Willing, co-operative hands met the needs of the Lord.

2. Secondly, we notice the representation at the Upper Room conference. I often wondered what Jesus would have done if several of the twelve would not have been present. But this was not a concern. There was the strength and witness of 100 per cent representation. Everyone who was supposed to come was present. What a powerful factor it is when every delegate is at his post of duty when a conference is called to carry on the work of the Lord.

3. Thirdly, what were the points of emphasis in the Upper Room gathering?

a. For one thing, there was much effort put forth to create and maintain unity and oneness among the followers.

There was the human ambition to rank first among men and strife arose as to who was the greatest. Jesus quietly pointed out to them that the one who can humbly serve is the chief among them. Then He demonstrated, in the act of washing the disciple's feet, what He was trying to teach them. When everyone comes with a humble willingness to serve the Lord it makes for unity and strength.

Then, in that Upper Room conference, one was present who had been courting with Satan. That certainly does not make for oneness and unity among Christ's people. Thus, Jesus having pointed out the betrayer and commanding, "What thou doest, do quickly," sent Judas out into the night to be with those of his kind. In order for any gathering in the church of Christ to create and maintain a oneness the subtle ways of Satan must be properly dealt with.

After getting rid of the satanic spirit and dispelling their human selfishness for greatness Jesus gave to that Upper Room gathering the positive steps to unity and oneness. At the center is "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; even as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." The work must be planned and carried out under the impulse of love. On top of this foundation of love He stresses a strong note of calm assurance. "Let not your heart be troubled; believe in God, believe also in me." "I am the way, the truth, and the life." "The Comforter, even the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things." "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you."

In the parable of the vine and branches Jesus gave a clear picture of the only way that any group can have unity and oneness in thought and action. "I am the vine, ye are the branches; He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same beareth much fruit: for apart from me ye can do nothing." Thus, the only possible way to create unity in the church of Christ is to enjoy a real sense of oneness in Him.

So, we might say that the very hub of the Upper Room conference was an effort to form a strong bond of unity among the followers of Christ. This is to be done by properly dealing with Satan; replacing the selfish ambitions of human greatness with the spirit of humble service; by building on the impulse of divine love and assurance which are found in Jesus Christ.

4. Fourth, and finally, in that Upper Room conference they planned for the future. Jesus said, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so sent I them into the world." He knew the work was not completed. It was, and is, a continuing program. In order to accomplish the ongoing work Jesus promised the sending of the Holy Spirit which "shall teach you all things and bring to your remembrance all that I said unto you." The work is to be planned and carried on in faith and under the direction of the Holy Spirit. This work is to be done "That the world may believe that thou didst send me."

In this fifty-fifth annual session of the Central Conference of Mennonites I feel sure it is our deep desire to come together in the spirit of our Lord, laying aside all selfish ambitions, casting out any satanic power which may be bidding for our attention, and desiring to build on the positive foundation of Divine Love and assurance centered in Jesus Christ. As we thus plan for the future, under the direction of the Holy Spirit, the world shall believe that our witness is true.

Walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all. Eph. 4:1-6.

Not Ashamed of the Gospel

E. A. ALBRECHT*

At conference time we come together from the various churches of the district for Christian fellowship and to unite our efforts in a more effective work and ministry in the kingdom of our Lord. One of our concerns is the growth of the Church. Are we growing and increasing in numbers and in spiritual strength, or are we just holding our own or even losing out? How can we move forward in a more effective ministry that will make for spiritual growth and strength? Let us look for the inspiration and challenge that is found in the declaration of the Apostle Paul. First, in writing to the Romans, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek," Rom. 1:16. Then to Timothy at the close of his ministry after much persecution and affliction he again declares that he is not ashamed to be called an apostle of Jesus Christ and, that he had to suffer for it, 2 Tim. 1:11-12. In these verses Paul gives four reasons why he is not ashamed of the gospel of Christ.

I. Because it is the power of God.

Men are often ashamed of weakness and the failures that go with weakness, but very seldom of their power or strength. The athlete who has strength and power to win becomes the hero and idol of the community. He who has mental power and ability, and is able to forge ahead of others, is put on the honor roll. We glory in the strength and power of our country and with deep pride we say this is the most powerful nation on earth.

Paul, too, was a citizen of a great nation, but his glory was not Rome but rather the cross of Jesus Christ. Here was power that was of God; but how would the people of Rome receive it? Would they not laugh at his story of a crucified and risen Christ and a kingdom based on humility and love? They had become masters of the world by the use of military power that crushed and destroyed all that would not yield. Yes, the cross would seem as foolishness and as weakness in their sight. Yet in that great city he knew there would be those who would listen and believe the gospel and the divine power would touch those lives and they would become new creatures in Christ. He would never be ashamed of the gospel of Christ, and it was his fervent zeal in telling others about the power of Christ and what He could do for them that made his ministry fruitful and effective.

Are we ashamed to witness in the face of ridicule or criticism? The world still considers the gospel of Jesus Christ as being totally inadequate and impractical to be applied to modern needs and problems. God wants us to prove Him and to test the power of the gospel and not be ashamed to openly declare it before all men.

II. Not ashamed of the gospel because of it's purpose.

The purpose of the gospel is to save, or as Paul declares: It is the power of God unto salvation. Paul would glory in the gospel not only because it manifested power, but also because that power was directed toward man to redeem him and restore him from death to life. Rome had used her power not to establish peace and tranquility, but fear and oppression among her many subject people. The purpose of the gospel was to save the lost, to lift the fallen and give new hope and peace and joy. Paul would never be ashamed of the Savior who had transformed his life and would do the same for all who would believe in Him. He would not be ashamed of His wonderful Savior and would be glad to preach the gospel in Rome even though it meant ridicule and suffering.

If our churches are to grow we dare not keep the gospel to ourselves or be ashamed to present it to the lost. We dare not hide behind the excuse that it is hard to get people to come in and to join Mennonite churches. Paul did not expect it to be an easy task to win souls to Christ in Rome. Jews and Christians were not popular there and some of the intelligent and informed people of Rome said Christianity was a 'pernicious and detestable superstition.' Are we afraid that our acceptance of the gospel may show too much when we get out in public, and so must be careful to keep it covered? Not that we are to make a show of our faith, but certainly we should not be ashamed to make it known that we are Christians. A restaurant owner who was a Christian kept record, and over a period of three years there were only four times when he noticed customers bowing in prayer before partaking of the meal. Either Christians did not come there to eat or those that did failed to bow and give thanks. Boys going into service have often found it very easy to cover up their Christian faith when thrown in with others who would possibly make fun and laugh at them. But what about the rest of us when we get into that kind of a situation will we have the courage to be identified with Christ? In the time of testing Peter was afraid for his life and denied his Lord. We too in fear of public opinion or fear of ridicule or failure can deny our Lord and be ashamed of Him.

III. Not ashamed of the gospel because it is for all people.

All who would believe it whether Jew or Greek would receive the benefits of its saving and healing power. Judaism had been a national religion. Other nations had their own religion and the Roman people too had their national deities and worshiped them. Although Christianity was born in a small nation and a despised people, Paul boldly preached the gospel to the learned teachers and philosophers of Athens and was ready and anxious now to preach it

Challenge of Christian Journalism

AVA SCHNITTJER*

Did you ever stop to think of the tremendous power of a thin film of ink, one-fourth of one-thousandth of an inch thick, spread as print over a page? It can carry good news; it can carry the message of salvation to the remote corners of the world; or it can exploit and blind the reader.

What a pity it is, then, that so many readers are almost drugged with the great mass of secular propaganda concerning war, strikes, politics, murder, scandals, finance. One hundred years ago, three-fourths of all the published writing in America was on religious subjects. Today, in a publishing enterprise which boasts a three-billion-dollar business annually, the percentage is less than one-tenth.

There is a desperate need for a school of writers and editors who are full of the Christian faith and dedicated to making it known. What an impact could be made by a thousand dedicated Christian writers who would flood the publications of the land with Christian news, features, fiction, with the aim of reaching America for Christ!

In Roman Catholic schools in one of our large cities 1,000 writers are being trained right now to go out and take positions on the newspapers of the land. It would be wonderful if we could do just that.

There is a market for every kind of Christian writing. Editors, who must make a continuous study of what people want to read, say that there is a greater demand for articles on religion now than there has been at any other time in the past forty years. Reader's Digest carries at least one religious article a month, and many other periodicals are publishing religious articles which never did before.

Editors try to give the public what it wants to read, and to fill this current demand, some are writing on religion who don't know much about it. You probably wouldn't agree with their formula for finding peace of mind or their pattern for living victoriously.

To write about the Christian faith, three things are needed. The Christian writer needs first of all an experience with the Lord, then a growing background of knowledge and experience in his subject, and finally, something of the writing technique. Many are writing without the very first prerequisite. Naturally, then, they haven't the second. All they have is the technique.

You, we trust, have the first two requirements and can develop the third. Will you accept this missionary challenge, take time to look into your own background, explore the opportunities of writing about the Christian faith as you know it, and produce some copy? It may prove a real blessing to someone.

I praise God for the great benefits I received from Christian writers, particularly in the early days of my Christian life. The spoken word is carved in air and is soon lost. The printed word is cut in granite, and will live to bless countless souls through eternity. John said, "These things have I written." What if Moses had only spoken and had not recorded the things God did? Suppose Paul had only preached and established churches, but had not written his letters to them—letters we still have to guide us in the practice of a Christian life. Luke said: "It seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order, most excellent Theophilus, that thou mightest know the certainty of those things, wherein thou hast been instructed," (Luke 1:3-4). What if these men had thought: "I'm too busy to take time to write. I've got too much to do."

Dr. Ironside enjoyed a great ministry of preaching in his church and won many to the Lord. But how much poorer we'd be, had he not taken time to write down some of his experiences!

God has called you to preach, to teach, to farm, to mother a family, to build, to keep a store. Perhaps He also commands you to "write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are . . ." (Rev. 1:19).

I'll not try to lure you into writing by saying it's easy. It isn't. Writing is hard work, for most people at least. One doesn't just sit down and dash off a fine article when he has a few spare minutes. And there isn't much of praise, nor the stimulation of the excited response of an audience moved by your message. Your readers may not even remember your name. But if someone has found the Lord, or if someone has been helped to make a decision through the record of your experience, you have your reward.

If you've never written much except English themes and personal letters, you might like a few suggestions about how to go about this activity. We've assumed that you are a Christian and that you know something about your faith. Next, you need to know your reader. As you sit down to write, don't imagine that you are writing to millions of people. Think of a person you know, perhaps in your own church, who has a real need. How would you sit down and talk to her? What doctrine of the Word of God, if applied to her life, would solve her problem? Just a minute; don't give her the doctrine just yet. Perhaps her heart is too full right now for reason to appeal to her. She may say, "Yes; I understand, but. . . ." Can you think of an incident, your own or someone else's experience, where this truth you want her to see has operated—an example of the doctrines of God manifest in flesh? She is living in the realm of emotion right now, so you must meet her on the level of her emotions and then work back to her reason.

A line in the New Yorker told the answer of a child to a librarian's question about what he liked best in the library. He said: "The little chairs and the books about fierce things." Try to picture the dimensions of your reader's life. Set him down in a chair that fits and tell him about things that will interest him fiercely. Our reader is a person of mind, emotions, and will, and we need to write to the whole person. God gave us ground for appealing to the reason when He said, "Come now and let us reason together." But reason isn't enough. We must also meet the reader on the ground of emotion. The emotions of the public are being exploited today and channeled into almost everything under the sun except Christian living. We should write, not to exploit emotions, but to seize upon them and channel them for the Lord.

*Miss Schnittjer is Professor of Journalism, Grace College, Winona Lake, Ind. The above article reprinted by permission from the "Brethren Missionary Herald."

In the Bible you can find some of the best examples of the simple, clear kind of writing you need to do. Remember the answer of our Lord, when a certain young lawyer, willing to justify himself, asked, "Who is my neighbor?" The Lord answered in such a way that the record of this little incident has given us for all time a pattern of neighborliness; "A certain man, a certain man, went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him and departed, leaving him half dead." You know the rest. Make your writing flesh and blood. Make abstract ideas interesting by showing them lived out in one's experiences.

Remember, too, you aren't trying to put life into the gospel. It is alive. Be careful not to shackle it, but show the meaning of the gospel for the people and problems of our times.

also in Rome. Its power and benefits were not to remain the exclusive possession of any one race or nation. Christ died for all and His disciples were commissioned to go out into all the world and preach the gospel. He had no sense of guilt or shame in preaching this gospel in places where other religions were firmly established. This is a challenge to us to put away race prejudice and class distinction and not be ashamed to preach and apply the gospel before all men.

IV. Not ashamed of the gospel because of its eternal reward.

Paul was not ashamed of his Apostleship and his suffering. He said, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day," 2 Tim. 1:12. To stand up courageously, unashamed and witness for Him will bring its rewards. First there will be the fruit in souls won for Christ. Then Christ's reward for faithfulness. But Jesus also warns us of the penalty of being ashamed of Him, "Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and my words . . . of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels," Mark 8:38.

Flashes of Thought

Timely Light

Walter Gering

It seemed so utterly ridiculous—putting on the lights in broad daylight. If it had been one of those gloomy, foggy days one could have understood it. But it was one of those days in which the whole earth seemed to be flooded with sunshine. Except for a few hazy spots there was not a cloud in the sky. Yet in the midst of all this the lights had been turned on.

I had just been reading an article in one of the current magazines telling all about the waste in our modern world. This particular article had been commenting upon the wasteful practices in governmental circles. Example upon example was cited to show that such waste was not mere imaginary fancy on the part of disgruntled politicians. Wasteful practices were more than imaginary.

Apparently it was not only in governmental circles that such practices existed. Right here, as we sped along the rails, was a concrete example of utter waste in other circles as well. Imagine putting on the lights in broad daylight in a railway car with clear, open windows on both sides. Surely there was no purpose in this.

Not many minutes later we approached the city. The train slowly came to a stop at the railway station. There we remained motionless for some time, waiting for the renewal of our journey. Now I understood the reason for these lights. We were in almost total darkness.

You see, it was one of those stations where the cars are hidden away under the vast structures of the city. Looking out of the window I could see nothing; it was dark. Only within the car was there light. The conductor, fully aware of the approaching darkness, had turned on the lights in order that we might not be left in darkness as we waited. Outside it was dark; within it was light.

Such was the experience of the prophet Micah. Darkness covered the land; the storm of life was raging. Then it was that in full confidence he cried out: "When I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me." Fully assured that the Lord is able to turn even darkness into light, he was unafraid.

There are times when all of us sit in darkness. The journey seems to be delayed. There is no activity. We become bewildered and even fearful at the shadows which settle upon us. In such moments we too can assure our inner soul: "When I sit in darkness the Lord shall be a light unto me."

LORD, GIVE US THIS FAITH!

The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined, Isa. 9:2.

Recruiting for Christian Service

DON E. SMUCKER*

Our Conference faces a real crisis in personnel. The symbol of this crisis is the inadequate size of the Seminary student body. Our graduating class of about ten is divided among local churches, missions, teaching, and Conference executives. The demand far exceeds the supply.

Perhaps we ought to ask the Apostle Paul's question—a query which still has a simple, common-sense logic. Let us ask this question of Romans 10:14: ". . . and how shall they hear without a preacher?" Indeed, how shall they be taught without a teacher? How shall they be evangelized without a missionary? How shall they plan conference activities without a planner? How shall they have a church paper edited without an editor? And so the questions arise.

Strangely enough, the questions come at the moment of the greatest opportunity. Newsweek for March 28th has the picture of a Presbyterian minister on the cover with the caption: "Resurgent Protestantism—A Special Report." Inside are four pages of exciting analysis of the new Christian orthodoxy. The Presbyterian Church (Northern) has doubled its seminary enrollment in the past fifteen years. The Southern Baptists now have 5,470 students in five seminaries and, in addition, have a long-range building program totaling $24 million.

Life magazine, April 11th, contains a major article analyzing the "religious boom" in the USA. There is a remarkable swing to religious activities especially through Dr. Norman Vincent Peale. But Life wonders if all this is taking sin seriously.

Meanwhile, Billy Graham's campaign in Scotland is a daily news item in the American press and our big-time magazines regularly report on every conceivable aspect of Billy Graham's family, background, beliefs, hopes, and plans.

There you have it! Our own Conference lagging behind in the young people entering regular church vocations. Other denominations surging forward—some with a vital Christianity; some with mere religiosity.

II

This requires more specific information on how young people do enter some aspect of the ministry. Perhaps we would do well to refer to the study of Prof. Ralph Felton of Drew Theological Seminary; a study of the factors which led 1978 ministerial students to enter the ministry. Consider some of them now.

1. The pastor more than any other person is the one who can influence young men to enter the ministry.

To illustrate this, consider the cases of two Mennonite young men. The first one we shall call Charles. Charles told me that his pastor regularly told the congregation: "God is going to call a young man from this congregation into the ministry." Often he looked directly at Charles when he said this from the pulpit. Later he talked to him personally. All this led rather slowly but surely to college and seminary—even though a bit late, starting at twenty-five.

On the other hand, here is another young Mennonite named Peter. His pastor never mentioned the ministry in the pulpit or out of it. This young man felt led toward it. When he went into CPS the church said nothing. When he went into MCC work the church and pastor said nothing. When he went to seminary the same strange silence continued. Later he left these plans for the ministry, feeling that the pastor and the church didn't care what he did with his life.

Charles always felt that the Living God was speaking to him through his pastor. Peter never had this experience. Charles entered the ministry but Peter did not. It shows how crucial the pastor really is!

2. Young men are not staying out of the ministry because of girl friends, low salaries, or parental objections. Lack of Bible knowledge and lack of guidance are the two main reasons why young men stay out.

Here is a list of factors which tend to retard young men from entering the ministry:

	Percentage
1. Lack of Bible knowledge and a feeling of unworthiness	32.1
2. Lack of counseling or guidance	19.5
3. Financial obligation at home	11.1
4. Lack of knowledge about the work a minister does	10.9
5. Lack of knowledge about the need of the Church for ministers	9.9
6. Parents encouraged sons to select other work	5.0
7. Low salary of ministers	4.3
8. Discouragement from friends	4.2
9. Parental objection	2.1
10. Discouragement from girl friend	0.9
	100.0

Therefore, with a deeper Bible knowledge and a deeper religious experience plus guidance from the pastor we can expect the highest response. Notice that the first five factors on the above chart are the responsibility of adults.

3. The call to the ministry is not so much a sudden one as a growing experience of clarity.

*Associate Professor of Christian Ethics, Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago.

Here, for example, is the testimony of a young man in Seminary: "I cannot say that I had a definite call. My call has been a gradual process. When I graduated from high school I was not even going to college although I had no other plans. I met a camp counselor who persuaded me to attend college. Ever since I was at that camp, missions and the ministry were foremost in my mind and ever since then the call has continued to grow stronger until now I am sure."

Another young man said: "I mean by a definite call from God a continual urge and an inward feeling of dissatisfaction with any other field of work."

Therefore, young people need not stay out of the ministry because some spectacular experience of call has not come. It usually is a more gradual experience started by loving, concerned brothers and sisters in Christ. As a matter of fact, at our seminary in Chicago I have seen students enter school in order to be sure; in order to gain more insight. A few left feeling it was not the answer. Many more find deeper certainty in seminary through classroom, prayer meeting and field work.

4. The high school years are the crucial years in reaching young people for the ministry—nearly 63 per cent make the decision in high school.

Prof. Felton's study revealed that 40 per cent of the boys were considering the ministry before they were 16 years old, and 69 per cent before they were 19 years. Clearly, the pastor and the parents hold the key.

This is not to say that the college experience is not important—nearly 20 per cent decide in college. But the large majority make the decision in high school—and then go to college with this in mind. Therefore, those concerned for a larger number of young people in Christian service, must start in the high school level. Here we will need to recall that the typical high school student is being confronted with the technical, military and business vocations. Only 2.3 per cent of the seminary students studied by Prof. Felton attributed their selection of the ministry to a high school teacher! The YPU begins to look outstandingly important against the background of these facts. Also, retreats, camps, Voluntary Service. But, remember, the pastor and parents under God, have the key role.

III

While this article has stressed recruiting for Christian vocations directly in the church, we must continue to find God's will for the nonchurch vocations. To this end, the Hillsboro conference on April 15-16 on business is laudable. And, also the Wichita conference on April 22-24 for young women. Whatever our vocation it must be a part of God's will. Our special concern is for the Christian ministry. We know the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the God of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is calling men to the ministry. What we must do is to help young men and women interpret that call. Otherwise, many will not hear because there is no preacher.

Housewife or Homemaker

MRS. RICHARD BERKY

The term housewife has always sounded rather crude and incomplete. I have been tempted, but have never said anything, just like several weeks ago when the tax collector came around checking up on his records, to say "homemaker" rather than housewife when he came to that blank space listing occupation. He never asked me, just wrote down housewife. Certainly the word "homemaker" would be more indicative of what my occupation really should be.

The most important aspect of Christianity as applied to homemaking is degree and direction of motivation. In almost all homes there is or was at one time a desire to provide a home life conducive of congenial husband-wife relationship and to the growth and development of children. How well the family succeeds will depend upon their motivation. If the family and especially the mother is motivated by the desire to serve our Lord and Master Jesus Christ the chances of success are greatly increased. Statistics could be brought in to verify this point.

What I'm trying to point out is that a Christian motivation is the only one I know of which is strong enough to see the homemaker of this generation or any generation safely through the rough spots of life.

What are some qualities that make a Christian home different from a non-Christian home? Namely, love, understanding, patience, joy, peacefulness, truth, and helpfulness. When some of these qualities are not present in the mother and not passed on to her children, the child is sent into the world sorely lacking with a strong moral background to meet life's problems. Then the school, church, and community become responsible for him.

The homemaker must anticipate and find the strength to meet each new demand of her children. She must learn how to turn each small trial or defeat into victory. When decisions come too thick and fast and there is no time for deliberation it is possible for the Christian homemaker to draw upon Christian experience and discipline. We may not bring to mind the particular verse of the Bible which provides the answer to the specific problem at hand but we are able to draw from a wealth of Christian experience. Then, too, we can gain help through prayer and study of the Bible.

The most important task of the homemaker is, of course, the upbringing of the children. How well she succeeds in this task has an immediate effect upon society in general and the church in particular. The homemaker is really a missionary and as such is probably working in the most fertile existing mission field. For by far the largest number of Christians come from Christian homes. It is also unfortunately true that many of the strongest anti-Christians come from Christian homes. Thus we see that

YEARS OF APPRENTICESHIP, 16 mm., 30 minutes, rental, $9.00, Association Films, 79 E. Adams, Chicago, Ill. Available in Canada from General Films Limited, 810 Confederation Life Bldg., Winnipeg, Manitoba, rental, $8.00.

This film begins with Saul's witnessing in Damascus but leaving for Arabia after the people rejected him there. The Bible records this journey into Arabia very briefly in Galatians 1:17; "I went into Arabia." According to Galatians three years were spent in Arabia.

The film graphically portrays Saul's experience in Arabia as he is seeking to get a clear vision of what God wants him to do and to prepare himself for this great work. It presents Saul as having a real struggle physically in Arabia. The Bible is silent concerning the details in Arabia but the film helps to make this period in Saul's life real.

In the final part of the film Saul returns to Damascus. He has matured in his Christian faith and again is anxious to speak in the synagogue. He is disappointed when they refuse to accept his message. The Jews finally plot to kill him. He is let down over the city wall in a basket and escapes.

This film would be helpful for worship, for information, or for discussion and could be used from junior age on up. This is the third in the series of twelve on the life of Paul in the Cathedral series.

HOUSEWIFE OR HOMEMAKER?

in essence the Christian homemaker must be a missionary to her children and perhaps to her husband and friends as well. The duty of a missionary is primarily to win converts to Christ. This is done first by example and this is probably the most effective method with children. Upon the mother falls the responsibility of getting the children off to church. Engaging in church activities when time permits, serves as an example to children as they learn to accept and enjoy church responsibility.

The importance of this missionary roll can readily be understood if we look about us. Much of crime and unrest which we see in the ranks of the younger generation can be traced back to the difference in meaning implied by the words housewife and homemaker. We have not provided Christian homes for our children. The mother's role as homemaker has been removed from her.

Mothers immigrated to what appeared to be more important and glamorous tasks. The upbringing of the children was turned over to the dictates of psychologists, educators, comic books, movies, and television. Anything learned at home was unimportant. Now, too late, we realize what an important, if not glamorous task, homemaking really is. Certainly it deserves to be a full time occupation. If at all possible it deserves to be glamorized. It is a Christian calling second to none.

A Christian mother's life work need not be all physical work. However, if there is any doubt as to what all she needs to do to provide for the comfort and safety of her family, read Proverbs 31:10-31. But the joys and pleasures to be received from the growth and development of her children far outweigh the work involved. Who does not thrill to the first steps or first words of the little child. And the sometimes seemingly prattle and questionings of the three- to five-year-old provides a link and companionship not easily broken.

The faith and trust of the child surely shows to his parents that God has given them a wonderful gift and he deserves to be returned with the love that God has given to all His people.

Saskatchewan Youth Conference

North Battleford was host to a three-day conference, March 13-15, which was sponsored by the Saskatchewan Mennonite Youth Organization. The theme of the conference was, "Christian Youth and Living."

The guest speaker was Dr. D. C. Wedel, president of Bethel College. Some of the subjects Dr. Wedel spoke on were: "The Teaching Ministry of the Church," "Planning the Educational Program," "Organizing the Young People's Activities," "Living Life in Security," and "The Challenge of Youth." A tremendous field of work lies challenging for the young people with vision. This was very aptly brought out by our guest speaker. It was also pointed out that Christ must have the pre-eminence at all times if our labors are to be fruitful.

Dr. Wedel challenged youth to invest their lives for Christ, to full commitment to God's will, and to first "seek the kingdom of God and its righteousness."

In conjunction with the conference was the annual business meeting. The president, Rev. Peter Sawatzky, gave a brief resume of the organization and growth, from 1938 to 1955. The SMYO has a total asset of about a quarter million. A budget of $8000 was adopted.

Reports were heard from the various committees: Youth Farm, Elim Gospel Beach, mission stations in northern Saskatchewan, and missionaries supported in Japan—Esther Patkau, and India—Ben Sawatzky.

The board officers are: president, Peter Sawatzky, secretary-treasurer, Edgar Epp; vice-president, Korny Martens; spiritual emphasis—Arthur Wiens, Johnny Sawatzky, Dick Friesen; holdings, Henry W. Friesen, Peter Derksen; Conference representative, Rev. J. J. Thiessen.

PRAY ONE FOR ANOTHER

I cannot tell why there should come to me
  A thought of someone miles and miles away,
In swift insistence on the memory—
  Unless there be a need that I should pray.

Too hurried oft are we to spare a thought,
  For days together, of some friend away;
Perhaps God does it for us, and we ought
  To read His signal as a call to pray.

Perhaps, just then, my friend has fiercer fight
  Some overwhelming sorrow or decay
Of courage; darkness, some lost sense of right,
  And so in case he needs my prayer, I pray.

Friend, do the same for me! If I unsought
  Intrude upon you some crowded day,
Give me a moment's prayer, in passing thought;
  Be very sure I need it: Therefore, pray.

—Marianne Farningham

Did you pray today for that missionary friend who might need special strength and understanding in order to carry out God's will? Have you found the real blessing and power of the Holy Spirit as you yield yourself as a channel through intercessory prayer? What joy is awaiting each of us who avail ourselves to this service!

"The foreign missionary work is in continual need of more Spirit-filled, well-equipped missionaries and national workers, and there is constant need for increase in funds in many places, but the greatest need is for men and women at home who are filled with the Spirit and on fire for God, to become true laborers in the Master's vineyard, through intercessory prayer." The Apostle Paul wrote to the Christians at Ephesus concerning their Christian privileges and obligations, "Praying always with all prayer and supplication . . . for all saints," Ephesians 6:18.

We, the Pacific District YPU, would like to introduce you to our missionary program. This year the Lord increased our vision to the foreign field. Rev. and Mrs. Earl Roth and Rev. and Mrs. Don Aeschliman, two young couples from our own Pacific District, left for the mission field last summer. Another couple from our district, Dr. and Mrs. John Zook, plan to leave for Africa in August. For these missionaries we have pledged $1200 of our $1935 budget for this year. Since this time, interest among the youth for mission work has increased steadily, and hearts have been challenged to share the responsibility of "going into all the world and preach the Gospel."

After their arrival on the field, both the Roth's and the Aeschliman's have written letters which have been mimeographed and distributed to the YPU's of our district. A greater vision has been realized with this close contact of the mission field, and we desire that the Lord shall continue to send forth more of us into the harvest fields. This has been the testimony of several of our young people. ". . . Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth laborers into his harvest."

Earl and Ruth Roth and Yvonne.

Earl Roth claims the Grace Mennonite Church, Albany, Oregon, as his home. His wife, Ruth Jantzen Roth, comes from the Paso Robles, California, Mennonite Church. Both Earl and Ruth have completed college and Bible school. At the present, they are studying the French language at Brussels, Belgium, in preparation to teach in one of the Congo mission schools. They are serving under the Congo Inland Mission Board. Two children have blessed their home; Yvonne, 5, and Loren Dale, 7 months—who was born shortly after their arrival in Brussels.

In a letter received from Earl and Ruth they say, "The French course is required by the Colonial Department of the Belgian Government for those who will teach in the Congo. It is divided into three parts: 1) A concentrated study of the French language with 15 hours class work per week until Jan. 1; 2) then it will be changed to 8 hours French until June 1, with finals in both courses; 3) the second week in June the Colonial Course with its 18 different aspects, such as history, geography, law, art, etc.,

of the Congo, begins and will be covered in 8 weeks, followed by an oral individual examination in French for each course."

"You see why we must really know French, and be able to speak it without hesitation. Please continue to pray that we may have a clear grasp of the French language; and that our witness to our Belgian friends will be keen and draw them to the Lord."

The Aeschlimans, Don, Gregory, Eva, Evonne Lee.

The Aeschliman's left for South America last September under The Evangelical Alliance Mission (TEAM). Before they left their home church at Colfax, Washington, the Onecho Mennonite Church conducted a commissioning service for Don and Eva Mae. At the present, Don is serving as the house master of the boy's hostel and principal for the Florence Eurafrican School. Eva Mae is kept very busy in the capacity of a nurse and a class instructor.

Look over our shoulder, now, as we read from a recent letter from Don Aeschliman. "Her dispensary practice has grown . . . . It is a rare morning when she does not have from five to a dozen natives at the back door waiting patiently for unuti, medicine, or for a bandage. This morning we had a very pitiful time with twin babies about six weeks old who are dying of malnutrition and all the things that go with it. The mother does not have enough milk for both babies and they were just covered with rags. Eva treated their pus-filled eyes, then gave them each a bottle of Vonnie Lee's milk and some of Vonni's clothes to keep them warm. (In April winter begins in South Africa.) Somehow you just can't turn them away when they are so near and so much in need. I couldn't help thinking of our Savior's words, 'Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of God.'

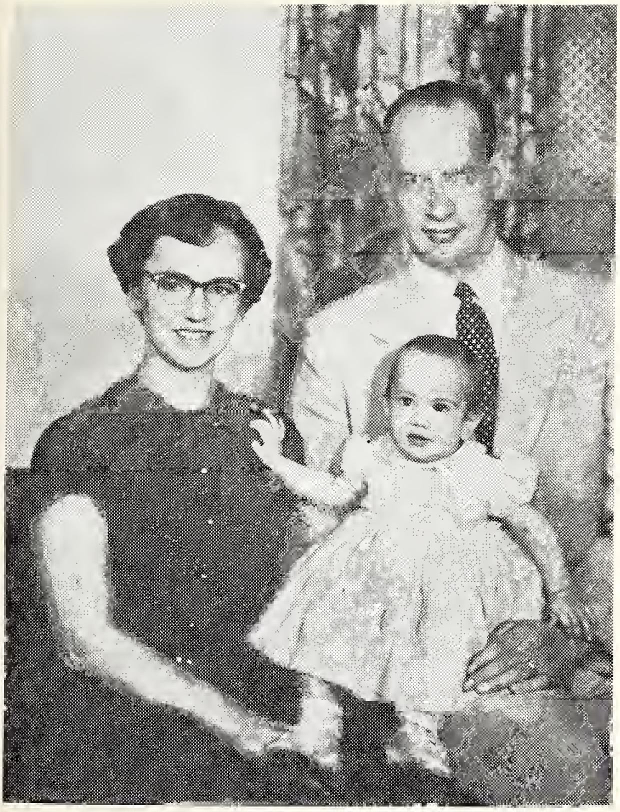
"The opportunities here among the students are many and challenging. We have them for chapel, in the classrooms, and then in the work-periods in the afternoons. As yet we have not gained their confidence to the place in which they will come to us, but we rejoice to see their interest as we read the Word to them before lights out at night, and to hear their own stumbling attempts at prayer. We surely feel this is a fertile field with Africans and colored alike, and we only seek the Lord's guidance in serving Him here."

The Zook family is busy completing final arrangements for sailing to Africa. John Zook first went to South Africa with his parents at one year of age, returning to the United States six years later. He was in the Belgian Congo from 1939 to 1946 during which time he took his high school courses by correspondence from the American School in Chicago. During the next three years he remained in the Congo and served as a missionary with the Unevangelized Tribes Mission. John returned to America at the age of 22 and attended Bob Jones University, and Lewis and Clark College in Portland, Oregon, where he received a B.A. degree in Chemistry. In 1950 he was admitted to the University of Oregon Medical School, and after four years of training he received his M.D. degree. This year he will complete his internship at Emanuel Hospital, in Portland.

Jeanne was born and raised in Hood River, Oregon. After completing high school in Hood River, she attended Cascade College in Portland and Emanuel Hospital School of Nursing. In 1952 Jeanne received her B.A. degree in Nursing.

John and Jeanne Zook are members of the Alberta Community Mennonite Church, Portland, Oregon. They have been active in the various departments of the church and Sunday school. Dr. Zook is a member of the Christian Medical Society and has been actively engaged in trying to reach doctors and medical students for Christ.

At 14 years of age John received a call to mission service and has had the vision of reaching Africans for Christ since that time. He became interested in medicine at an early age, and the time spent in Africa only increased his interest and gave him a greater insight into the need of medical care for the African people—and the wonderful opportunity of using the door of medicine in reaching them for Christ.



Dr. and Mrs. John Zook and Rebecca Claire.

Jeanne made a decision to be willing to go into foreign missionary service during her high school days. God led Jeanne and John together while they were at Emanuel Hospital, and they were married in September, 1952. Rebecca Claire was born in April, 1954, and is a rich treasure in their lives. She will doubtless be a light for Jesus shining brightly in the Belgian Congo.

Dr. and Mrs. Zook will be leaving Portland in early July for a short period of deputation work in the Pacific District Conference churches and other churches as time permits. In August they will be in Chicago for the Missionary Orientation course, and their plans are to sail from New York on August 16, 1955. They will be in Belgium for one year for further study of the French language and courses in Tropical Medicine.

In a recent letter they write, "The Lord has been faithful in many ways during the time of our preparation for service in the Belgian Congo. The blessings increase with each passing day and we are very happy to be obedient to His will for our lives. It seems that the many things to be accomplished will never be completed, but He has given quietness of heart in each problem and has taught us to trust more fully in Him. His promises are more precious and meaningful as we are made to rest heavily upon them. How thankful we are for our many friends who are already praying for God's blessing and leading in our lives."

John and Jeanne request a special interest in your prayers at this time that God will use them in reaching the African people for Christ. "And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick," Luke 9:2.

Someone has aptly said, "Young people must go; parents must let go; and others must help go." To each of us comes the challenge of the foreign mission field.

The need for more workers in the Lord's harvest field is evident on every hand. The new missionary may often find himself in a place of great responsibility shortly after arriving on the field. Though all of us do not have the call to full time Christian work, each must dedicate his time, talents, and possessions to the Lord. We should respond to God's love-sacrifice for us at Calvary by yielding to His control all that we are and all that we possess.

Yet, we are told by experienced Christian workers that the greatest need in their work is for prayer support. All of the education, experience, and equipment that a missionary can have will be of no avail unless the Spirit of God should work in the hearts of sinful man. Only the Holy Spirit can transform a sinner to a saint.

God grant that we as young people might learn to labor in prayer with our fellow Christians who have answered the call to full time service. "Prayer is not just asking God for something we want, but rather asking Him for something He wants us to have and seeking to find out what that something is. We are told that if we ask anything according to His will—He heareth us. It is His will that matters—not ours." —General Dobbie.

Our Bible

"The just shall live by faith," —Habakkuk 2:4.

The Bible is the most astounding book ever written. The languages in which it originally appeared have long since joined the ranks of the dead, but the words of this ancient book have been reincarnated in the living speech of every continent on earth.

Man must be forever trying his spirit against the spirit of the world. Calamity smites him; confusion overtakes him; fortune smiles and then suddenly frowns on him. Out of these conflicting emotions he cries for a sure word of direction, a solace to his wounded spirit, a light amid his surrounding darkness. These he must have or perish.

With grateful heart he finds them unerringly in the Bible. It speaks his language; it "finds" him where he is, and points him to the place he wishes to go. It thus is born anew as the vivid and satisfying answer to the need of every generation. As long as men desire Reality and seek for God, they will turn wistfully the pages of this Immortal Epic of the soul.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

The examinations of the winter term are over and the spring term has begun. The week end between the two semesters was taken up with a choir tour of several Saskatchewan churches. The group of sixty-eight students and three instructors left by bus, car and station wagon at 5:30 on Saturday morning. By evening they were at Drake and presented their program in the country church there. The main item on the program was the presentation of the first half of the oratorio St. Paul by Mendelssohn. The choir was under the direction of Mr. G. Wiebe, while Mrs. Wiebe was the accompanist. Dr. I. I. Friesen was the speaker.

On Sunday morning the members of the choir visited the three churches in Saskatoon. In the afternoon they presented the oratorio in the Third Avenue United Church and in the evening in the Rosthern Church. Everywhere they received a hearty welcome.

The following morning the choir was invited to the Rosthern Junior College to have fellowship with the students there. From here they left for Waldheim to give their program for the fourth and last time. Here also the C. M. B. C. students were greeted with the friendliest hospitality. From Waldheim they left for Winnipeg where they arrived on Tuesday morning.

E. G. Kaufman gave a series of lectures to the students on the basic Christian doctrines.

The College Board met recently to discuss some vital issues concerning the future of our Bible College.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Easter recess began April 7 at 4:15 and school resumed April 12 at 8:00. The College Choir left on their spring tour on Good Friday morning. They gave their home concert at Pioneer Hall on April 19.

In chapel one morning Helen Voth showed pictures taken in Japan while she lived there with her parents last year. She told of the mission work started there. J. Boyd Cressmann who taught English here last year and is now attending the University of Michigan spoke on "The Narrow Gate" on Wednesday.

President Ronald von Riesen spent the week before Easter in Mountain Lake, Minnesota, holding holy week services at the First Mennonite Church.

The Pioneer staff expects the 1955 Yearbook back from the printers by the middle of May.

A sixty piece band from the University of South Dakota presented a concert at Pioneer Hall. The band was directed by Roy T. DeVilviss. The concert was sponsored by the College Choir and members of the band were served a supper by the choir.

A two-day "work-day" project was carried out April 21 and 22. Students and faculty members worked at whatever jobs were offered them by people in the community. The amount of money they earned will be used to buy a new piano for the chapel. Any money left over will be turned into the general fund of the college.

ARTHUR JOST GRANTED U. S. CITIZENSHIP

An order on April 6 by the Supreme Court of Fresno County, California, granted Arthur Jost of Reedley, Calif., the right to United States citizenship—a quest which he began in May, 1950.

Although the U. S. Supreme Court had made a ruling on Brother Jost's case last Feb. 1, 1954, which in effect should have granted him citizenship soon thereafter, the order granting citizenship was delayed by numerous technicalities. According to plans, Brother Jost is to be naturalized as a U. S. citizen on April 22.

Born in Canada, Brother Jost was originally denied his petition for naturalization on the basis that an individual cannot claim exemption to military service if the organization to which he belongs does not as a whole teach its members to refuse to perform either combatant or noncambatant service. After unsuccesful appeal attempts in two higher courts, the case was taken to the U. S. Supreme Court.

By its decision the nation's highest judicial body confirmed the intention and validity of the law which makes provision for the naturalization of conscientious objectors.

The petition to the Supreme Court in behalf of Brother Jost's case was prepared by Dean Acheson, former U. S. Secretary of State, and his associates—Graham Claytor and Charles Horsky—whose efforts played a very important part in the favorable decision. The services of Mr. Acheson and his associates were given without charge because of their interest in the principles involved.

Brother Jost, adminstrator of Kings View Homes and the West Coast MCC Regional Office, was assisted by MCC in carrying his case to the Supreme Court. This assistance was provided because of the implications this case had for persons taking the conscientious objector position.

The order granting Brother Jost citizenship is a cause of gratitude to God because of the legal precedent it establishes in cases involving sincere conscientious objectors.

MCC TO AID TACHEN ISLAND EVACUEES

MCC personnel in Formosa are preparing to provide a limited amount of medical aid to evacuees from the Tachen Islands who have been placed in the Hualien area. Dr. Roland P. Brown of Freeman, S. D., reports that about 3,000 such evacuees are temporarily living around Hualien in schools until special villages are ready for them. Hualien is the site of the MCC hospital and clinics. At present these people are receiving food from the government. There may be a need for assistance after government aid is cut off and MCC personnel are watching the situation so aid can be provided if needed.

On an Easter week-end tour, the 18-member PAX chorus in Germany presented four programs in German Mennonite communities.

Traveling with the chorus was Richard Hertzler of Ludwigshafen, head of the German Mennonite Relief Organization who served as a link between the vocal group and the German Mennonites. Brother Hertzler presented the chorus members and explained the aims of PAX.

The Easter tour included two places where PAX served previously—Neuwied and Espelkamp—the Wedel community where a PAX construction project is currently underway. The chorus sang almost exclusively in German. The group now has a repertoire of more than 15 German language songs plus some quartet selections.

DUTCH MENNONITE DOCTOR TO JORDAN

Dr. Alice van der Zwaag, a Dutch Mennonite from Gasthuis, Middleburg, Holland, has joined the MCC personnel in Jordan to aid in the relief program. Like several other MCC workers in Jordan, she has been loaned to a local hospital. Dr. van der Zwang will be working at the Evangelical Hospital at Nablus in company with another MCC worker from the Dutch Mennonites—Miss Grietje Groenveld, a registered nurse.

The evening closed with a season of prayer, Scripture reading, and a hymn of consecration.

On April 17, Rev. and Mrs. Henry A. Kliewer showed pictures and spoke to the Woodlawn congregation at the evening service. The Kliewers told of their work among the Hopi Indians of Arizona. At present Rev. Kliewer is a student at the Seminary.

A Mother's Prayer

I wash the dirt from little feet,
And as I wash I pray,
"Lord, keep them ever pure and true
To walk the narrow way."
I wash the dirt from little hands,
And earnestly I ask,
"Lord, may they ever yielded be
To do the humblest task."
I wash the dirt from little knees,
And pray, "Lord, may they be
The place where victories are won,
And orders sought from Thee."
I scrub the clothes that soil so soon,
And pray, "Lord, may her dress
Throughout eternal ages be Thy robe of righteousness."
When many hours shall pass, I know
I'll wash these hands again;
And there'll be dirt upon her dress
Before the day shall end.
But as she journeys on through life
And learns of want and pain,
Lord, keep her precious little heart
Cleansed from all sin and stain;
For soap and water can not reach
Where Thou alone canst see.
Her hands and feet, these I can wash—
I trust her heart to Thee.

The Motorist's Prayer

The Australian Road Safety Council is making every effort to lessen the toll of road accidents. In issuing the following prayer, composed by the well-known Australian sociologist, F. Oswald Barnett, it says: "All too often we try to solve our problems by purely secular means, and while the Australian Road Safety Council does not intend to slacken its endeavors in other directions it nevertheless welcomes this opportunity to carry its life-saving campaign into the spiritual sphere."

O ever-present Lord, I pray,
Be with me at the wheel today.

Fill every corner of my mind,
That wandering thoughts no lodging find.

And take control of my two eyes,
That I may be alert and wise,

MOTHER

She stretcheth out her hand to the poor, yea she reacheth out her hands to the needy.

Strength and honor are her clothing; and she shall rejoice in time to come.

She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness.

She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.

Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her.

—Book of Proverbs

And take my feet, and take my hands,
That they react to quick demands.

Give me thy guidance, Friend Divine,
For other folk as well as mine.
Then, when we come to journey's end,
My prayers to Heaven will ascend,
To utter thankfulness to thee,
Who kept the wheel all day with me.

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

1. To work for a Conference unified in Christ.
2. To teach the gospel of Christ effectively.
3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

CHRISTIAN HOME SUNDAY

Sunday, May 8, is Christian Home Sunday, formerly called Mother's Day. The two designations are very similar. Where there is a Christian home there is also a Christian mother, and where there is a godly mother there is likely to be a Christian home.

There is no doubt but that the mother is the key person to the Christian home. A good mother knows her God and loves her children with a sacred love. Her love is a picture of the love of God. It continues on even if it is ignored or rejected. Fathers may turn against their children, brothers and sisters may become enemies, husbands and wives may separate, but a true mother's love follows her children wherever they go. We do well to pause in honor of the Christian mothers of the world and to give thanks for the mothers who have guided us heavenward.

The mothers themselves may well take stock to see if they are as faithful as they could be; whether they are showing the children the right way of life and the right Guide. Mothers are human and make mistakes; but at heart they feel the tug of the divine and long to have their children become worthy men and women.

But it is the task of the entire home to create the Christian atmosphere which will produce godly characters. Fathers dare not shirk their responsibilities in this great task. They cannot delegate their responsibility to the mother. Parents must stand together guiding the home over the dangerous places and inspiring children to commit themselves and their ways to God. God bless our homes.

THE MIRACLE OF SPRINGTIME

At this writing nature is gradually showing forth the beauty of a transformed earth. The trees are unfolding their leaves, flowers are sharing their beauty and fragrance, the grass is turning from a brownish deadness to a deep green. The warm rains and the bright sun are bringing forth new life. It is the time of the annual miracle in transforming a dull, dead earth into a picture of beauty and wonder. This cannot just "happen." There must be a mighty power and a noble design back of it all. The springtime speaks eloquently of God.

It is a picture of what God can do with every soul. Out of the disappointments, broken hopes, cold affections may come new beauty and grandeur by the warmth of God's love and His rains of providence. The sun alone will not do it, the rains are also important. As nature responds to the pull of divine forces upon it so may our lives respond to the power of the divine upon our souls!

MAKING MEDICAL HISTORY

The week of April 12 will go down in medical history as a world event. At that time the results of the polio tests were released. To an anxiously awaiting world came the news that "the vaccine works." It is claimed that it is up to 90 per cent effective.

Never had a medical development been such big, instantaneous news around the world as this announcement. People were called to prayers of thanksgiving. An awful enemy seems to have been practically conquered. It is thought that in due time polio, that dread disease, will be as scarce as smallpox.

The final discoverer of this important vaccine is the forty-year-old Jonas Edward Salk, who has been working on this project for five years. Already his name is added to that list of other medically great who have done so much to conquer various diseases.

For this progress we honor the youthful scientist, and give thanks to God who has led men to discover this secret. One after another of the mysteries of science are discovered as men give themselves devotedly to the solutions needed.

NO RELIGION BY PROXY

There are many things that we may receive by proxy. We may hear of people around the world whom we have never met, but whose existence we do not doubt. The same holds true for places; we accept the fact that certain cities and countries exist even though we have had no firsthand contact with them. We accept many scientific conclusions without performing the experiments ourselves.

But there are certain other matters that must be experienced first hand. We can hire no one to eat for us in our stead. No one can do our sleeping for us. No athlete can hire someone else to do his training for him. No one can become a skilled pianist by having a proxy practice for him. These matters cannot be received secondhand.

Religion belongs to the latter class. No matter how good our parents may have been, their religion will not suffice for us. Many a man tries to carry his religion in his wife's name. Others seem to feel that their parents or friends have laid up a surplus of religion upon which they may draw in case of emergency. Religion cannot be borrowed from someone else. We can not be Christians by proxy. God must be experienced direct and first-handed.

Ye Are the Epistle of Christ

FRANK S. HARDER*

The Scripture declares through the Spirit-breathed word of Paul in 1 Corinthians 3:2, 3: "Ye are our epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men: manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart." (Italicized portion omitted). Of particular concern for us is the phrase "Ye are—manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ" for we have an undeniable responsibility for furnishing (being) the credentials by which a lost world will receive the salvation which Christ died to give.

The custom of furnishing credentials or references is universal. Sometimes the letter is merely one of identification such as the FBI representative may present when he comes to seek information regarding the validity of a young man's request for 1-W or even 1-A-O status. Or the letter may be one of endorsement such as a duly-appointed solicitor for some welfare agency will produce before presenting the cause for which he has been chosen.

"Do you have any references?" The question is repeated scores of times. Why is it necessary? Simply because man has demonstrated himself to be unworthy of trust. The wise employer will require at least three sources of references from reliable agencies to vouch for the character and abilities of the applicant. However, although such references are a means of assurance for the employer, they are by no means a guarantee. They are necessary but their value is relative. Understandably so, for the applicant will seek reference from his best friends because their word is likely to be in harmony with his desire.

The world is hearing hundreds of voices today—all of them heralding gospels, so-called. There is a veritable clamor for the attentive ear, both the individual and the mass. Yet there is only one gospel worthy of the name for the gospel is the "good-news" that God has provided salvation for lost man. The gospel is the good tidings of saving grace through our Lord Jesus Christ. Why is it then that the world pays so much attention to every cult and ism of the day while the gospel of Jesus Christ so often goes begging for lack of earnest inquiries?

Beloved, the world is confused, lost! The world knows not which way to turn! nor whom to believe. True, many people don't even seem to care but millions are bowed down with care and distress. What credentials can you and I produce to convince this groping, dying populace that we are not another cult, that we offer not just another message but that we have THE MESSAGE which saves both soul and life for God!

We have the Word of God, the only message the unregenerate world needs—"that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures and that He rose again." We have the word of God's redeeming grace "for by grace are ye saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God, not of works lest any man should boast." We know the way, for Christ said: "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life; no man cometh unto the Father but by Me." We know the consequences of man's failure to appropriate the gift of God's salvation because the Bible declares: "He that hath the Son hath life, but he that hath not the Son shall not see life but the wrath of God abideth (already and forever) on him." We know—if only we would literally believe it—that the end of man's way is death, everlasting, in the "lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." And we should know that the individual who ultimately is lost because of his failure to receive Christ the Savior may well be justified in pointing his finger at us professing Christians saying, "they misrepresented Christ to me."

Beloved, we have the gospel and must realize the need. Our problem is to find a means of access. It is our responsibility—but how? "Ye are the epistle of Christ, known and read of men." We are God's credentials by which He presents His Word and His Son. Has God failed? No. Has Christ? No, we all agree. The lack, then, lies at our feet. We have proven to be faulty references. As God's credentials we have not measured up to the standard which He requires and the world expects. The world may be (and is) ignorant of the way of salvation, but the world is not ignorant. They know what they have a right to expect of us. They also know what God's standard of righteousness is for you and me. As long as we fail to convince the world of the reality, the joy, the peace, the consistency of our hope and satisfaction in Christ, we fail to accomplish the very purpose God has for leaving us in the world. Further, as long as we fail God in this, the greatest responsibility of all time, we aid the wicked devices of Satan and promote his scheme to gain more residents for hell. We need to keep in mind constantly the fact that when we fail in God's purpose we enhance the devil's program. And the frightening reality of it all is, we act so unconcerned about it while we barter the souls of men for whom Christ died in order that we may continue to live our lives without sense of responsibility toward those who are dying in sin.

The pastor of a certain mission church had placed a board above the auditorium clock reading: "83 every minute." After some weeks a delegation of members came to him with the request that he remove the board. It haunted them, they said. It might well haunt all of us for the simple explanation is that 83 souls go down into a Christless eternity every minute of every passing day.

We agree it is not God's fault; it is not a flaw in the finished work of Christ, not unfaithfulness or inability on the part of the Holy Spirit; it is not the

One Hundred Twenty Visitors

MAYNARD SHELLY*

(This article deals with "Objective 5" as listed on Editorial page)

You are pushing your chair back from the supper table when you hear a knock at the door. You try to think who could be coming to see you at this time, but you are hardly prepared for what you see. For you find a great crowd of people standing on the porch and on the steps and on the lawn. You see a few white folks in the crowd, but most of them are colored. There are men, women, and children. But they make no noise. They just stand there silently, and look at you.

You blink your eyes, and gulp.

"Well, who are you?" you say.

No one makes a sound. But a brown man wrapped in a rumpled sheet pushes his way through the crowd and hands you a folded piece of paper.

You take the paper and unfold it in a hurry. On the paper you find these words written: "We are 120 people who are your share of the 6,000,000 people in the General Conference Mennonite Church's mission fields. We have come to see what you Mennonites have to offer us."

You don't know exactly what to say, but you know they expect you to be polite, so you say, "Come in, won't you?"

But just as soon as you've said that, you feel you made a mistake. The floor creaks and groans as the folks file into your small living room. Fortunately, the children stay outside on the lawn. But the others pass silently in until there are people everywhere, in the kitchen, the dining room, and the living room. When you think they are all in, you look out the door, and find the porch still crowded.

But everybody seems to feel at home, as they sit on the chairs, on the stairway, and on the floor. You start to wonder if they are going to stay overnight. Even if you had ten bedrooms, that would mean twelve to a room, and that would be a little crowded. Since your house is smaller than that, maybe some will have to sleep in the barn. But you don't feel quite right about asking anyone to sleep out there.

And then there is breakfast. It looks like over half of these folks come from the rice-bowl countries of Asia. You feel you ought to send somebody out for a couple sacks of rice, but you can't think of any store that has that much rice on hand.

But now the folks start talking a little bit among themselves. A man sitting over there on the steps says he is from China. He says that he and thirty-nine others come from those parts of China where for forty years our General Conference missionaries used to work. There are no missionaries there now, but they still remember the work that the missionaries did. He reports that some of his friends are holding services and teaching others.

He pauses, and then he asks, "Do you still remember to pray for us?"

You try to think of just what to say to this man when someone on the floor begins to speak.

"Twenty of us come from India," says a brown man with a small beard. "We have a man with us who is getting leprosy, and I am the only one who is a Christian. Some of the others are very suspicious of this Christianity. They do not like some of the things they hear about America. Can you tell them something to change their minds?"

You wrinkle your brow as you look around at the brown men from India. You wonder if any of them have been listening to the Communists.

But then a man standing behind the easy chair in the corner tells you he is a farmer from Japan. Right away you want to ask him to come with you to see your farm, but he doesn't give you time.

He says, "There are twenty of us here from Japan, too. None of us are Christian, although we hear your missionaries live near us. Some people go to their classes, but we don't go. What are your missionaries teaching them?"

These people are asking a lot of questions. Perhaps it would be a good idea to call the minister. He'd like to see all these folks anyway, and could perhaps answer these questions better.

You look toward the telephone, and there beside the stand sits a dark woman holding a baby. When she sees you looking at here, she smiles.

"I am a Christian," she says, "but the others from the Congo are not. My baby was sick once, and I took him to your hospital. That is where I heard about Christ for the first time. But a lot of the other folks don't believe."

You count all the black folks from the Congo, and counting the baby there are ten. They look very strange sitting huddled in that corner of your living room. But there are quite a few folks who look like they come from the United States.

A pleasant young fellow says, "I go to a mission church in the big city. But most of the other folks who are your responsibility in the United States and Canada don't. They live nearby, but they don't pay any attention to the services. There are eighteen of us who live in the cities and farms of our country. We need more workers who will dedicate themselves to working in these missions."

A fellow wearing overalls looks around the doorway, and says, "My wife and I are the only Indians here, but we live in the United States too."

So he's an Indian, you think. You wondered where he came from.

The Indian continues, "But there are Indians who live in Mexico and South America. We hope more of your missionaries go to our people there."

"I'm from South America too," says a little Spanish girl. "Ten of us come from Colombia, and I'd like

Meditations in the Night Watches

MRS. ALVIN ELLIOTT

The other day a dear friend remarked, "When I can't go to sleep at night, I just get up." The thought of getting up in a cold room is not very inviting to me, so I said to her, "When I can't sleep I can think." Another friend remarked, "That is just the trouble, we sometimes think too much!"

What I really meant was that we can meditate and pray. As in Psalm 63:6 "When I remember thee upon my bed and meditate on thee in the night watches." So a wakeful night has proved a blessing to me many times.

In a radio talk by Dr. George W. Crane, an answer given to an inquirer's problem of spending many sleepless nights he said this, "Just lie still and do not worry about not being able to sleep, but think about something constructive. Because when you are lying down you rest your heart and in that way you can feel rested in the morning."

Taking this advice the other wakeful night, I thought about the interesting reports by Andrew Shelly of their airplane trip visiting our different mission stations. Then I decided to take a trip too, not having any way of travel at my disposal except my memory (a God-given faculty). I first landed in Colombia, South America, where the Gerald Stuckys (now on furlough) are working. Having seen pictures of their work in bringing order out of chaos and giving health and hope to many, I was inspired. Of course I couldn't enjoy their friendly smiles and handshakes, like a real visit would make possible; nevertheless I left with a prayer for them and their work.

Then quicker than you could blink your eyes, I was in Paraguay where Miss Marie Regier had been working. I had enjoyed her article about "The last days at Neuland," and I could just see some of the beauties of nature that she described. Memory sometimes plays tricks, so I am not sure whether this is the place where R. G. LeTourneau, the great industrialist, and ten PAX men, had begun with machinery to build roads. However, I know it was in some South American community where they are helping the people which I am sure was a blessing to them. I left a prayer for this country and the next moment landed in the Congo Inland Mission in Africa.

Having just recently re-read the "Life of David Livingstone," and recalling the many hardships he endured to bring Christ to Africa, I was amazed how this great work is going on, and how "light is shining out of darkness" as the reports and pictures by Tina Quiring and Rev. Enns' informed us last year when they visited our church.

This work is an inspiration and a challenge to us at home, as well as a blessing to the laborers and the natives who are transformed by God's grace.

Then on to India! Yes we truly have a lot of interests there. As Melva Lehman, who has recently returned to India, is a native of our community, her visit with us last summer meant a lot to us. Also Drs. Harvey and Ella Bauman, with their son, Kenneth and family, seem close to us, as Dr. Ella is a former member of our church and community. I thought of their devotion to their work and accomplishments and thanked God for their consecrated lives and prayed that their work might continue to be blessed.

As I passed by China I left a prayer for the Christians that have remained true to the faith, in the face of many trials and testings. Miss Kuyf, a former missionary to China, was at our church last summer as a speaker for the young people's retreat. Her interest in ALL mission work was very inspiring.

On to Japan I go, which is one of our newer missionary ventures. However the number of workers going there has been increasing quite rapidly. One of the missionaries, Verney Unruh, was leader in our young people's retreat several years ago. I always enjoy reading about their work in Japan, and pray that many souls may be saved.

Now back home to USA. And as I think of the many faithful workers in our homeland and elsewhere, that covet our prayers, I say, "Let us take more time to pray! In the night watches, at our work in the home, or in the field or whatever our chores may be." United in prayer with each other and God, great things can be accomplished.

Now a short nap after this long trip and I feel rested and ready for another day.

If God should see fit to send you a sleepless night, why not use it by praying or singing praises in your heart to Him, who has made us and given us all things. If some of these wakeful nights could be used for constructive thinking and prayer, we surely would be aroused out of our complacency, and would take a keener interest in all of God's work.

THE STONES CRY OUT. 16 mm., color, 45 minutes. Rental $20.00, Moody Bible Institute, 820 N. LaSalle, Chicago 10, Illinois.

This film presents the results of an archaeological study of Palestine where "the stones cry out" proving the accounts of the Bible. It emphasizes the marvels of fulfilled prophecy. In excellent color photography it shows scenes of Jerusalem; Petra, the ancient city of the Edomites which God said would be a place of desolation; Babylon, the city of Nebuchadnezzar; and Tyre, the Phoenician city which prophecy declared would be made a bare rock. It has been publicized as a "projected sermon." It presents the challenge for all to respond to the eternal verities in the Bible by accepting Christ as Savior and Lord.

A Little Parable for Mothers

The young mother set her foot on the path of life. "Is the way long?" she asked.

And her guide said, "Yes. And the way is hard. And you will be old before you reach the end of it. But the end will be better than the beginning."

But the young mother was happy, and she would not believe that anything could be better than these years. So she played with her children, and gathered flowers for them along the way, and bathed with them in the clear streams; and the sun shone on them, and life was good, and the young mother cried, "Nothing will ever be lovelier than this."

And then night came and storm, and the path was dark, and the mother drew them close and covered them with her mantle, and the children said, "Oh mother, we are not afraid for you are near, and no harm can come," and the mother said, "This is better than the brightness of day for I have taught my children courage."

And the morning came, and there was a hill ahead, and the children climbed and grew weary, and the mother was weary, but at all times she said to the children, "A little patience and we are there." So the children climbed, and when they reached the top, they said, "We could not have done it without you, mother." And the mother, when she lay down that night, looked up at the stars, and said, "This is a better day than the last, for my children have learned fortitude in the face of hardness. Yesterday I gave them courage. Today I have given them strength."

And the next day came strange clouds which darkened the earth—clouds of war and hate and evil, and the children groped and stumbled, and the mother said "Look up, lift your eyes to the light." And the children looked and saw above the clouds an everlasting Glory, and it guided them, and brought them beyond the darkness. And that night the mother said, "This is the best day of all, for I have shown my children God."

And the days went on, and the months, and the years, and the mother grew old and she was little and bent. But her children were tall and strong, and walked with courage. And when the way was hard they helped their mother; and when the way was rough they lifted her, for she was light as a feather. And at last they came to a hill, and beyond the hill they could see a shining road and golden gates flung wide.

And the mother said, "I have reached the end of my journey. And now I know that the end is better than the beginning, for my children can walk alone, and their children after them."

And the children said, "You will always walk with us, mother, even when you have gone through the gates."

And they stood and watched her as she went on alone, and the gates closed after her. And they said, "We can not see her, but she is with us still. A mother like ours is more than a memory. She is a living Presence."

Flashes of Thought

Eyes That See

Walter Gering

It suddenly dawned upon me that I had not seen a single one in all those miles. We had been traveling through some of the finest farming sections in the whole area; over 300 miles had been counted off on the speedometer since early morning. The visibility was perfect; we could see for miles in every direction, yet I had not seen a single one.

There had been everything else that belongs to a farming area. The inevitable chicken suddenly making up its mind to get across to the other side of the highway was encountered on every hand. There was the usual dog crouching in the grass, pouncing out at the car as we sped by. The farm yards were full of cattle, standing almost knee deep in the mud.

But horses—no, not a single one. I could hardly believe it, three hundred miles of agricultural country and not a single horse. Tractors had been evident on every hand. They had been seen crawling up and down the Wisconsin hillsides. Others were standing in the yard, as evidence of modern farming equipment. The old faithful horse, loyal through the years, as man's beast of burden, ever ready to dig in for the pull was gone. We had not seen a single one.

Somehow it left an ache in my heart. It was another evidence to the fact that the good old days were rapidly disappearing. We were living in a mechanized age in which the machine was soon to become the important thing. Where would all this end? How much further would all this go? To be sure, all these things are for the convenience of man. Think of the time, the effort, the wear on man saved by these modern inventions. Yet from a sentimental point of view even the passing of the old farm "plug" was a fact to be bemoaned.

Yes, of course—then it happened. While I was bemoaning the fact that life was growing cold and mechanical—the good old days were gone—I saw them. There on the side of the road, plainly visible to all who would but see, were two white horses. They were not the kind that would take prizes at the State Fair. They were simply two common farm creatures. Not far from these two was another horse. I suddenly realized that there were horses; I simply had not been seeing them.

The words of Jesus flashed into my mind. "Simon, seest thou this woman?" Of course Simon saw the woman. Had she not rushed into the presence of the whole group at dinner in his house? Was not she even now clinging to the feet of Jesus, wiping tears with her hair? Yes, he saw this woman.

Or did he? Was it the woman he saw or the sin of her past life which he saw through the eyes of prejudice? How little did he realize the truth. Had he only been looking for a soul cleansed and forgiven, he too might have been able to see this woman

Evangelical Work at Gulfport

Orlo Kaufman and Elmer Ediger

The name "Gulfport" came into our church circles ten years ago. What began as a CPS public health sanitation project to conquer hookworm has become a unique mission project.

From the services of about two years of CPS and eight years of Voluntary Service has come a program which is coming to a new fruition in the missionary sense at present. In this our General Conference has a particular interest. The General Conference provides at present one-half of the finances needed for the operation of the camp with the Board of Christian Service and the Board of Missions sharing equally in this.

In a recent report Orlo Kaufman summarizes a portion of this Christian Service work as follows:

"Activities here at Camp Landon include recreation and Bible classes in six grade schools, Bible classes in two high schools, and kindergarten and recreational activities for children of all ages at the Christian community center. The recreation and Bible classes taught by Harold Regier of Burrton, Kansas, and Edith Zehr, of Roanoke, Illinois, reach approximately 830 children each week. In some cases this is all the religious instruction these children receive. About 40 youngsters ranging from two-and-a-half to six years attend the kindergarten class each morning. Ethel Krehbiel daily assists for about an hour the regular teachers in activities such as Bible lessons, crafts and recreation. The high school age young people meet at the center Wednesday and Saturday nights. The newly elected service committee of this group is planning to sing for the aged and ill in the community. We request your prayers in behalf of those who are not Christians that they might become Christians and for those who are Christians, that they might grow."

In addition to supplying portions of the regular operating costs of the Gulfport unit the Board of Missions has also been helping to finance a Christian retreat program with a clearly missionary emphasis. At these retreats some young people become Christians, some have felt the call to enter full time church work and others have determined to live more consecrated Christian lives.

It has been a real joy to hear from Orlo Kaufman that "some of the negro young people who were in the grades when we started working in the community are now graduating from high school and some of these have a vision of the needs of their own people as well as of the world." He listed the names of four young people. One became a Christian at the first General Conference retreat and wants to be a missionary nurse. Another consecrated potential individual is a boy whose father is in jail for murder. Orlo Kaufman states further "These young people with a sense of call to Christian service will probably not realize their ambition unless they receive help because of their tremendous odds that they face."

Although the Gulfport community is a rather well-churched area yet the physical and spiritual needs are great. The General Conference together with the MCC is finding a unique way of serving with these other churches in the community to make a real Christian impact upon individuals and the community.

Although we do know the term "Gulfport" we need to hear it increasingly more to make this work a matter of serious prayer and concern. Whether this will lead to the eventual establishment of a General Conference mission to the colored people has been considered frequently. Thus far we have been lead in this approach of helping the MCC to be missionary in its program until perhaps there is need and opportunity for starting a congregation.

At the Community Center there are various forms of recreational activity and Christian teachings.

At the Camp and in retreats a wholesome program is bringing Christian fruit.

An Unusual Experience

BENNO TOEWS

It is gratifying how the interest and, I believe, intercession in our church for our Indian people in this land grows. The more we get acquainted with our Indian people, the more we think of them and remember them before the throne of grace. Here is an experience one of our workers has had with a father of one of our school children in Oraibi mission school. Let us pray for this man, and also for our missionaries. —John Thiessen

It is not often that I go down the ravine near our house—. One day after school I followed a strong inclination and went down the winding path. Coming back, I left the path, deciding to climb up some other way. Suddenly I noticed a man kneeling on the ledge of a rock. He may have seen me, for he was soon gone. After I had climbed up, however, I saw him sitting on the doorstep of a small building. His face was bloody, his countenance sad. He told me his name was Farmer and that he was the father of one of our Mission School pupils. When I told him that she was a good girl, he began to weep. Again and again he said, "I am sorry," but for some reason he did not reveal why he was sorry, that is, not audibly. Realizing his drunken state, I thought perhaps he was sorry he had yielded to temptation. It had been he, whom I saw kneeling in prayer—likely asking God for strength to withstand temptation henceforth. When I talked to him about the Savior, he said he believed in Him.

After I had taken him home, I decided I would visit him again when he was sober, for I felt sure God had led me to him.

This time I found him raking his yard. He had remembered the incident and thanked me for a small favor that I had been able to show him. Soon the talk turned to spiritual matters and I found to my disappointment that he did not believe in the Savior. "Farmer" said he believed in a God who made everything and told of an answer to prayer he had. This seemed to satisfy him. He promised he would come to hear Rev. Nyce and he kept his promise—but he came only once. A conversation with our visiting minister, when the latter visited him revealed nothing more. He was still an unsaved man who appeared satisfied with his condition.

Will you please pray that "Farmer," his wife and four children will give their hearts to the Savior.

in all her beauty. With right Jesus asked. "Simon, seest thou this woman?"

How blind can you and I become? It is more than mere horses that we fail to see. There are beauties of life, there is winsomeness of character, radiance of holiness round about us which we never see because we are not looking. Our eyes have become blinded.

inadequacy of the inspired Word of God for it is "quick and powerful—." Beloved, the simple but tragic fact is: THE CREDENTIALS HAVE PROVED THEMSELVES LACKING IN ACCOMPLISHMENT. And, we are the credentials whom God has chosen to do the work! We are the epistle of Christ, the letter read by this poor lost world. If our lives and our testimony give forth a conflicting or uncertain sound, if we confuse the world by our inconsistency of meeting God's standard of Christian living, if we fail in our responsibility of presenting the Lord Jesus Christ to people who neither own nor know Him as Lord and Savior—then they are lost but God will require their blood at our hands! Strong words. these, and quite unpalatable for an easy-going Christian constituency, but true as the Word of God is true.

Beloved, if we are in Christ then we are not of the world. We are in the world simply to represent Christ to the world. We dare not compromise, we cannot delay; we must prove ourselves to be Christ's credentials so above reproach and with such godly concern that the world will believe the gospel and be saved.

to go to the church services that your missionaries hold in our town. But my mother won't let me. She's afraid of what the priest would do to her. Could you give me a Bible so that mother and I could read it?"

Why sure, you have a Bible right here in the bookcase. You go over and pull it off the shelf, and turn to give it to the girl. But she is gone. You look around for the others, but all of them are gone.

As you stand there with the Bible in your hand, you think about these folks. You are responsible for 120 folks and so is everyone else who is a member of the General Conference. That makes about six million people. These are the millions who are waiting for us to give them the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. If we don't no one else will. But how are we going to do it?

Let us pray for these folks entrusted to us. Pray also for the missionaries now serving, for they are few compared to the millions confronting them. Talk to others about this great need, and this great challenge. We need more missionaries and more people to support them, so we can answer the question these six million ask, "What are you doing for us?"

They that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever. As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people from henceforth even for ever. Psalm 125:1-2.

Northern District Y.P.F. Purchases Retreat Grounds

In 1951 at the district conference session in Munich, North Dakota, the Northern District young people for the first time began to think seriously about obtaining their own retreat grounds. Upon recommendation of the YPF retreat committee a new committee was appointed for the purpose of investigating the possibilities of purchasing a camp site.

In the days and months immediately following various scenic and suitable sites were considered in light of their potentialities. Problems and questions began to mount and advice and information were sought from other districts which had had similar experiences. Financially, most youth organizations have their limitations and we were keenly aware of ours. In view of this, the matter was brought to the attention of the various church delegates and pastors at the conference session in June of 1954. It was our hope that they would be sympathetic with our intentions and would be willing to help us, and make this a conference project, which they did.

In the meantime a most significant opportunity was realized. A retreat camp within short driving distance from Freeman was now available for purchase from the Baptist Church. As a result of this development the Northern District Conference authorized the conference executive and camp site committee to negotiate for satisfactory terms and proceed in completing this transaction. After much deliberation, re-evaluation of the future of our district retreat program, and a careful study of our financial backing, the decision for final settlement was made. Thus the Northern District now has its own retreat grounds.

Obviously this is only the initial step in our camp building program. Matters of organization, camp policy, maintenance, camp rent, finance and support are but a few of the other important matters which have to be considered. Our greatest problems, however, are to set up a workable retreat program which will most adequately meet the needs of all age groups, and the payment of our debt. A considerable loan was made so that final payment for the camp was possible. At present we are engaged in a campaign among our churches to raise the necessary funds to erase this obligation. Some churches are already soliciting funds; others are making plans to do so in the near future. Our goal is to raise $10,000 within a period of six months.

A committee is at present preparing a system of retreat-camp organization. This is to be written in recommendation form and presented for approval at the June conference session. Once proper authority and responsibility have been established more effective means can be employed to meet the demands of the various aspects of a worthwhile retreat.

With district-owned grounds we will be able to sponsor a series of retreats each summer, accommodating various age groups. Already interested groups have expressed a desire to rent the camp for the coming summer. Perhaps there are other groups who wish to do likewise. If you are interested in renting the camp you may write to Palmer Graber, Marion, South Dakota, giving some information about your group and the dates you wish to have reserved.

Since this is to be a Christian camp we encourage religious groups to avail themselves of this opportunity for their summer camp. Should you desire additional information concerning the camp we shall be happy to comply with your request.

It is our sincere prayer that the retreat program of our conference may provide our people, young

Meditation

What has the past Easter season meant to us? Let us think of it in terms of the cross. What has the story of the cross and the man who died on it meant to us? Let us look at the cross—from both sides. As we meditate upon the meaning of the cross, we can see that one side shows the extent to which man will sin and the other side shows the extent to which God will love. Man's deepest sin can be forgiven because God in His infinite love has given His only begotten Son to sacrifice His life. Oh, the greatness of our sin! but oh, the greatness of His redeeming grace! —Gloria Hofer, Editor

News

News from our various Young People's Fellowships is always welcomed. As we share our ideas for programs and projects, we can help one another a great deal. In this will come our unity as a Conference YPF.

Elvira Hoffman, Secretary

Freeman Youth Peace Club Sponsors Henry Hitt Crane

Dr. Henry Hitt Crane, well-known Methodist pacifist from Detroit, was the speaker at the Peace Institute held on April 1, at Freeman Junior College. Dr. Crane's lectures drew large audiences from surrounding communities to the morning, afternoon, and evening sessions. The Peace Club had an informal dinner with Dr. Crane previous to the evening meetings.

The morning lecture, "The Paradox of Power," was drawn from the great paradoxical teachings of Jesus which have such great truths. The evening lecture, "The Fate We Face," was a look at the situation of the world and what part pacifists have in it. The reference to the great accomplishments of Gandhi certainly serve as a challenge.

Bethany Youth Sponsor Hartzler Lectures

Freeman, South Dakota—The Bethany Young People's Society sponsored Dr. J. E. Hartzler of Goshen, Indiana, in a series of Post-Easter lectures. Dr. Hartzler is well known in the Freeman community since 1918 and is always warmly welcomed. He showed slides each evening of his recent round-the-world tour. Dr. Hartzler's provocative lectures proved again to be inspiring.

"Being a Christian in the Home"

Program No. 1

PURPOSE:

To stimulate every young person to think through the powers and pitfalls of being a Christian in a Christian home.

WORSHIP:

Hymn—"For the Beauty of the Earth," No. 51 in the Mennonite Hymnary.

Scripture—Ask everyone to repeat Psalm 23 together by heart. Follow this by all turning to Reading No. 75 "Family Life" in the Hymnary and reading it unitedly.

PROGRAM: Debate

Simple rules for debating—(1) Have the affirmative team (two speakers) sit at a small table on one side of the platform. Have the negative team (two speakers) sit at the other side behind a similar table. Have the chairman of the debate sit in the middle. (2) It is best to choose speakers who personally favor their side of the debate, though this is not necessary. (3) The chairman introduces the speakers in the following order: No. 1 affirmative speaker, No. 1 negative speaker, No. 2 affirmative speaker, No. 2 negative speaker. (4) A timekeeper is chosen who will sit in the front row of the audience where the speakers can see him. (5) Each speaker is allowed exactly five minutes for his main speech which should be worked out (see suggestions below.) After the four speeches have been given, the teams are allowed to retire to separate rooms where they may prepare their rebuttal speeches. During this intermission, special music or something else may be given. After this is over or five mintues, the teams are called back by the timekeeper and the rebuttal begins and follows this order at the call of the chairman: No. 1 negative speaker, No. 1 affirmative speaker, No. 2 negative speaker, No. 2 affirmative speaker. Each rebuttal speech is two and one-half minutes long. The timekeeper will give a one minute warning by raising his hand. At the end of the time he will stand until the time the speaker stops and is seated. Following this the audience is asked to be the judge of the debate and by ballot vote they choose the winning team.

THEME:

"Resolved: That it is harder to live a Christian life in the home than in the world outside."

Suggestions for Affirmative Speakers:

I. True, because our personal lives are more exposed in the home. Text: Matthew 20:20-24. Explain this story and draw lessons.

1. Home people know the little weaknesses and habits we have.
2. Hard to pray at daily family worship after we have failed.
3. Home people know our past lives and failures.

II. True, because our Christian family standards are higher. Text: Ephesians 5:22-25 and 6:1-4. Draw lessons.

1. Christianity begins at home, like charity.
2. Frustrations in home living make some humble and other bitter.
3. Companionship in the home helps, but also challenges us on.

Suggestions for Negative Speakers:

I. False, because there are more temptations out in the world. Text: 1 John 2:15-17. Draw lessons.

1. Give pointed modern illustrations of the lust of the flesh, eyes and life.
2. It is easy to lose oneself in the world and let go of standards.
3. Complexity of life in world greater than in the home.

II. False, because the world is less friendly to Christianity. Text: John 15:18-19. Explain text.

1. Show how worldly people "hate" Christians.
2. Explain why many Christians compromise with the world.
3. Show how persecution in the world drives Christians into strong home life.

Suggestions for Debaters:

1. Look for weaknesses in reasoning or material of opposite team.
2. Point out inconsistencies between other team members.
3. Keep debate on Christian level—generate light—not heat!
4. Be positive, not just negative.
5. In rebuttal, don't attempt to bring in new ideas. The purpose of rebuttal is to answer the other side.

Suggestions for the Audience Judging:
(To be given by the chairman)

1. Do not favor your own personal view. The purpose of debate is to determine who did the best job.
2. Judge on two counts: Who had the best material? and, who had the best presentation?

CLOSING:

Hymn—"O Happy Home, Where Thou Art Loved" No. 358 in the Hymnary.

Prayer

PROJECTS:

1. The Chairman asks each to think over the debate and come to next meeting with one outstanding impression learned from the debate about Christian living in the home.
2. The Service Committee can look for spring jobs to be done for some needy family or widow home in the community, such as painting, putting up screens, etc.

Program No. 2

PURPOSE:

To learn from those with experience the kind of home I should some day want to have.

WORSHIP:

Piano or organ playing softly while youth arrives. Perhaps subdued candlelight. Call to worship in the form of Scripture by the Leader: Prov. 3:1-7. Hymn 361—"Happy the Home When God Is There" first read aloud by the leader and then sung by the group.

Prayer

PROGRAM: Talk with Question Period

Ask an older parent or husband and wife in the congregation or community who have successfully reared a Christian family to speak on the following topic. Choose those who are with experience and yet those who have a sympathy and understanding of modern youth, and can face frank questions with openness and a ready answer.

Topic: "The Home God Meant"

Stress that the speaker or speakers are to use Scripture, but that they are especially urged to relate it to modern homes, using illustrations from their own experience. Especially stress that they are to feel perfectly free in using an abundance of their own observations and experiences and anecdotes. They dare not be too reserved and "humble."

Scripture suggestions: Any of the texts quoted in the First Program. Proverbs, or Psalms, or 2 Timothy, etc.

Thoughts: Christian Faith in the home, Christian courtship and marriage, jealousy and conflicts in the home life, family worship, stewardship and budget, relationship of church attendance and family life, school problems, etc.

Source Material:

(Alternative Programs)—Instead of a speaker or speakers, carefully select a Christian film, filmstrip or slides from your nearby supply store, or from the Religious Film Association, 206 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 3, Illinois. Send for complete catalog with suggestions on family films).

Question Period: Following talk or film, allow for questions to be asked. It is best to stimulate questions by asking several ahead of time to be prepared to ask a question of the speaker.

Close meeting quickly: with sentence prayers, spontaneous, or planned, emphasizing dedication and renewal of zeal.

PROJECTS:

1. After meeting, or on another evening have social hour with light refreshments. While seated in circle during lull in laughter and conversation, probably while munching on a sandwich, ask group to share one impression gained from the debate at last meeting. Seek to get every one to share something. Have Fellowship Committee take care of details of social hour. This sharing of dominant impressions is important even though done during social hour in a relaxed mood. Everyone should carry away for the rest of their life, one dominant impression from every sermon, concert, or youth program. One is enough.

Our Schools

BETHEL COLLEGE

Ruby Woelk, sophomore at Bethel College, has been chosen as Bethel's exchange student to a teacher's college in Wuppertal, Germany.

Ruby, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Woelk, of Newton, is a graduate of Walton High School where she was editor of the school paper and valedictorian of her class. A member of the Walton Mennonite Church, she is a leader and active church worker, especially with young people.

At college, Ruby is a member of the Student Christian Fellowship, the Future Teachers of America and has written for the "Collegian," student newspaper.

The Student Christian Fellowship at Bethel raises the funds to finance the stay of a German student in America, while the student body of the teacher's college in Germany finances the stay of a Bethel student in Germany. Each institution has found this to be an enriching experience.

The business office of Bethel College reports a March income of voluntary contributions of over $15,000 realized primarily through college Fellowship organizations in constituency churches.

The local booster banquet has become a popular approach through which contributions have been made. This past year six banquets were held in centers of Mennonite churches in Kansas, with 33 churches participating. The activity of these churches plus the efforts of some 30 other Mennonite churches in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and Oklahoma accounted for the contributions of $15,000 in March.

Promoting this program of community and church organization in the interest of Bethel College is Erwin C. Goering, director of public relations at the college, and Ernest Bachman, assistant.

After having spent the month of March in various churches and educational institutions in Manitoba, Dr. E. G. Kaufman will spend the latter half of April and part of May in the Pacific District, speaking in various churches.

In Canada Dr. Kaufman visited some 25 congregations besides a number of high schools and the Canadian Bible College. In all he made 47 addresses.

Approximately 100 trees on the Bethel College campus, which had died as a result of the draught the past few years, have been cut and removed, according to Earl Koehn, director of the maintenance department at the college.

Most of these trees were American elm trees and had been planted at various Arbor Day occasions soon after the turn of the century. To replace the trees removed, various hardy varieties of trees such as oak, hard maple, ash, hackberry, locust, and sycamore have been planted. In addition, some flowering crab, red bud, and ponderosa pine trees have also been placed. In all, about 100 trees of various varieties have been planted to beautify the campus.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

The Bluffton College Board of Trustees met on the Bluffton campus April 15. Members of the board who were re-elected for another one year term include: E. W. Baumgartner, chairman; W. H. Mohr, vice-chairman; Jerry Sauder, secretary; Carl Lehman, treasurer; and Dr. J. S. Slabaugh, member at large, who was re-elected for a three year term.

The most significant move of the board was to approve a concerted campaign in 1956 to (1) eliminate the present indebtedness of $23,127.00 on Founders Hall; 2) to begin raising funds for additional dormitory space; (3) to begin construction of the dormitory space as soon as half of the needed funds are available. This move was made in the light of an expected increase in enrollment as a result of a national increase of 600,000 students who will probably go to college by 1961.

Additional board action included the adoption of next year's budget. This proposed budget is based on an income of $259,525, which is the largest budget in the history of the college. The board also approved the action of the Administration Committee in establishing four additional scholarships for freshmen which would offer $50 above the present honor scholarships in special cases of need, and three of the same type for the upper three classes.

Rev. Andrew Shelly, Director of Public Relations at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago, who recently returned from a trip to various Mennonite mission fields, will be the speaker for the Missionary Emphasis Week to be held May 3, 4, 5, 6 and 8, at Bluffton College and the First Mennonite Church.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

On the morning of April 5, Rev. F. Sawatzky, of Gnadenthal, Manitoba, who was holding a series of evangelistic meetings in the city, visited the college and gave the chapel message.

Some of the students spent the Easter week end at their respective homes. Those of the college family remaining in the city attended an Easter sunrise service. At 5:30 on Easter morning we gathered on the bank of the Assiniboine River to watch the sunrise while we took part in the service, the theme of which was "The Empty Tomb." On Monday afternoon some of the students went to Assiniboine Park for a ball game. Classes were resumed on Tuesday morning, April 12.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

A group of nursing students and their sponsor from Bloomington, Illinois, came to Chicago for a weekend work camp on April 15 to 17. The work camp was sponsored by the Seminary and Voluntary Service. On Saturday they were joined by the young people and their sponsors from Wayland, Iowa, who were attending a work camp at the First Mennonite Church of the city. Some young people from the Grace and First Mennonite Churches also attended.

As their work project, the two groups joined together to help prepare a mailing to the Seminary constituency. Included in the mailing is a folder giving interesting information about the Seminary and its 10 years of operation. Friends of the Seminary are urged to continue praying and giving so the Seminary can continue to grow in the future.

William Gering and Leola Schultz, students at the Seminary, were guest speakers at the First Mennonite Church of Berne, Indiana, the evening of April 17. Miss Schultz spoke to the young people and the young adults on Voluntary Service. "Young Disciples Face the Modern World" was the subject of Brother Gering's message to the congregation as he presented the work of the Young People's Union.

Mrs. Jacob J. Enz led the Seminary women's class the evening of April 19. "Singing with Children" was the subject under discussion.

MCC News Notes

EUROPEAN PAX MEN ENTER TWO NEW PROJECTS

At Bielefeld, about 50 miles west of Hannover, a unit o five men has begun to aid in the building of 30 houses for 60 Mennonite refugee families—some of whom are still living in lagers. When more PAX men are available, the unit will be expanded to 15. PAX men are working alongside an 11-man German crew in the building of these two-family dwellings of red brick construction with stucco exterior.

In Kaiserslautern, a city of about 90,000 in Germany's southwestern Palatinate province, 12 PAX men from the Enkenbach unit are helping construct an MCC-sponsored Mennonite community center. This community center is an outgrowth of relief work of the past and will be a focal point for Mennonite activity in the area. When the two-story, block structure is completed in late fall, it will provide offices and living quarters for MCC personnel as well as facilities for community use. Chapel and library will be open to the public. A full basement is to house equipment for printing Christian education materials.

Children's and young people's work will be important functions. Along with weekly Bible classes for community youth, a children's center is to be set up, providing supervised recreation and Bible instruction for local youngsters who can attend school only half the day because of crowded conditions. MCC worker Milton Harder of Butterfield, Minn., is in charge of the center.

VIET-NAMESE SAY "THANK-YOU"

Letters of thanks from individuals in Viet Nam, Indochina, indicate that the contributions and services of American Mennonites through their Mennonite Central Committee are valued and appreciated.

A missionary writes: "On behalf of the refugees and the needy peoples of this tribal area, I wish to express our hearty appreciation of the food and clothing that have been distributed so abundantly. The forest folk who inhabit the mountainous, jungle regions of south-central Viet Nam face famine every year. It has meant a great deal to them to have the many articles received in the food packages (from U.S. government surplus). The clothing came when most needed. The refugees had just come to this area when the cold weather was setting in."

WORKSHOP CONSIDERS CHURCH SERVICES TO 1-W'S

A workshop to study and consider ways in which Mennonite and Brethren in Christ Churches can better assist and serve their 1-W men in their witness for Christian love and peace was held at MCC headquarters, Akron, Pa., April 19, 20 and 21. Participants included 1-W services personnel from MCC and the Mennonite Relief and Service Committee, Elkhart, Ind.

A major consideration was the new approach in the 1-W program of integrating groups of men into local churches and church institutions in the interests of making them feel a greater part of the total church program and witness. A great deal of discussion was devoted to how local church leaders can aid 1-W's by giving them sufficient opportunities for worship, service, recreation, and personal development.

The group of 12 persons participating in the workshop decided an educational agent is needed to work with 1-W's to encourage them to utilize their two years in government service to their best interests. This possibility will be discussed with the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges. The workshop also agreed that more emphasis must be placed upon pre-service orientation.

The workshop was addressed by Mr. Victor Olsen of the national Selective Service headquarters who expressed general satisfaction with the 1-W program. He did say, however, that "too many fellows are going into the program to get it over with" and suggested that 1-W's should be more concerned about the importance of their work "contributing to the maintenance of the national health, safety, and interest."

Peter Goering of Lehigh, who helped with the very early beginnings of our church, brought a message in the afternoon. In the evening Harry Martens of North Newton showed pictures of the work of the Mennonites in Mexico. Curt Boese, our pastor, exchanged pulpits with the pastors of the Alexanderwohl and Tabor churches on Wednesday evening and Friday morning of Holy Week.—Harold Peters, Corr.

—Salem-Zion Church, Freeman, S. D.: "The Seven Last Words" by Dubois was presented by the mixed choirs of the Salem and Salem-Zion churches on the evening of Palm Sunday. We have three young people from Europe in our midst who are working in the home and farms of some of our church members. They are here under the European trainee program. They are Peter Goertz from Germany, Coenrad Fonk and Miss Lieske van Reeuwijk from Holland. The church library is growing constantly and the number of readers that avail themselves of these books are increasing with the volumes. Evening work meetings are being planned for the young women of the church. These are for girls of high school and college age, also for young mothers with small children who find it impossible to attend the regular afternoon meetings of the Women's Missionary Society. H. J. Brown and John J. A. Schrag conducted the morning services during the absence of our pastor, Russell Mast, who was on a speaking engagement in Kansas.—C. Schrag, Corr.

—Immanuel Church, Downey, Calif.: In the evening services our minister has been giving a series of messages on the Seven Last Words which have been extremely helpful and inspirational. Our Missionary Conference was held March 23-27. Speakers obtained were: Edward Case, (Cuba); Gordon Howser, (Costa Rica); Lubin Jantzen and Aaron Jantzen (India). These fine missionaries gave us a most inspiring week. The services were very well attended and the week was brought to a close by a social hour, by the Women's Missionary Society, following the Sunday evening service. Mrs. Lubin Jantzen spoke to the Women's Miss. Soc. at their last meeting. A fellowship dinner was enjoyed by the Adult Bible Class this past month. The monthly Junior Craft and Recreational program was held in our Fellowship Hall. In this way many children attend who don't regularly attend Sunday School. Our pastor held pre-Easter services for a week in the Aberdeen, Idaho, Mennonite Church. On the sick list have been Fred Kuemerle, Sr. and Ben Bookwalter. They both are on their way to recovery by God's grace. Our YPCE elected new officers and are now getting new committees together and planning for the coming term. We have had two picnics this month held on Sunday afternoon. In a beautiful wedding ceremony, Lila Jane Pearce and Max Morgan, were united in holy matrimony on March 18, 1955. A successful bridal shower for Bessie Park preceded the marriage of Bessie Francis Park to Orlando Robert Schroeder on March 26, 1955.—Elsie Heer, Corr.

—Deep Run Church, Bedminster, Pa.: Members of the Women's Missionary Society brought feed bags as their special offering for the month of March. Mrs. Mabel Strouse, who was in the Abington Hospital with a broken hip has returned to her home. Pastor Claude Boyer held special meetings at Bethany for three evenings. Pre-Easter services were held here Mar 27, 28, and 29. Robert Landis, Elmer Hess, and Wilmer Shelly were the speakers. A son, David Allen, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Harold Meyers, Mar. 17. Baptism was observed on Palm Sunday when eight young people were received into the church by baptism. They are Claudia Mae Crawford, Mary Jean Derstine, Nancy Marie Meyers, Edith Mae Mill, Mary Ann Swartz, Laverne Moyer, Edward James Smith, and Eli Dale Wismer. Leonard R. Lewis was received by right hand of fellowship.—Corr.

—Calvary Church, Barlow, Ore.: The Barlow girls are playing in the Canby church volleyball league. Mrs. Don Robe is the leader. Dr. and Mrs. John Zook presented a missionary program at the evening service March 6. Mr. and Mrs. John Berkey celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary at the church the afternoon of March 20. Mr. and Mrs. James Howard are the happy parents of Jennie Lynn born March 20. The Oregon Men's Fellowship banquet was held at the Barlow Church March 24 with Gerald Dill as speaker. Approximately 115 attended. Pastor and Mrs. Paul Roth left March 21 for the east. They will visit their daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Camp, at Tulsa, Okla., and then go to Newton, Kans., for the Church Unity Committee meeting. Harry Howard, seminary student at Cascade College, is taking Pastor Roth's place. Mr. and Mrs. H. Howard have a new baby daughter born March 2. A fellowship dinner preceded this monthly Sunday school teacher training class March 27. —Mrs. F. J. Kauffman, Corr.

AILSA CRAIG BOYS FARM MAY OPEN IN JUNE

Good progress in the renovation of Ailsa Craig Boys Farm in Ontario points to the possibility of opening this Christian home for neglected and delinquent boys early in June.

In preparation for admitting boys, the Waterloo MCC office, which administers the Farm, has conducted a survey to determine which age youngsters in Ontario need help most urgently. The majority of replies from 50 children's aid societies and officers of juvenile and family courts report the 10- to 15-year-old group to be in most urgent need of assistance. Almost all of the responses were emphatic in expressing a need for the services Ailsa Craig plans to provide.

Ailsa Craig Boys Farm represents a new field of church service for Mennonites and is the Christian response of Mennonites in Ontario disturbed by an alarming increase in juvenile delinquency in this province. This home is being established on a 135-acre farm donated to MCC by the Ailsa Craig Mennonite congregation. The Farm is the responsibility of the Ontario Conference of Historic Peace Churches which has asked MCC to administer the project.

UMT BILL MOVES TO HOUSE

The Reserve and Universal Military Training Bill has been adopted by a 31-5 vote by the House Armed Services Committee and reported out to the U. S. House of Representatives which was expected to vote on the bill sometime during the week of May 2.

This bill provides for six months of basic training for 100,000 to 250,000 youths under 19 years of age and an obligation to follow through with 7 1/2 years of ready reserve instruction. In addition, a provision has been added which would authorize the President to recall to active service up to one million reservists, if available, without specific Congressional approval if a major emergency should arise. The Administration's request for authorization to draft men into the six-month training plan was not approved.

Certain minor changes were made in the bill as received from the Subcommittee No. 1 of the House Armed Services Committee. These were apparently made with the view of moving as far away as possible from the appearance of universal military training while retaining as much of the UMT idea as the Committee thought could be passed in the House.

TO ESTABLISH VS PROJECT IN DENVER

A Voluntary Service project is being established in Denver, Colo., in cooperation with the First Mennonite Church in the interests of extending and intensifying the witness and service of various Mennonite activities in the city.

One phase of this new project will get under way around May 16, with the construction of a service center near the church by the Denver First Mennonite congregation. To be built with the assistance of VS personnel, this center represents the desire of the Denver Church to serve the young people of the city. The center will provide recreational and workshop facilities for 1-W's and local young people as well as housing for VS personnel.

As the unit expands, plans are for VS personnel to enter such Christian service activities as child care, home visitation, Bible school instruction, and institutional work. Another aspect of the VS project may be related to 1-W "plus services." A maximum unit of 10 volunteers is planned.

A NEGLECTED POWER

The continuing monthly articles on prayer by Frank R. Mitchell should bring us all into a deeper understanding and appreciation of the need and power of prayer. Truly, here is a power so mighty and deep that it can change the world, and yet it is too little used by the very ones who should be specialists in its use.

Sincere Christians have always felt the deep need and power of this special form of communion with God. In recent years much is being written about prayer, and a number of books have recently been published on the subject. In some respects there seems to be a new awakening to the possibilities of this too little used power. No doubt there is a feeling that here is something we have not quite understood nor fully developed. The heart longs for fuller communion with God and is restless because of the limited way in which we have availed ourselves of this power.

Might it be that we are too anxious to achieve the results prayer might bring without being willing to meet the conditions of being good pray-ers? God's great power and might is available, but can come only as we are ready to receive it on His terms and conditions.

THE PURPOSE OF A CONFERENCE

Now that district conferences are under way for the year it might be well to consider again the real purpose of such conferences. Is it merely to relate the various business transactions by way of giving reports and having the conference give its approval to what has been done and what is proposed? Should this take the major portion of time? Shall reports be mimeographed and handed to delegates before the meeting? How much "detail" and how much "in general" should then be reported to the meeting? Should the reports be read word for word?

Or should the main portion of the conference time be spent in listening to challenging and inspirational messages, presenting various phases of Christian life and obligation? Do we need new courage for the present, new hope for the future, and new inspiration and zeal for Christian living?

The usual pattern seems to be to try to combine the two phases. Sometimes this is done fairly successfully, other times not. During the last three years the Central and Middle Districts have tried a somewhat unique pattern. Each holds its own business sessions in nearby localities, and then both meet for the inspirational meetings, usually about two days in length. This plan seems to be working quite successfully. Attendance at the business sessions of each conference is made up largely of delegates, but the inspirational meetings are largely attended by people both far and near.

Might some such pattern work well in other districts? Perhaps two districts could not meet together—although this, too, might be possible occasionally. But would it be better to have all the business sessions grouped together in as short a time as necessary, and then have a day or two of inspirational programs where everyone would be urged to attend? It might be worth giving a trial. The experience of the Central and Middle Districts seems an argument for such an arrangement.

MUST THERE BE A SUMMER SLUMP?

It is often stated that Easter is the high point of the church year both in interest and attendance. Perhaps this is as it should be. The Resurrection comes as the great climax in the life and death of our Lord. It is the voice of a great hope.

But this hope, once kindled, should be kept burning brightly. If it is but a yearly flare that dies down to smoldering dullness as soon as it has burned to brightness there must be something wrong. Hope, to be kept alive, must be fed with the oil of devotion, gratitude, and service.

Why should there be a letdown in spiritual interest after Easter? Why should church attendance fall off? To be sure the summer days are busy, but should busy-ness be an excuse for indifference in the eternal things? It is possible to be both busy and spiritually alive; to have many interests and yet not lose the supreme interest.

Ours is more than an Easter religion. It is a religion for every day of the year and through every season. There should be no summer slump. In fact many devout Christians find that the busier they become the more need they have for the revitalizing experiences of a truly worship service. Our Christianity should not be a spasmodic affair, now warm, now cool. It should be kept at a steady glow, at midsummer as well as at Easter and Christmas. For it is an every day religion not reserved merely for special days of the year.

UNITING NOT DIVIDING

This seems to be an age when various religious groups are moving closer together instead of further apart. There are still some unfortunate divisions both locally and on larger scales, but there is also present a spirit of co-operation and union. The latter seems stronger than the former. We hope it is in answer to the prayer of our Lord, that we may all be one in Him.

For some years there has been a gradual growing together of the Central and Middle Districts of the General Conference. Committees have been doing long and hard work in arranging details for a full merger. Each year progress is being made, although somewhat more slowly than many would wish. But two such groups with somewhat different backgrounds and practices cannot be forced together prematurely; there must be a gradual growth into oneness. The advancement has now developed to the point where a common constitution is to be worked out and it is hoped that perhaps within another year, or at least within two years, such a union may be completed.

The Seven Petitions of the Lord's Prayer

FRANK R. MITCHELL

The petitions of the Lord's Prayer are related and should be taken together. Their significance comes from their relationship. It is quite possible to utter all seven of the petitions and miss the spirit and meaning of the prayer. There is a true progression here and each sentence grows naturally out of the preceding.

The prayer begins with the invocation. The very first words of the invocation arrest attention. There are no ornate or endearing adjectives used in connection with the Father. The words are quiet and strong in their simplicity and sincerity. Immediately an attitude of trust in God is established. Gathered up in these six words lies the faith of the Christian concerning God. God is a Father, wise and tender in heart and high as heaven. Out of this faith which is alive and moving, is born the first petition. So closely, related and knitted is the invocation and the first petition that both are included in the first sentence of the prayer.

'Hallowed be thy name.' This first petition is really an outburst of adoring praise as one contemplates the true nature and character of God. There is more. The spark of faith grows. That God loves man is a precious find which is pressed close to the heart. Such heart knowledge inspires a deep reverence, love and awe. A yearning springs up to know more about God. It is, then, an expression combining joyful praise and earnest prayer to be made fit for such a fellowship.

'Thy kingdom come.' There is no standing still in the spiritual life. To pray 'Hallowed be thy name' calls for the next step. These three words are heavily freighted with significance. They are words of surrender. They have an intimate and personal meaning. They are an invitation for God to come into the human heart taking over the rule of mind and heart and will. But they mean even much more. These three words embody the most important truth in the whole universe. They imply that God always was, is now, and ever shall be the absolute ruler of the universe. They are words of praise and trust and confidence in God. They are words of spiritual insight, looking beyond the powers of evil that seem to be ruling the world today, to the great God who controls and directs all, bringing honor to His name. They are words of faith and hope concerning the rightful place of God in the world. They are then, words of prayer for the present and the future; words of confidence for the individual life and for the world.

'Thy will be done.' This is the third great expression of confident trust in God. It develops in practical detail and direction just how the kingdom comes. The petition reveals that God has a great purpose which He is performing. There is a calm and trustful willingness to go along with that great purpose of God. But it is more than a statement of faith that God's will shall eventually predominate in the world. Jesus indicated that all heaven even now lives by the will of God. Only man has been the exception. It is a prayer that we may pray, that God's will may prevail now in human lives. It is a searching personal prayer that yields all of my present life to God's will and control. It is thus the greatest prayer in the world. All human prayer becomes significant when it becomes subject to God's will. To pray that God's will be done, is to believe that God has anticipated all our askings. To ask His will first concerning our petitions, is to give Him a chance to give us His best gifts, the gifts which are according to His plan and His kingdom. To do so, is to yield to an implicit trust that for us His purpose is always best.

'Give us this day our daily bread.' But if His purpose is best, why should we ask? Does not our asking only interfere with His best giving? But He urges us to ask. He feeds the birds but He does not put it in their mouth. We are to pray for our daily bread. It is because we do not pray for our needful daily portion of bread that more than half the world is hungry. All our food and clothing and shelter come from God. We cannot provide it ourselves. We must carefully prepare the ground, but we must depend upon Him for the seeds and to make them grow to the harvest. When we pray 'Give us this day our daily bread,' we acknowledge that the surplus may not be used on ourselves, but must be shared with others. That is, we are not only praying for our own need but we are acknowledging in our prayer to God that the surplus belongs to God for others. We are praying that His name might be honored, that His kingdom come and that His will be done in reference to the surplus passing through our hands. We may claim only that which we need for our life and must see that the rest gets to where God intends it. It belongs to Him.

'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' This petition is very closely related to the preceding one. Our obligations and our acknowledgments concerning the surplus in our hands are truly closely related. We pray for forgiveness and we pray for the spirit of forgiveness, so that God can forgive us. We become agents of the love and forgiveness of God, and as we do so, God's forgiveness begins to operate in our lives and in the lives of others. When peace comes to the earth, it will come through the sincere praying of the Lord's Prayer. It begins with us as individuals. It will reach out to the members of our families and to our fellow Christians in the Church. It will spread to our neighbors and to our enemies. It will be so because that is the only way that we may share God's forgiving love.

'Lead us not into temptation.' Again we recognize our dependence upon God. We may not presume upon our ability to stand in our own strength, as did Peter. We pray 'Do not allow us to be led into temptation.' This petition also grows out of the preceding one. When we pray forgive us, we must hate and shun our sins and look for His leading as we

Christ's Prayer for Us

ARTHUR S. ROSENBERGER

Outline of the conference sermon preached on April 28, 1955, at the Eastern District Conference held in the Upper Milford Church, Zionsville, Pa.

In the high-priestly prayer of Jesus as recorded in John 17 our Lord prays for all His disciples, then and now. His prayer applies to the church today, and to our conference. In verse 9 He says, "I pray for them," and also, "I pray not for the world." Certainly He was interested in the salvation of all but at this particular time He had in mind those who were His followers. He is praying, "for those whom thou hast given me." It is our earnest desire to be numbered among those who are His. It is assuring to know that our Lord is praying for us.

In His prayer for His disciples our Lord first of all commends them to God's keeping, (verse 11). They are to be kept as one. We need this sense of God's keeping, and that we are dependent upon Him for guidance in all of life's problems. As we meet again in conference we need to come together with a sense of our dependence upon Him. "The arm of flesh will fail you, ye dare not trust your own," says the hymn writer, but rather, "we need to stand in His strength alone." We need the wisdom that is from above. We need His every grace. Jesus prayed that His disciples should not be taken out of the world but that they should be kept from the evil. May it be our prayer that we as Christians be kept from evil and by God's grace stand for righteousness and purity.

Then again our Lord prays that all may have His joy made full in themselves (verse 13). Jesus was a man of joy, and this in spite of all the suffering through which He went. His joy came from doing the Father's will. The joy that comes in this way cannot be exceeded. How wonderful that we can experience something of the very joy that Jesus had when we do the Father's will. Christian service brings its peculiar problems and demands its particular sacrifices. We say this with the realization that most of us are not called upon to sacrifice unduly. But such as we do we are amply rewarded by being permitted to experience the deep joy that comes with being in God's will. As a conference, too, may we be in God's will and radiate Christian joy.

Christ prayed that His disciples might be sanctified in the truth (verse 17). God's Word, He said, is truth. We are among those who are set apart for God's truth. Christ sanctified himself to this end. May He also so set us apart and consecrate us. Being so consecrated there is that which it is our part to do. We need to spend much time in prayer and in the study of God's Word. God's truth must be ours before we can give it to others. It must vitalize our lives before we can lead others to a vital and saving relation with God through Jesus Christ. Jesus wants us to be set apart for God's truth. May this be our prayer as well as His.

Even as Christ was sent into the world by the Heavenly Father, so Christ sends forth His disciples (verse 18). In His prayer He is mindful of their going out to spread the gospel. A tremendous task is theirs to do. They are to carry on the work for which Christ came. In our day too, this is the supreme task. There is none greater. Jesus has the answer for all of life. God has offered Him to all as the way, the truth, and the life. Without Him it is chaos and condemnation, with Him it is order and life with its highest and finest values. Christ is counting on us. We as individuals and as a conference dare not fail Him.

Four times in His high-priestly prayer, Jesus prayed that all may be one, (verses 11, 21, 22, 23). To this end He prayed for His disciples and for all who should believe on Him through their word. He prays that through that oneness the world may know and the world may believe. Our testimony is weakened today by our many divisions. I believe that God has to withhold many blessings and victories from the church because we are so divided. Our impact upon the world has suffered just as Jesus knew that it would. May this prayer of Jesus become effective today. Let us set ourselves in the direction of drawing closer together and becoming more one. So often we see the things that divide rather than the things that unite. In drawing closer together we will both give a better testimony of our faith and also experience a richer fellowship.

It is also the prayer of Jesus that the reward of eternal life will be given to His followers, (verse 24). Our fellowship with the Lord is not only for this life, it is for all eternity. There we shall behold His glory. As we think of faithful Christians who have gone on, what a joy to know that they are with the Lord forever. And so someday, by God's grace, will we be.

Then finally, Christ's high-priestly prayer ends with the petition that the love with which God loved His son might also be found in the followers of His son, (verse 26). Supremely, God is love. Christ loved to the uttermost. That love is to be in all His followers today. As the apostle Paul states it in 1 Corinthians 13, no matter what else we have or are, if we have not love, we are nothing. Of the early Christians it was said, "Behold how they love one another." The prayer of Jesus was answered in them. Is it answered in us today? If we meet together in love, every problem arising out of our human relationships can be solved. There is a tradition that the brethren of the early church would ask the aged apostle John to speak of the Christ whom he had known. But the old man refused to say anything more than, "Little children, love one another." When pressed to say more, he answered, "There is nothing more." May we above all love one another.

We meet in conference with the sense that Christ is praying for us. May His spirit so guide that His prayer can be answered to the greatest possible degree.

How Would You Meet a Wild Indian?

WALTER and MARTHA DYCK

For twenty-five years our brethren in the faith living in the Paraguayan Chaco have been rendering a distinct service to their Indian neighbors. Not only has their standard of living been rising since they have gainful employment with Mennonite farmers, but through this daily contact with them, the Indians have gained a medium—the low German language—by which the Chulupi and Lengua tribes, for instance, are now able to understand each other.

A common language is, of course, a basic requirement for proclaiming the Christian gospel. We, too, are learning their languages. An active missionary program is now being carried on among several Indian tribes. Several hundred of the Chulupi, Lengua, and Toba Indians are radiant Christians today. Most of the Indians are grateful for the coming of the Mennonites.

But not all the Indians in the Chaco are friendly. On February 12, 1955, a party of what are assumed to have been Morro Indians raided two Mennonite villages in the Fernheim colony, injuring two men by the names of Bergen and Sawatzky. On a previous occasion, you will remember, that fierce Indians brutally killed several members of the Stahl family.

How would you try to make contact with a wild Indian tribe? Wouldn't you think it wise to bring them food, clothing, and other things they need? This has been done. During the past several years missionaries have made two trips into Morro territory but no Indians were sighted. On their second visit they found these gifts untouched.

It was our privilege early in March to spend a week in Fernheim, to see these crude, deadly weapons, and to speak to one of the injured men. We also attended a retreat of MCC workers in Paraguay in which an hour was set aside for a discussion of "the Morro question." We asked and pondered the question, "What would Jesus have done?" in the face of an Indian attack.

Historically, we know that friendly gestures have won the confidence of enemies. The Syrians attacking Israel were fed and befriended, (2 Kings 6:8ff). William Penn won many Indian tribes through the method of love.

Biblically, overcoming evil with good (Rom. 12:21) is admittedly God's method of dealing with the evildoer (Prov. 25:21; Matt. 5:43-45; 1 Peter 2:19-21). It was "while we were yet sinners" that "Christ died for us" (Rom. 5:6-8).

Practically, we are faced with soul-searching questions. Are the Morros simply and blindly fierce or have these attacks been provoked? Is the settlement of the Mennonites in the Chaco being regarded by the Indians as an infringement on their property rights? No doubt, they have watched Mennonites carrying weapons used against the jaguar and other wild animals. No doubt, they have heard shots. How do the Morros feel toward the Mennonites in the Chaco? Have they reason to be fearful of them?

A reward has been offered by the colony for the capture of a living Morro Indian. We would like to communicate our goodwill to this tribe. Can firearms be used at all in securing "a catch"? We have heard of captured Indians biting their own wrists and bleeding to death. We still need a practical, nonviolent method of disarming the Morro Indian.

Let me repeat, it was a time of soul-searching. We could not speak for the MCC nor for the Mennonites of Fernheim. We recognized our weakness of faith and courage. We admitted a difference between what we know to be the right method and what we might do under test of an actual surprise attack.

Of three things we were confident: (1) That God has not promised nor always granted physical safety to all heroes of faith (See Hebrews 11:35-40); and (2) He can and has overruled and restrained evil forces so that under other tribes their languages have been learned and their hearts brought under the sound of the saving gospel of Christ. Also, that (3) God wants to do this through men and women wholly yielded to Him and unafraid of losing their lives.

"Who can harm you if you be followers of that which is good?" This calls for a thorough self-examination. Is my life (physical) worth more to me than the eternal salvation of a Morro Indian is worth to God? What can I offer to the Lord—safely offer and entrust to Him—whereby He can gather in the first soul of another tribe? Paul said, "Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel (the Morros) is, that they might be saved," (Rom 10:1). Moses prayed "Blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written," (Ex. 32:32). While dying. Jesus prayed, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do."

This is a Call to Prayer for the Morro tribe, for our missionaries trying to contact them, and for ourselves and others whom the Lord may some day be able to use to be "the straw that breaks the camel's back" of opposition to making contact with them. "God is not willing that any should perish but that all come to the knowledge of repentance."

This is a Call to Real Heroism. God has someone whom He will use to make this contact. He has done it before; He will do it again. But this is also a Call to Humility, so that we will not overestimate our own strength, nor unduly criticize those who act differently under test, than we feel we might have done.

Visiting with Wilhelm Sawatzky one evening, the man who had gotten an arrow into his abdomen, head injuries, and a broken arm, I was pleased to find him calm. He told of a method of which he had once read, and wondered whether it might be applied here, that is, that pictures in which a white man is extending his arms toward an Indian, might be placed at various places along the Morro Indian trails, in a continued effort to contact them.

How would you meet a wild Morro Indian?

Revival in Volendam, Paraguay

Bruno Epp

"The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad," Ps. 126:3. "And there was great joy in that city," Acts 8:8.

The last days of special evangelistic services in Volendam had come. Early in the evenings, the heavy trossa wagons (wagons used to haul specially sized logs, called trossa, to Puerto Mbopicua on the Paraguay River (loaded with people, young and old, made their way to the center of the colony in order to partake of the blessing of the evening. A month before there had been some difficulty in starting on time at any evening service; now such problem did not exist. One and a half hours before the service was to begin, people would assemble for prayer. Half an hour before the set time to begin, the auditorium of the local Zentralschule was filled to capacity and many standing outside. It was as though the whole colony had turned out. Already for a month the Spirit of God had worked in the hearts of believers and unbelievers and yet we hoped the Holy Spirit might work even mightier. The faith of the prayer warriors was not let down. Showers of blessing poured forth on the assembled crowd. When the last souls of those evenings had found peace with God in Jesus Christ, Volendam, too, could rejoice and speak of a mighty revival within its very boundaries. God be praised!

On February 15, the evangelist, Rev. Abr. G. Neufeld, of Margaret, Man., Canada, arrived in Volendam. Wednesday, February 16, the meetings of special evangelistic work began. Volendam consists of 14 villages and in each village services were to be held. Even before the work began, people had been praying for rich blessings from above. These prayers were not in vain, for after every service, people would remain behind for consultation and salvation. People with an unsettled past, church members lacking real faith, young men and young women, the middle-aged and old, of all classes and ages gave their hearts to the Lord in repentance and faith for time and eternity.

Brother Neufeld visited many homes. Daily he went into the houses, in some villages into every house, to have people pour out their hearts in confession and remorse. The blessings of these visits in the heart of our South American sun, cannot be underestimated. Tuesday, March 15, workers assembled to hear from Brother Neufeld how the work was to be carried on.

We regret the early departure of Rev. Neufeld. Yet we want to rejoice with the other Mennonite colonies in Paraguay, that they, too, will have the privilege of hearing the Word of God out of the mouth of this Spirit-controlled witness. The Lord send them a revival also.

The Lord bless you, Brother Neufeld, in your labors for the Master. May He protect your family who is dispensing with the priest of the household these eight months.

Flashes of Thought

The Hard Way

Walter Gering

That steady, insistent thumping at the window in the other room—who could that be? Why did not they use the door bell and announce their presence? What did they want at such an early hour in the morning? After all, this was hardly the time for visitors. Could it be that some one was in trouble? The mystery became all the greater when it was discovered that there was no one at the window.

For days the same thumping at the window could he heard. There were even marks on the windowpane. As the days went by those marks increased until the pane was streaked with lines. This was no trick of the imagination; something was striking against that window.

The mystery was cleared as I stood in the background and watched the window. Suddenly there was a flutter of wings, a dashing figure and the resounding thump against the window. This was it; a robin was crashing into the window with full speed. Time and again she would fly into the window, recklessly throwing herself against it as though in combat with an enemy. It seemed incredible; surely she would stop. Yet on and on she recovered from the blow against the window; pausing for a few moments in the limb of a nearby evergreen, she sailed into it again. I feared for her life. How long could she continue to pound herself against the pane?

When I left, the procedure was still the same. At noon, returning to the room, I heard the familiar thumping. For days it reappeared early in the morning. Would this foolish robin never learn that you cannot dash against an object without coming to grief? Sooner or later she would fall, never to rise again. What was it that kept driving her into that window? Was there some reflection in the pane which attracted her? Was there some unexplainable inner urge which prompted her to fly at it?

I shall probably never know. The day came when she no longer appeared. The regular thumping against the pane ceased and we returned to normal life in the parsonage. But the thought of that robin, foolishly dashing against the window haunted me. Why dash headlong into that which would only cause pain and distress when the whole wide heavens were open for flight?

Yet was it so much different from that which we all do? What foolish things we all do; what headlong flights we all take which can result only in both bodily and spiritual harm. We know that we ought not to do these things; the experience of the human race has constantly proven that these do but lead to ultimate destruction. Yet we continue to dash ourselves against the rocks of sin and destruction. How much we must seemingly learn the hard way. Then it is that we realize the truth of God's Word: "God is not mocked: whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Report of Central and Middle District Conferences

THE CENTRAL DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The 1955 business sessions of the Central District Conference were held April 22-23 at the Silver Street Church, near Goshen, Ind., with the president, Harry Yoder, presiding.

For the most part, work of the conference was confined to the routine business of hearing reports, holding elections, and making appropriations. The group made available $3,200 for the carrying forward of its affairs in the current year. Officers elected included: Harry Yoder, president; Lotus Troyer, vice-president; Theodore Sommer, secretary. The treasurer, Earl Stuckey, elected in 1954 for a two-year term, remains unchanged.

The one matter of general interest before the conference had to do with the proposed merger of the Middle and Central districts. After long and prayerful consideration the Central District voted what amounted to full commitment to the effort, authorizing the continuing committee to proceed with the development of a constitution, to be submitted to the conference next year.

—Robert W. Hartzler

THE MIDDLE DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The business sessions of the Middle District Conference were held in the beautiful remodeled First Mennonite Church of Nappanee, Indiana, April 21-23. The usual reports and items of business were carefully considered. A fine spirit of unity prevailed throughout, and, under the able leadership of E. A. Albrecht, the program at times even moved somewhat ahead of schedule.

The report of Bluffton College showed that there is keen awareness of the population growth of young people and plans are under way to meet the almost certain rise of the number of college students in the near future.

The Seminary is finishing its tenth year of service. Lately there has been some interest in exploring the possibilities of some inter-seminary relationship with other groups of Mennonites. The study of this question is being continued.

The Home Mission Committee has plans to consider mission work in the southwest suburban area of Chicago, which the Conference approved. It was also suggested that the Mission Committee study the proposal of the General Conference Board of Missions that district conferences assume more responsibility for the mission work in their areas. This matter is to be studied and a report brought to the next Conference.

The various sectional groups; Men's Brotherhood, Women's Missionary Society, and Young People's Union, all brought encouraging reports to the whole body as well as holding their own group meetings.

The plan for a union with the Central Conference is moving forward. This merger has been worked on for some time and it is hoped may be completed within the next year or two.

The executive committee for the coming year will be: Earl Salzman, president; Earnest J. Bohn, vice-president; Howard Baumgartner, secretary; and Wilbur Gerber, treasurer.

THE JOINT INSPIRATIONAL CONFERENCE

The Middle and Central District Conference had their business meetings separately. But for the third time then had a joint Inspirational Conference when the two groups met. The motto of the conference this year, "That in All Things He Might Have the Pre-eminence." There were six sessions; two held in the Eighth Street Church, and four in the high school auditorium. The attendance was very good. Various applications of the main theme were stressed: keeping Christ pre-eminent in our personal life, in the home, in our occupations, in the church, in missions, all with the purpose that the world might believe in Him. (For details of subjects and speakers, see the April 12 issue of The Mennonite.) On Sunday afternoon a strong missionary program was presented with A. E. Kreider and Andrew Shelly as the speakers. The youth program was also very impressive.

Those in attendance could not help but feel the great importance of keeping Christ pre-eminent in every phase of life and work, and many no doubt resolved to live more faithfully unto Him.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION

April 23rd was an active day for the young people at the joint Inspirational Conference, Goshen, Ind. The Middle District young people saw Mrs. Kathleen Kindle become their new president. Ernest Neufeld was elected vice-president with Danita Amstutz as the new secretary. The Central District voted to have Burdell Roeschley as their new president with Betty Yoder as secretary. The other officers are carried over for another year. About 100 young people gathered for the youth banquet held during the supper hour. This was followed by the regular evening conference meeting which was in charge of the young people. We were again made aware of the young people's interest in our Conference and their desire to make Christ pre-eminent in their lives.

—Wm. Gering

So man has split the atom. Can he make an atom? No, he can only split it, and with it destroy himself and all his works! He is only following in Adam's footsteps, promoting death.

It sickens me to hear America brag about its atom bomb. What security is there in that? It is a wicked instrument, and it can mean the end of all of us. We are wicked when we put our faith in it. We need to turn back from the atom to the Almighty . . . .

Middle District YPU

Our district is truly located in mid-America. However we often feel the twenty churches and the young people of our district are quite widely scattered, considering they are located in five states. We also believe we have definite advantages because of our central location. We are grateful for the access our young people have to the two church schools in our district, Bluffton College and Mennonite Biblical Seminary.

Oftentimes the work of Middle District seems to be largely one of supporting a financial budget. However when we analyze it and realize the importance and helpfulness of the projects it supports, it gives a feeling of accomplishment. For only by working together in a larger organization than the individual church youth fellowship could these projects be possible.

THE BUDGET for 1954 is broken down in the following manner.

Travel	$ 125.00
Vine Press	75.00
Incidentals	10.00
Gen. Conf. YPU	600.00
Missionary Project	500.00
TOTAL	$1310.00

Mission Project

We in the Middle District have had different mission projects over the past few years, however our present project is helping support the Verney Unruh family now serving in the southernmost island of Japan, Kyushu. We feel the mission project is an extremely important part of our church. Not only because it is a means of helping the Unruhs but it is a way of reminding us as young people of our responisbility in helping spread the gospel of Jesus Christ. It teaches us in a practical way that we as young Christians are responsible in sharing our material possessions and that it is also our duty to remember and support our Christian workers through our prayers.

District Paper

Our district paper published bi-monthly is called the Vine Press. The familiar caption "I am the Vine, ye are the branches" at the top of each publication reminds us what our status with Christ should be. As a branch abides in the vine so we are to abide in Christ. And only in so doing can we produce the good fruit of true Christian living. The paper serves as the connecting link between youth fellowships and between the officers and churches. The local youth groups report news periodically which of course gives everyone the opportunity to share the good things of each individual group. It is also a medium by which district officers can reach the various youth groups with district and General Conference news.

Workshops

The special work of individual churches in our district over the past few years is the week-end workshop. Churches located within easy driving distance of one another oftentimes co-operate with the host church in planning and directing the workshop. This in itself helps provide fellowship between groups and to fulfill one aim of the workshop. Discussion groups are formed around the three areas of Christian Faith and Life, Christian Service, and Christian Fellowship. Following the discussion some definite project is used in each group to put their discussion to practical use. With the faith group planning devotional periods, service groups going out on an actual service project, such as giving a program at a local old people's home, city jail or orphanage, and the fellowship group planning the fellowship hours for the workshop itself.

Workshops not only provide for fellowship between groups but also a real opportunity in deepening our spiritual lives and in forming solid convictions concerning our Christian faith and life. It is also a means of discussing our mutual problems as Christian young people, and in finding new ways and opportunities of serving the Christ we love.

EVERY YOUTH

Every youth has a quest to make
For life is the King's Highway,
And a joyous heart is the script we Take, of the road of every day.

Every youth has his gift to guard
As he starts to a far-off goal;
A body pure, a mind unmarred,
And the light of a lovely soul.

Every youth has a task of his own,
For the Father has willed it so.
Youth seeks the way, but He alone
Can show him the way to go.

Every youth has a lovely Guide
From the vale to the mountain crest
For the Unseen Friend, who walks beside,
Is the Way and the End of the quest.

—Mary S. Edgar

Now that summer is almost here many of you are eagerly planning on VS, others on retreats, some on jobs and some may even be thinking of a vacation at home. Wherever you are, you will be having some interesting experiences. Why not jot down the things which might be of interest to others, write them up in good form and send them in to the Youth Section. It would be wonderful to hear from you, in this form. (Ed.)

Editorial

Those of you who have seen your gardens growing this year and many years past will understand the importance of the gardener's work.

As we watch the gardener we learn many things about him. He has a certain intimacy about the soil and with all of nature. His hands are very strong, yet they are very gentle. They are brown hands whose color blends with the rich brown soil they know so well. These hands know how to manipulate the tools deftly, caring for them, using them well. The gardener's hands are gentle as he plants the tiny seeds. The young plants which he puts out in his garden are carefully placed in the soil. Their roots are able to dig deeply because the soil has been prepared by the gardener. The gardener's hands are working hands, loving hands, beautiful hands.

The gardener is not only a good workman, he is an artist. When he lays out the rows of vegetables, plants the flowers, cares for the shrubs, he envisions the beauty of his garden as each plant reaches its peak. He sees the early spring flowers in their places with their own special pattern. He can see his late spring flowers and the blossoms of summer as they lend their color to a beautiful pattern. He understands the usefulness of his flowers. He also knows of the pleasure their beauty may give.

For each kind of planting, the gardener has a purpose. He will never neglect his shrubs, his fruit trees or his lawn. Each part of his land will receive the same watchful care. We can see without being told that the gardener loves his plants and is concerned about each one regardless of the function or purpose it fulfills.

Christ is our divine gardener. He cares for us and nurtures us as we grow; as we send our roots deeper and stretch our shoots higher. Mr. Devenesen, an Indian poet, has expressed the thought of the Divine Gardener in his poem of the same title. His final lines are said by Christ to the poet

" 'I sow my spirit-seed in the hearts of men and rejoice when they blossom forth in soul-flowers.' "

(Note: Credit for the thoughts here expressed is given to Mr. Devenesen whose book of poetry, "The Cross Is Lifted" has been most enjoyable and inspirational to me. The book is published by the Friendship Press, New York.)

Something to Think About

We often talk about the young people being a part of the church. Has the question ever been raised as to how much responsibility we really have? When all facts are considered, we don't have as much to do in the total work of the church as we think. We are limited to only a few responsibilities outside the regular work of the young people's group. These consist of services such as singing in the choir, serving as an usher, or serving as a substitute Sunday school teacher. Would it be too bold to suggest that various young people take charge of the morning worship service while the minister is absent? Or what about one young person elected for about six months to sit in on the church council meetings or various committee meetings to gain an insight as to how the church really operates? Other things could be suggested such as taking charge of the choir several Sundays during the year, or serving as assistant Sunday school superintendent. One could continue with a list of this kind. Assuming then that the older members of the church would give opportunity for this serivce, a further question must be asked. Would we be ready and willing to accept this added responsibility? Why don't we spend some time in deep thought about this kind of program?

Our Schools

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Adele Bertsche, senior from Pontiac, Ill., was elected by the student body to reign as May Day Queen at the annual May Day activities scheduled for June 4. Elected as Popular Man to escort the Queen was Dave Tice, senior from Perkasie, Pa., and Joan Gratz Slotter, senior from Bluffton, Ohio, will be the queen's attendant.

Officers of the 1955-56 Student Council were elected by members of the council recently. These include: John Basinger, president; Jim Gundy, vice-president; and Romaine Clemens, secretary.

Six Bluffton students and Dr. Howard Raid attended the International Student Conference held at Tabor College, Hillsboro, Kansas, on April 15, 16, and 17. Jakob Duerksen, Ike Qutub, Evelyn Suhweil, Lore Andres, Els van Lier, and Jean van Dijk were among the sixty-nine students from various Mennonite colleges who attended.

Dr. Howard D. Raid, economics and business professor, was elected president of the Men's Brotherhoods of the Middle District Conference during its recent session held in Goshen, Ind. Dr. Robert Kreider was re-elected to the Historical Committee and Rev. William Keeney was elected to the Educational Committee.

A new look was given to the Bluffton campus as a result of the clean up day held on Friday, April 22. Students were released from classes for the day to work on such tasks as whitewashing rocks and posts, cleaning the lawns, fixing bridges and paths, putting screens in windows, cleaning buildings and other jobs to improve the looks of the campus. Reldon Schirch was chairman of the day's activities.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

A number of the Seminary Fellowship attended the sessions of the Inspirational Conference of the Middle and Central Districts held at the Eighth Street Mennonite Church, Goshen, Ind., April 22-24. "Keeping Christ Pre-eminent" was the theme of the conference. Rev. Andrew Shelly spoke at the Sunday afternoon meeting on "Keeping Christ Pre-eminent in the Work of Missions." The closing message was given by Rev. J. N. Smucker. He spoke on "Keeping Christ Pre-eminent That the World May Believe."

Bruno Penner gave the morning message at the Woodlawn Mennonite Church on April 24. His message, "In the Light of Eternity," was based on the Book of Revelation. Brother Penner is a post-graduate student at the Seminary coming to us from Mountain Lake, Minnesota.

Rev. Jacob J. Enz had charge of the regular Wednesday evening prayer service on April 27.

The annual spring retreat for the Seminary Fellowship was held Friday, April 29. The group went to the Maple Lake Forest Preserve for an afternoon and evening of recreation, fellowship, and spiritual upbuilding.

A consecration service for children was held in the Woodlawn Mennonite Church Sunday morning, May 8. This is an opportunity for Christian parents to dedicate themselves and their children to the Lord.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Word has been received that Dr. and Mrs. Earl F. Rose have established a Lecture Fund for Freeman Junior College honoring Mrs. Rose's parents, Adolph and Nettie Preheim.

For this purpose they have made an initial donation of $1,000. The interest accrued from investments of this and subsequent donations they plan to make are to be used for lectures at Freeman College by persons who have distinguished themselves as scholars. The lectures are to be on subjects of general religious, historical, philosophical, and scientific interest—emphasizing spiritual values without sacrificing scholarship.

Although donations honoring relatives have increased in recent years this is the first time that a gift has been received honoring living parents. Besides the spiritual and cultural good that such a lecture fund can do it is a wonderful gesture on the part of children to show appreciation to their parents while these are still living.

Dr. and Mrs. Rose could not have selected a more fitting project, for the Preheims have for many years been deeply interested in the welfare of Freeman Junior College. Mr. Preheim was a member of the Board of Directors from 1931 to 1949. For a year he served as secretary and for two years as president of this group. Mrs. Rose (Marilyn Preheim) herself graduated from Freeman Academy in 1944. After graduating from Bethel College she returned to Freeman where she taught Science and Chemistry until she enrolled at the University of South Dakota to take advanced work in bio-chemistry. Dr. Rose, who is a graduate of Yankton College, took his first two years of medicine at the University of South Dakota. He is a graduate of the University of Nebraska School of Medicine. After interning at Denver General Hospital, he established a private practice at Lemmon, South Dakota, where he and Mrs. Rose and their two children live.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

The Literary Society presented a debate on Wednesday, April 14, in which four students participated. The topic of the debate was "Resolved: that the Mennonites should not become Union members." The following night the annual student elections were held. After the business meeting the old student council entertained the students with a mock council meeting.

The guest chapel speakers during the past week were Rev. D. Buhler of the Gospel Union Mission and Rev. F. Phillips, pastor of Bethany Baptist Church.

The theme of the prayer meeting on Saturday night was "From Darkness Unto Light." The speakers for the evening were Rev. D. P. Neufeld, an MCC worker just returned from Europe and Rev. G. Groening, president of the Mennonite Pioneer Mission Board.

Jottings

—Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kan.: The Tabor Church Men's Chorus presented a program of music in our church on the evening of Feb. 20. The evening's offering was given to the Mennonite Men's project of printing equipment for South American Mennonites. Recent Sunday evening activities of our young people included a visit by the C. E. Gospel Team on March 20, and on March 27, a visit by the Voluntary Service Band from Bethel College with a challenging message for all. Our young people joined with the local C. E.'s in plans for an Easter Sunrise Service. Ten of our young people were baptized and joined our membership on Palm Sunday morning. These included Ralph Armand Frey, James Jantz, Charles Kinder, Jr., Jerry Mack Plenert, Diana and Dwight (Skippy) Edward Rempel, Clark Willard Richert, Lary Dale Riesen, Harold Wayne Schmidt, and Robert Unrau. The parents of two of these young people, Mr. and Mrs. Art Plenert form the First Mennonite Church of Hutchinson, and Mr. and Mrs. Herman Schmidt, from the First Mennonite Church of Newton, also joined our congregation during the same service. After the reception of the new members, we all observed the Lord's Supper together. During the month of March two new babies were born to members of our congregation. Douglas Bobo Buller, son of Mr. and Mrs. Elvin Buller, was born March 5; and Stephanie Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Sheffler, was born March 29.—Corr.

—First Church, Burns, Kan.: The evening of Feb. 20, Miss Marie Duerksen returned missionary from India spoke to the congregation. A group of students from Berean Academy presented the C. E. program for us March 13. On March 16 a group of 11 men gathered at the Albert Hiebert farm near Cassoday to prepare the seed bed, drill oats, and did other jobs that needed to be done. Mr. Hiebert has been confined to his home because of a heart ailment and has not been able to do his work. We are happy to report that he is improving at this writing. On Sunday morning, April 3, we observed Holy communion.—Corr.

—Bethesda Church, Henderson, Neb.: On March 20, John Thiessen was the guest speaker both morning and evening. The evening service served as a booster for the financial drive sponsored by the Men's Brotherhood, when a house to house canvass was made for missions, relief, Voluntary Service, and the South American bulldozer project. Receipts of nearly $6,000 were realized, for which we are grateful. Edmund Miller of Moundridge, Kansas, concluded a series of pre-Easter services on Good Friday, which were very well received. The concluding service on Good Friday evening was followed by a mixed chorus rendering the "Seven Last Words," with Rev. Miller serving as narrator. The Bethel College Choir members were our guests over the Easter week end. They sang during our morning services and presented a sacred concert in the evening. Word has come to us that Mr. and Mrs. John Gaeddert have accepted the call as assistant-to-the-pastor, after which the Arthur Isaaks plan to further their studies at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago. May the Lord richly bless them.—Mrs. Ruben Friesen, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Okla.: The last week of Jesus' life was dramatized and recorded on tape and was shown in church on Good Friday evening. Characters were Jesus, Pilate, Roman soldiers, the angel, and the crowds, and the narrator. As the characters spoke, colored slides were flashed on the screen. Music was furnished by Rev. and Mrs. Kaufman, the Ladies' Trio, and mixed quartet. The Bethel College Vocal Ensemble, with their director, Elvera Voth, gave us a very fine program Sunday evening. The church was filled to capacity.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

—First Church, Hutchinson, Kan.: We had a little different arrangement on Easter Sunday. The adult and junior choirs sang, but before each song the minister read a part of Scripture from the crucifixion to the resurrection. It was appreciated very much. Our sunrise service at 6 o'clock featured a pantomime, "Scenes at the Sepulcher," accompanied by a duet. The Bethel College Choir gave an excellent concert in our church, March 13. The C. E. featured colored slides in March, of the children's home in Colombia. It was inspiring to see these children and to hear them sing. Men's Brotherhood work night was held March 1. Folding chairs were repaired and small chairs painted. Refreshments were served. In our Mission Circle some of the women quilt, some make comforters, some look through relief clothing. During Lent in our Bible study our minister discussed with us evangelism and prayer.—Mrs. J. H. Epp, Corr.

—Goessel Church, Goessel, Kan.: George Stoneback, of the Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, conducted evangelistic meetings April 3-8. An Easter sunrise service was held by the three churches, Tabor, Alexanderwohl, and Goessel, which was very impressive. On Easter morning the cantata "King Triumphant" was presented by the choir under the direction of Roland Krause. April 8 the young people of our church went to Wichita to visit a service in a Jewish synagogue. Mary Ann Banman and Milford Bartel from Drake, Sask., were united in marriage March 13. Rochelle Fay was born to Rev. and Mrs. Leo Miller, Feb. 4. Courtney Dean was born to Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Banman April 9.—Mrs. Theodore Schmidt, Corr.

—Arlington Church, Arlington, Kan.: Special services for Easter Sunday were a baptismal service and observance of the Lord's Supper. Those baptized and welcomed into the church were Carol Ewy, Sandra Schmidt, Nedra Spessard, James and Kenneth Dun, and Howard Schmidt. A son, Donald Dean, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Jasper Dunn, March 20. New equipment purchased recently includes a slide projector, steel wardrobe for choir robes, and base cabinets for Sunday school materials, and kitchen supplies. Mr. and Mrs. P. R. Linscheid will go to Canton, Okla., for the celebration of the 75th anniversary of Oklahoma missions. Mrs. Linscheid's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Kliewer worked in the Hammon mission station forty years ago.—Lois Kopper, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Inman, Kan.: The Bethel College fellowship banquet and program was held here March 29. Our choir of about 80 voices rendered the cantata, "Hosanna," on Easter Sunday, April 10, under the able direction of Aaron F. Toews. The Charity Society had their mission program in the afternoon of April 13. Our speakers were Mrs. Sam Entz, who told us of her experiences as a missionary nurse in the Congo Belge, Africa. The second speaker was Mrs. Cornelius Krahn, who, with her husband and family, had spent some time in Holland, observing and studying Mennonite history there. She also showed some slides in connection with her message. Three little newcomers have joined us since the last writing. A son, Ronald Eugene, came to brighten the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Neufeld on April 3. A baby daughter, Marilyn Kay, came to bless the home of Mr. and Mrs. Adolf Neufeld April 6. A son, Jonathan Willard, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Vern Jantz of Chicago, April 12. The last two are grandchildren of our pastor and Mrs. P. J. Neufeld.—Corr.

—Immanuel Church, Delft, Minn.: A brass trio, the Jubileers, of Grace Bible Institute of Omaha, gave an interesting program on the evening of March 13, with Brother Schmidt giving a challenging message. Our pastor and his wife enjoyed a few days of the missionary conference at GBI March 22-25. C. P. Klassen of the Gospel Missionary Union brought the morning message March 27, and in the evening he showed slides taken on his recent evangelistic tour in Ecuador, South America. Passion week was a heart-searching one when our congregation joined with that of the Gospel Church in Mountain Lake for evening services. The first four evenings pastor McDowell brought the events that led to our Lord's Calvary. The last four evenings concluding on Easter Sunday, A. H. Schultz continued with the messages in our church. We were greately strengthened and blessed through these services. April 17, Merle Christiansen filled the vacancy here while our pastor was holding meetings at Madrid, Neb. Our Sunday school has just finished their contribution of thirty Christmas bundles to MCC.—Corr.

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kan.: The young Mennonite Matrons had Mrs. P. W. Penner as their guest speaker during their March meeting. VOLUNTARY CONSCRIPTION

Publicity surrounding the present manpower proposals for the armed services make much of words like "voluntary," "enlistment," etc., which are misleading. They should be viewed as options within a universal compulsory military system. Lads of seventeen or eighteen are lined up. They are given the option of jumping into the ice cold sea "voluntarily," but if they do not jump, Selective Service comes along to push them in. Or, they may enlist in certain armed services. In the one case they must serve a total of ten years, in the other case, eight years.

Back of it all is a compulsory system, a system of conscription, even though the options within the compulsory system may appeal to many young men.

Film Review

SOUTH OF THE CLOUDS, 16 mm., sound, black and white, 35 minutes, Association Films, rental, $8.

This film presents a story, filmed in the Near East, in which Suad, an orphaned Christian girl, goes to a woman's college and rooms with Najla, a high caste Moslem.

The story portrays the struggle of Najla to find her place in life. Through the activities of the college including the classroom, folk dancing, sociology field work, and a summer of service, Najla commits herself to a life of service rather than going back to a life of seclusion among her own people.

The film moves a bit slowly but presents in an interesting way the issues of choosing a vocation and choosing a way of life. The film could be a bit more definite in picturing the outcome in the life of Najla, for we are not definitely told that she became a Christian although there is an implication that the Christian gospel may have been the motivation which prompted her to choose a life of service.

The story has a real message for young people of high school age and up and would set the background for a discussion of a number of issues they must face including whether they ought to go to college, what vocation ought to be chosen, ways of witnessing, as well as other issues.

watch and pray that we enter not into temptation. Never are we in more danger, than when we underestimate the power of temptation.

'But deliver us from evil.' This is not repetition. We not only pray that we avoid temptation, but we see how deeply we are enmeshed in the sins we have already fallen into. As we go on with God we see all this. Once we were concerned with the sins of commission, now are added to our consciousness, our sins of omission. Once there was the struggle with carnal sins, now also, we see the awfulness of our spiritual sins. This climax prayer is for deliverance from evil. He can deliver us from evil so that we may honor His name.

Our Father,
Thou art our life,
And we trust in Thee.
We pray from our hearts
This perfect prayer,
That Thy name may be praised.

Emmanuel—God With Us

Wherever I am, there is God,
Every hour of every day, and
I cannot wander beyond
His love and care. He does
Not track me down as a
Divine detective, but seeks
For me as the Good Shepherd.
When I persist in sowing
Evil seed, not even his Love can prevent the reaping
Of an evil harvest. With Integrity he maintains the Moral order, ever keeping
Inviolate all his processes.

The moral law against which
We often throw ourselves is
His holy gift for our Redemption. Nothing can Separate us from His love,
Not even our iniquities.

Before ever we turn to Him,
He is eager to grant us
Forgiveness and restitution,
Wisdom and power,
And radiant joy.
It is not His will that Even the least of us
Should perish, but
Have everlasting life.

Wherever I am, there is the Living Christ, as near as to Peter and John in ancient Galilee. He taught
Wonderful words of life,
Poured himself out in Loving kindness, brought hope
To the hopeless, aroused the Hostility of men of power, Remained faithful to the Will of God, was crucified,
Buried in a borrowed tomb,
Rose from the grave on
The first Easter, and lo
He is with us always, even
To the end of the world.

Closer than hands or feet
Nearer than breathing,
He is eager to guide us,
Empower us, welcome us
As co-workers in His Father's business.
Speak thou for He hears,
Listen thou for He speaks,
Follow wherever he leads,
And like the men on
The road to Emmaus,
You will feel your heart
Burn within you on the way.

For Freedom

Vernon Stucky

Freedom, freedom we can see
We must sacrifice for thee;
Drafted men, against their will Now are trained to wreck and kill.
Fathers toil from dawn till night,
Since their sons must train to fight;
Young wives too, with husbands gone
Though dismayed, must carry on;
Guiltless children too must pay
Through the tumult of our day.
All are puppets for defense,
Almost slaves in every sense,
Slaves of toil and slaves of pain
Slaves of loneliness and strain.

Freedom, freedom we can see
We must sacrifice for thee,
Till we ask, "Ah can it be,
Could we be a slave of thee?
Can the thing we seek to save
Be the thing that could enslave?
Or is ours a false defense,
Lacking in good common sense?
Or is freedom's worthy name
Forged for some insidious aim
By some men devoid of shame
Who enslave in freedom's name?"

KEEPING WEDDINGS CHRISTIAN

Now that we are approaching the time of year when weddings are more numerous, we would do well to check again the common ceremony used to see if it is as Christian as it might be. Those responsible for planning the details of the ceremony are confronted with two alternatives: they may plan the music and general procedure in accord with the common practices of public weddings, or they may take the time, with the help of the understanding minister, to make the occasion a beautiful Christian experience to be long remembered by all present.

To follow the line of least resistance would be to conform to the conventional pattern; the same sentimental but secular songs, the same traditional march music, the same common order of events. This makes the ceremony practically the same as hundreds of others with the exception of the names involved.

But it can be beautifully different. Appropriate sacred hymns may be played before the ceremony proper, the special music may be truly Christian, and the wedding party can come in, not to the common "wedding march," but to the strains of a beautiful hymn. In one wedding recently attended, the congregation arose as the bridal party entered and remained standing to sing heartily "Joyful, Joyful, We Adore Thee."

Our sacred music is not so limited that we may not find excellent selections very appropriate for such a special occasion. We do not have to borrow the threadbare selections from the secular lists. Anyone with good imagination, an appreciation for music, and a feeling for the sacredness of the occasion, can work out a beautiful Christian ceremony. Let us dare to be different. Ministers can often take the lead, first by preaching a sermon on Christian weddings, and then helping the parties arrange for such a ceremony.

CIGARETTES STAND CONDEMNED

The mounting evidence from doctors and scientists against the cigarette alarms the tobacco interests. Cigarette smoking has fallen off slightly in the past year, in spite of the tremendous pressure of advertising through the printed page and billboard, the radio, and television. Now they are making great claims for the filter cigarette, which has been pronounced "the greatest advertising hoax perpetrated on the American people by an industry which has made the Big Lie the ruling principle of its advertising on the radio."

Doctors claim that heavy cigarette smoking more than doubles the death rate from cancer. It is also pointed out that such smoking definitely affects the heart. On these two counts, cigarette smoking stands guilty and condemned before a gullible public.

Mennonites in general have always believed that the use of tobacco does not fit in with the devout Christian life, for they could not imagine Christ, their leader, as being a slave to such a habit. Now that doctors and scientists are coming to our support it is hoped that those tempted to give in to this unwholesome habit will take a serious second thought. The Bible tells us that our bodies are "the temples of the Holy Spirit." Such temples should be kept pure and undefiled.

NEGLECT NOT PRAYER FOR PEACE

A reader, calling attention to the fact that churches some time ago launched a "year-long prayer for peace," asks what our Peace Churches are doing in this respect. Certainly, when non-peace churches see the need of prayer for peace and are planning such a year-long campaign, we should be sure that our own churches, who claim to hold dear this ideal of peace, should do no less.

Perhaps we take too much for granted. We do not believe in war, but are we backing up that belief by making use of a power which can help prevent war—that of a mighty appeal to God on behalf of peace around the world. We claim to believe heartily in peace, and of course we believe in prayer. Then these two beliefs should be joined in appropriate action.

If every church of our Conference would urge every member to pray seriously for peace every day of the year, certainly these sincere prayers would not be in vain. In an address last summer before a large church group, President Eisenhower called upon religious leaders to lead the way because the cause of peace needs God. Said he, "that act of faith might take the form of a personal prayer by hundreds upon hundreds of millions." If the leaders of our nation, and the non-peace churches begin to sense the mighty worth of prayer for world peace, shall we of the peace churches lag behind?

THE UNHEEDED CALL

Hezekiah in his day found that people very easily neglected God and His worship. When he sent a call throughout his realm for people to return to God, his messengers met a discouraging response: "They laughed them to scorn, and mocked them." He pointed out that "the Lord is gracious and merciful and will not turn his face from you, if you return to Him."

How we boast of all kinds of improvements, discoveries, and inventions since those far-back days, but when it comes to religious improvements, do we not, even as they, greatly neglect our spiritual relationship with God? And we have the added advantage of having Christ show us what God is really like and what it means to be a true follower of Him. Our spiritual advancement has not kept pace with our material development. Perhaps we are not as wise as we like to think.

Moving Ahead in Evangelism

ELMER EDIGER*

Frankly, do we want to? There is the temptation to be content with reacting against certain methods of evangelism. Over the years however there has become evident in our discussions a clear concern to move ahead with a wholesome evangelism.

At our best we recognize that evangelism should be at the very center of our local church program, not only in our missions. Rightly understood this does not minimize our program of nurture, fellowship, and service. In Christ Jesus we have something we want to share. Those outside Christ and the church we want to win for Him. All aspects of our church program must contribute to this full life in Christ to which we want to win others.

But how do we move ahead in being more than a "family," a "culture" church? This in effect is the question that was raised recently at a Sunday evening discussion meeting in Hillsboro, in Goessel, and also at the Mennonite Men's workshop at Elyria, Kansas. The time is ripe for moving ahead.

One discussion, one inspiring sermon, one day's workshop, or even a week of evangelistic meetings will not do the whole job. It needs to be a "process" over a period of time, in fact, continuous. This should be a "process" of honestly examining our witness, of refocusing the gospel message, and then "being and doing." But if at all possible concerned individuals should work through regular church channels rather than some independent group of individuals from various churches. Work with the pastor, the church council, the laymen, the women, the youth, or better yet an evangelism committee of the congregation. The church ought to be the channel for this "process."

Local groups which are just beginning a new emphasis on evangelism might well begin by "warming up" their own fellowship groups within the church (such as youth, women, men, etc.), and examining what potential each group has for evangelism. "Fellowship evangelism" is a simple but effective aspect of evangelism which should be present in all congregations.

Fellowship evangelism endeavors to help all organizations of the church to open their doors in an inviting way to those outside the church so they may find Christ. The warmth of fellowship can stir individuals to long for Christ, it can also help individuals into full discipleship after they have accepted Christ. Combine such a winsome fellowship with a visitation program and the congregation is on the way toward a wholesome program of evangelism which can be continued on a long-term basis.

Fellowship and visitation evangelism are not the whole of evangelism but it is a good beginning point for us as we seek to grow (and, it is not to be overlooked by churches who consider themselves already evangelistic). A brief but excellent summary of this approach is to be found in one chapter of Edward K. Ziegler's pamphlet, Brethren Win Men to Christ (available from Mennonite Book Stores).

How do we move ahead? Anyone who is really concerned can order this pamphlet. Read it and then if moved share it with leaders in some organization. Study this pamphlet or another similar one as a group. Make your recommendation to the church council. This is not the only way to move ahead locally but it is one way. Jesus said, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men," Matthew 4:19. "But you shall receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you; and you shall be my witnesses . . ." Acts 1:8 RSV.

Christian Courage

ELAINE SOMMERS RICH

It happened in Nebraska. A local boy had been killed in Korea, and feeling was running high against Mennonites in the neighborhood and their CO position. Aroused citizens called a mass meeting to protest the provision for CO's in the draft law. About 500 people gathered. All the emotion that changes separate individuals into a homicidal mob was present. How would you have liked to address such an audience?

That's what Arnold Nickel did. "It's best not to get excited," he said later in telling the story. For forty minutes this Mennonite pastor explained to those apparently hostile listeners his beliefs about the Christian and war. Was there a single sympathetic listener in the group? He didn't know. When he sat down, he was prepared for almost anything.

A young fellow who had fought in the front lines in Korea and was now a university sophomore stood up next. Step by step, sometimes in unpulpitlike language, he led that audience through the reasoning that had made a CO of him. "If your government asked you tomorrow to shoot your mother, how many of you would do it? Raise your hands." No hands. The next question had to do with a husband or wife. Soon he was asking about "a North Korean who was your good friend." Still no hands. Finally he asked about "a Russian who was your friend." Still no hands. "What are we talking about? We're all CO's in part," the fellow concluded.

There's more to the story. Before it was all over Arnold Nickel had talked to the parents of the boy who died in Korea. He had made friends with the university sophomore and another student who had spent a year and a day in prison for his convictions. And he has since testified to the Mennonite position on war to all kinds of civic and church groups at their invitation, all as a result of this incident.

North Newton Material Aid Center

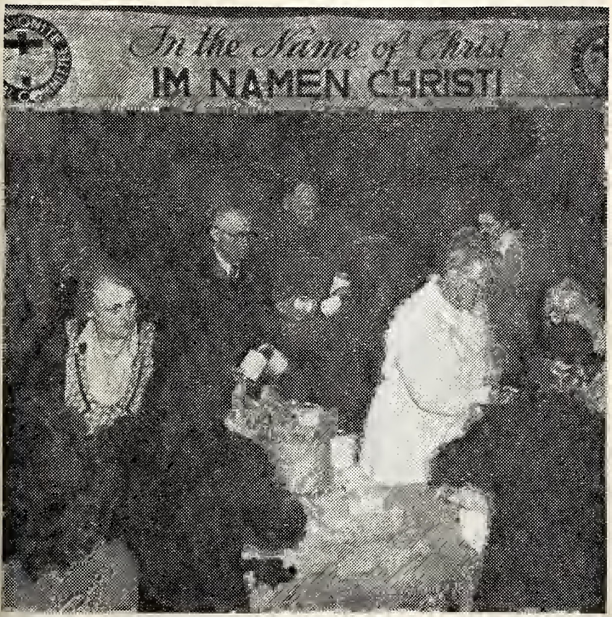
A new building to provide more adequate processing and storage facilities for their material aid contributions to foreign relief is to be constructed in North Newton, Kan., by Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches in Kansas and surrounding states.

The new MCC material aid center and warehouse will be erected on the site of the present clothing center building in North Newton which MCC has been renting from Bethel College. Construction of this sloped roof, block building to provide 3,000 square feet of floor space is to get under way in May.

For some time it has been evident that the present quonset-hut clothing center structure is inadequate because of its limited space and ineffective heating and cooling system. Another need is for a building to store and process food. A building rented for this purpose in the past is no longer available. Such facilities will be needed again when the portable canner operates in Mennonite and Brethren in Christ communities in the Midwest this season.

The need for these facilities is underscored by the continuing distress of the world's suffering and underprivileged peoples. It is evident that relief needs will continue indefinitely and that these needs are a distinct call to Mennonite and Brethren in Christ groups to provide food, clothing, soap, bedding, and other materials in a Christian spirit.

The North Newton center is a conveniently-located disposition and processing point for relief materials contributed by churches in Kansas and surrounding states. After materials are sorted, packaged, and labeled, they are picked up by the MCC truck and taken to port cities for shipment overseas.



In the Name of Christ
IM NAMEN CHRISTI

Continued clothing and food distributions to the underprivileged and distressed overseas are possible through contributions by Mennonite churches in America. Here needy persons in Luebeck, Germany, are given canned meat and flour by MCC. The processing centers such as the one being constructed in North Newton, Kan., are important links in getting well-prepared relief supplies abroad. Last year MCC shipped relief supplies to the following countries: Austria, England, Formosa, France, Germany, Greece, Holland, Hong Kong, Indo China, Java, Jordan, Korea, Mexico, and Paraguay.

The plan, therefore, is to construct a building for use as a clothing processing and storage center and a cutting room. The quonset-hut structure will be used for food processing and storage.

Total cost of these facilities is expected to be between $25,000 and $30,000. This will include purchase of the present clothing center and plot of ground approximately 300 by 88 feet facing 24th Street on the south. To be erected to the south of the clothing center, the new building will cost between $16,000 and $19,200 including interior equipment, adequate parking space, loading facilities, and attractive landscaping.

Mennonite and Brethren in Christ representatives working with their MCC organization have agreed that one offering be taken in all churches in Kansas and surrounding states. The plan is to suggest that each member contribute $1 for this "North Newton Material Aid Center." Based on the membership in the area, such a contribution will cover the cost of this new material aid plant.

Contributions should be directed to conference treasurers and designated for the "North Newton Material Aid Center."

There will be an opportunity for volunteers to contribute labor to hold building costs to a minimum. Plans are for Voluntary Service personnel to aid in the construction.

Film Review

THE STREET, 16 mm., sound, black and white, 22 min., available from Association Films, rental $6.00.

The Street is a story of a young minister who reopens a church which is located on a city street. The young minister brings the church to the people and soon develops a dynamic program. He is concerned about the many issues the people face in the city.

The work of the minister and the program of the church make a deep impression on a returned soldier. Through the ministry of this church as revealed through the work of the minister and the transformed lives of one of the families in the church, this young soldier dedicates his life to the Christian ministry.

The film is well done. Probably the two main weaknesses are that the problems are solved too easily and that only a few of the aspects of work on a city street can be covered in a short film. The film would have value for city churches. It would also have value for youth groups anywhere in presenting the issue of choosing vocations. The film could be used with groups from the senior high school age on up.

Preach, Reprove, Rebuke, Exhort

J. F. SAWATZKY

This Scripture passage gives a charge to Timothy, the minister. He is charged before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at His appearing and His kingdom. This passage reminds us that our deeds, as God's children, as members of the body of the church, will be accounted for. It causes us to take stock of our time. How much of it do we spend aimlessly? How often do we omit to do that which we should do, and do that which we should not do.

To Timothy the charge was to preach the Word in season and out of season, and to continue doing so. Not to miss any opportunity to proclaim the gospel message. According to 1 Corinthians 15:1-4 this message is: that Christ died and that He was buried and that He rose again the third day. He died for our redemption and rose again for our justification and ascended into heaven for our sanctification.

Timothy was charged further to reprove the believers of their sins. This was not a pleasant task. Should it be done openly? Are we ministers asked to reprove our members of their sins from the pulpit? We may safely reprove sin as such openly without judging the sinner. Many preachers of the past have used this method extensively. Spurgeon says that a large percentage of his sermons were of a reproving nature.

Again we read, rebuke, threaten, those who persist in wrongdoing. Let them know that their deeds are to be judged at Christ's appearing and His kingdom. Jude makes mention of this disciplinary act in verse 23, when he says, "and others save with fear."

Next comes exhortation. This surely can be done effectively, even from the pulpit. If the minister will plead with his followers to be true to the Word and the Spirit, admonishing them to walk as is becoming to a believer.

Do these things with all longsuffering and doctrine. Whether openly or privately, let love always be the guiding force. Never become hasty or harsh. Always putting the offender in remembrance of the Bible doctrines which we are to follow.

This is disciplining; not a pleasant job but a necessary one. Yet one that is largely neglected in the churches today. We may reason, let us preach so much of the good we can do, that no room will be left to do evil. But we must also remember that the adversary, even Satan, is constantly appealing to the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life, and only too often he succeeds in leading us astray. Therefore we must at all times be on guard and keep in fellowship with our Lord that we can be victorious over our tempter in the strength of the Spirit.

The reason for keeping the charge is that time will come when men will not endure sound doctrine, but shall heap to themselves teachers having itching ears. Do not these words describe our present day? Yes, we want something pleasant for our ears. Even our worship service we limit to an hour. Two-thirds of that time is spent on preliminaries such as music, singing, announcing, taking the offering, etc. The time for the sermon is thus often curtailed. Yes, all those other things are part of the worship service, but prayer and the message should have first place.

Many radio programs are of such a nature to tickle our ears. Many attractions are used to make the people listen. And often the truth is not proclaimed, but fables. Yes the Spirit did say through Paul, "they will turn away their ears from the truth and shall be turned into fables."

Let us therefore examine ourselves and see if we are still on solid ground. Proclaiming the Word in its entirety, preaching, reproving, rebuking, exhorting, with all longsuffering and doctrine. May the dear Lord give us wisdom, courage, and power, to do His will as ministers, teachers, group leaders, parents, and brethren.

"Missionaries in Overalls"

Three General Conference Mennonite 1-W men who might well be termed "missionaries in overalls" have arrived in Belgian Congo to aid in the work of the Congo Inland Mission.

Their going to Africa illustrates a new approach to missions. The work of their hands will be a means of testifying to the efficacy of the Christian gospel and will strengthen the work of missionaries by freeing them from much manual labor and enable them to give more time to evangelistic activities.

And at the same time, their work in Belgian Congo illustrates how 1-W service can be an effective service for Christ and the Church while being a means of fulfilling the required two years of government alternative service.

The names and addresses of the three 1-W men who sailed for Matadi, Belgian Congo, on March 12, are David Claassen, Newton, Kan.; Larry Kaufman, Windom, Kan.; and Fremont Regier, Whitewater, Kan. Accompanying them was Loyal A. Schmidt of Abbotsford, B. C., not subject to any draft call but going for a period of Christian service.

The men took with them a one-ton panel truck which will be used by the missionaries in evangelistic-itinerary work. To drive the vehicle the thousand miles from Matadi at the mouth of the Congo to the field required about a week's time.

Claassen will be a general assistant to Dr. Merle Schwartz in the medical work at Mukedi. Kaufman and Regier will be a team at the Mutena station. Kaufman will be in charge of vehicle repair and maintenance and assist in the building program and Regier will assist in the agricultural and industrial programs.

Their assignments for their two years of 1-W service under the Congo Inland Mission were facilitated

Flashes of Thought

Faithful Plants

Walter Gering

No—I must admit—they are not as beautiful as those marvelous Easter lilies. On Sunday those lilies had been breathtaking. Thirty-five Easter lily blossoms arranged in the form of a cross added something to the holiday which lingered in our memory long after the service was over. The flower committee had once again made a real contribution to the festivities of the day. It would hardly have been Easter without those lilies.

The next Saturday the members of the committee were back in the church discussing the flowers for Sunday. I could tell that they were concerned. The display prepared for the coming service did not suit them and they were trying out different arrangements. Why not use the same lilies which had been a part of the Easter service? Surely no one would object to having them on the Sunday after Easter. After all, we were all still in the spirit of the season.

That was the trouble! The lilies were no longer available. One by one they had drooped and withered away during the week. Now that the week was over only six of the flowers could be used. And one of those was beginning to droop. It was doubtful whether it would be usable the next morning. No wonder the committee was concerned.

Sunday morning as I returned to the church it was evident that their concern was justified. There were only 5 lilies present for the service. The following Sunday, two weeks after Easter, they were all gone.

Then it was that I noticed again those faithful green leaf plants which had been serving so well all winter long. Not once during those weeks had they produced any gorgeous flowers; they were simply living, broadleafed house plants. But they had been there regularly, rain or shine; the bitterest cold could not keep them away. It was the Easter lilies with their spectacular display which had drooped and withered so quickly.

So too it was with many who had worshiped in the house of God on Easter. Like the lilies they had been present for the festive occasion, celebrating the resurrection of the living Lord. How quickly they had withered away. Within a week or two it was the faithful ones who took their accustomed places and joined in the service. Thank God for the living green plants in the house of God. Rain or shine, at all times they can be found adding their inspiration and contribution to the services of the day. They are a symbol of the living worshipers who can be counted on in the service of the risen Lord long after Easter has passed.

The Work

ERI

PART ONE

(Message given at the Western District Ministers' Conference at North Newton, Kansas, on March 24, 1955, and submitted for publication with some revisions at the request of the conference.)

After the point has been made so often, why is it that we still tend to neglect the doctrine of the Holy Spirit in our teaching and preaching?

Is it because this doctrine is more vague and obtuse than the ones concerning the Father and the Son? Then its very difficulty should challenge the pioneer within us to seek to spell out its truth in idioms which will be understood in our day. Is it because the doctrine is dangerous? This, indeed, gives us pause. We know that from Paul's day to our own this doctrine has been subject to twists and exaggerations which have all too often made it a stumbling block to the church at large. Even the book of 1 Corinthians speaks of the disturbances of early Christian worship by those who, emphasizing the Holy Spirit, "spoke in tongues" which were not understood. The encounter of our Anabaptist forebears with so-called Spiritualists puts us on our guard against an undue emphasis on the "inner light" which is glibly labeled the Holy Spirit. Our own experience with individual Christians who boldly claim to be "Spirit-led" and "Spirit-filled" but whose very approach to truth and life prompts us to ask "By what Spirit?" likewise makes us cautious.

It is true that this doctrine is often misunderstood and often abused, but may the greatest tragedy of all not be this, that we are like the church at Ephesus who when asked, "Have you received the Holy Spirit since you believed?" replied, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost"? (Acts 19:3)

Whatever may be the real reasons for our neglect of this doctrine, let us recognize that it is an essential one in the process of spelling out the biblical revelation of God. As in the unfolding of the self-disclosure of God, men of faith recognized God the Father, and God the Son, so they also recognized God the Holy Spirit. If we may exploit prepositions to help make distinctions, in the Father, God is seen as before us (creation) and above us (sovereign); in the Son, God as with us (incarnation) and for us (atonement); and in the Holy Spirit, God as in us (Christian life) and among us (the Church). With the poet, we may sing:

"Love, that caused us first to be (Father)
Love, that bled upon the tree (Son)
Love that draws us lovingly (Spirit)
We beseech thee, hear us."[1]

The Holy Spirit is thus a third dimension of this three-dimensional God, as C. S. Lewis describes Him. He is the third person of the Trinity, as classical theology has said. He is God's own Being present and active in men and in their relationships with each other.

I. Identifying the Holy Spirit

Reference has already been made to the problem of putting the right label on the right article. When we speak of the Holy Spirit or of the spiritual life, we are often confused by the wide variety of ways in which we use the word "spirit." A desk dictionary lists the following common uses:

(1) The breath of life, or the life principle
(2) The soul of man
(3) The Holy Spirit
(4) Any supernatural being, apparition, specter, ghost, or fairy
(5) An individual
(6) Temper, disposition, or mood
(7) Liveliness, energy, courage
(8) The real meaning, the essence
(9) Any strong distilled alcoholic liquor

Is it any wonder that people are confused when we try to speak of the Spirit or of being spiritual? At times it takes an expert in semantics to determine precisely what we do mean.

A glance at biblical terminology may be helpful. The Hebrew term ruach was "originally employed to describe loud, violent breathing and was frequently applied to the wind which swept down the mountain gorges and whirled across the desert wastes."[2] Its connotation of active, invisible power is obvious. The Greek word pneuma originally meant "the breath, but then also in poetry, the wind, and in the language of early physicists and physicians, a kind of invisible substance or gas which could account for various affections in organic bodies."[3] As these terms were adopted into biblical usage they came to stand "primarily for the dynamic activity of God, but also in a derived sense, for the part of man's nature which could become the field of operation of the one divine Spirit."[4]

From this it is clear that biblically the term "spirit" is used in two distinct senses, namely, (1) of the Holy Spirit who is Divine power and activity, and (2) of the human spirit which is the "Anknüpfungspunkt" of the Divine Spirit in the nature of man. The human spirit and the Divine Spirit are intimately related, but they are not to be identified. The erasure of this line of demarcation between the human and the Divine Spirit is the essential error of humanism, which tries to spell God with a capital MAN. Noble as the human spirit may become, lofty as its aspirations may be, the capacity to respond to the upward call must not be identified with the Holy Spirit himself. God is God, and man is man and while the two by grace may have fellowship, this relationship always implies separate entities rather than fusion.

Having recognized that the Holy Spirit is distinct from the human spirit, as well as from all that is material or physical, we need also to identify Him in terms of His relation to the Son and to the Father. This is even more intricate and too often becomes simply academic scholasticism. In the Nicene formula it is recognized that the Holy Spirit is God but there is the sense in which He is not the Father, nor the Son. Yet most of the attempts to distinguish Him in essence or in function from the Father and the Son tend to leave us confused.

Stressing the essential unity of the Godhead, is it not simplest to say that the Holy Spirit is the same God Whom we know as Father, Who manifested himself incarnate in the Son? Who is now indwelling believers individually and as His church, actively carrying on His own redemptive and perfecting purposes in men and in the world? May we not say that He is God-in-Christ in us and among us?

In this sense the Holy Spirit always confronts us as a person and never as a thing. We address Him as "Thou" and speak of Him rather than of it. Again, He is intimate. He is indeed "nearer than breathing and closer than hands and feet." A true doctrine of the Holy Spirit is a safeguard against the overemphasis on Divine transcendence which removes God from our intimate fellowship. Moreover, He is living and active. It is not coincidental that the New Testament book which gives us the story of Pentecost and the work of the Holy Spirit in the early church is called "The Acts of the Apostles," some having suggested that it could even more appropriately have been called "The Acts of the Holy Spirit."

This leads us now to consider in brief outline the specific areas of activity and the kind of work which God in Christ does through the Holy Spirit.

II. Activities of the Holy Spirit

Recognizing that our list may be far from complete, we note five activities of the Holy Spirit as indicated in the Scriptures and confirmed in Christian experience.

1. As Generator of Spiritual Life

To Nicodemus Jesus said, "Ye must be born again," and in explanation added that this must be "by water and the Spirit" (John 3:3, 5). Later, in the Bread of Life discourse, Jesus said, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life, (John 6:63). Again, at the Feast of Tabernacles, Jesus declared, "He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water," and John hastens to explain "But this spoke he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive," (John 7:38, 39). When the Apostle Paul later speaks of the new life in Christ, he calls it "life in the Spirit," declaring

> "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you," Rom. 8:9-11.

From these passages it is clear that the Holy Spirit is the giver of new life, the agent in regeneration, the One through Whom and in Whom the Christian life exists. Here is an echo of the graphic passage of Ezekiel 37, in which the prophet sees the valley of dry bones revivified through the Spirit of God and receives the promise of Israel, "and (I shall) put my Spirit in you, and ye shall live" (Ezek. 37:14). Thus, it is the Holy Spirit Who initiates, brings into being, and effectually establishes the spiritual life in man.

The implications of this are legion. For every evangelist, pastor, and teacher it is important that he recognizes that the initiation of the Divine Life in the Christian believer is never achieved merely by the application of the right techniques, the mixing of the right formulas, the pronouncement of the right words, or the procurement of the right equipment and the development of the right methods. Techniques, formulas, words, equipment, and methods may all be used by the Divine Spirit in the accomplishment of His work, but it is always He Who is the effectual agent in the work of God's Kingdom.

Beyond the Asking

What makes the sky deep blue,
The grass green, touched with dew?
What gives the sun its light,
Or the stars their sparkle bright?
Why are the mountains steep,
Or oceans wide and deep?
I know not, yet I know
That God has willed them so.

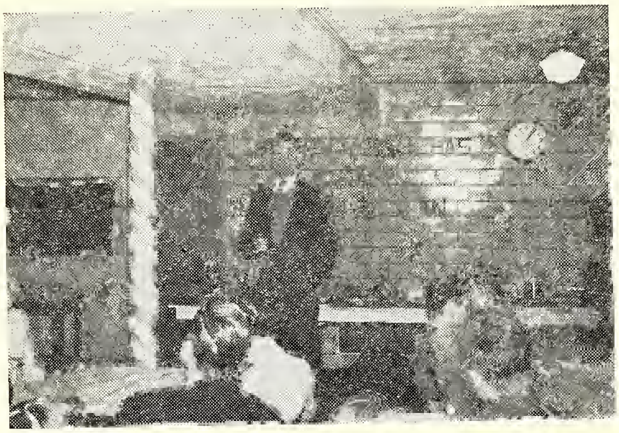
Mennonite Youth

Sponsored by the Young People's Union of the General Conference, Editor, Lois Duerksen, North Newton, Kansas

Our Greater Work



Jake speaking at a young people's workshop dinner in Dalton, Ohio.

"He who believes in me will also do the works that I do; and greater works than these will he do, because I go to the Father," John 14:12 RSV.

We as Mennonite youth have a work before us that even the disciples did not have. Truly, our privilege of sponsoring the Jakob Duerksens for three years of study is a great work for us.

But anyone who meets the Duerksen family realizes how little this "great work" requires of us. They are the ones who toil, study, and make the many necessary adjustments which come when one lives in a foreign country and moves among a different culture. As you talk with them you cannot help but feel uplifted by their quiet sincerity and be stirred by the glowing conscientiousness as they diligently strive to prepare themselves for more effective service. After returning to Paraguay in fall Jake will have to teach school because the ministry does not remunerate the minister in their church. Plus being a teacher and preacher, Brother Duerksen will also do youth work among the Mennonite young people there. They will be doing a "great work."

The Duerksens and the Bible, their guide to life and service.

Our three years of contact and helping them will be felt for many years as they labor among their people who are also our people through our great spiritual ties. Their labor will be a part of us and we will be a part of them.

This "greater work" is costing the Duerksens much in terms of a stable home and family life. Moving from one place to another with two small children; struggling with the language; meeting the many expected speaking engagements; and striving to live as frugally as possible in order to keep our support at a minimum. It is costing them much which cannot be measured in so many figures.

The Duerksen family in their tiny apartment at Bluffton.

What is it costing us? It costs us some pennies. Yes, I say pennies. Our total YPU budget of $7,400 for 1955, which includes the Duerksen support and Jake spends many hours in the library, a privilege he will not have after he returns to South America.

return passage to South America, sounds like an enormous amount. But if all the young people of our conference pitch in and do their share this great sum boils down to approximately fifty pennies each. Some of us pay more than that for a deluxe banana split. This is half the price of a baseball game. We need our little personal sidelines but how much spiritual benefit do we receive from them? First and most important, let us carry on the "greater work" which the Lord has given us. We don't have to be old to give for the work of the Lord. Give with a cheerful heart and be a vital part of the prophecy which came from the lips of our Savior—greater works than these shall you do.

Hitkarin

Dear readers of the Youth Section:

The following article is taken from the publication of "Leprosy Mission Digest." We believe our readers will be interested in this short story of Hitkarin, because this girl was one of the many patients in our leper home in Champa, India, which our senior brother, Dr. P. A. Penner founded and supervised for forty years. The present people in charge are Rev. Aron Jantzen from Paso Robles, California, superintendent; Dr. Arthur Thiessen in charge of medical work; and Brother Job Retansing manager of daily physical needs of the lepers.

"What a beautiful cloth," exclaimed a visitor to the mission exhibit as she fingered a bright-colored, embroidered linen tablecloth spread out on the exhibit table. "Where's it from?"

"India."

"Ah, yes, I should have known," the American woman sighed enviously as she imagined flashing needles guided skillfully and quickly by the slender, lithe fingers of some far-away Indian woman trained from childhood in the art of delicate and intricate needlework. "It's very easy for them."

But she was wrong. It wasn't easy for Hitkarin. The pretty young Indian maiden whose handiwork was learned the hard way.

It could be said that Hitkarin was, in a sense, a child of misfortune. Born in a remote jungle area of central India, she lost both father and mother by the time she was two. And her only legacy from them was the legacy of disease.

In another sense, however, Hitkarin was a child of good fortune because she was left in a place called Bethesda. To understand why this was a piece of good fortune, we must go back fifty years.

One sizzling hot afternoon in 1902 an American missionary, Dr. P. A. Penner, sat down to tiffin on the broad verandah of a Mennonite mission house in Champa. As he ate, two ragged beggars covered with sores came shuffling up to him with hands outstretched. Dr. Penner's trained eye could see they had the disease called leprosy, which was regarded by the superstitious as a curse of the gods.

To their surprise, this kindly man did not throw a piece of bread their way. He invited them to sit with him at the table and share his meal. For Dr. Penner was a man of God who believed in the brotherhood of man under God. And this belief led him to start what has now become the fifth largest hospital-community for Hansen's disease in all India.

From two small huts on the edge of the mission compound grew a beautiful village with charming, well-built cottages and brick houses, streets fringed with shrubbery and bright blossoms, a new modern schoolhouse with an enrollment of sixty children, and two most important buildings—the hospital and the church.

During the period of its growth, many hopeless victims of the disease which afflicts some two million of India's people came to Bethesda, as the healing community was named. Many found health for their bodies, and some found a new way of life in Christian love.

Among these were Narayan, a Brahman whose father was a judge, and Bijram, who came from the Beli caste (makers of all kinds of oils). Both were well-to-do and had a good education. Narayan entered Bethesda only as an alternative to suicide and stayed on to become an outstanding Christian leader of the community. Bijram, whose eyes were affected by his illness, also embraced Christianity and composed many lovely hymns to express his joy in his new faith.

To Bethesda came Hitkarin's mother in search of a cure for her ravaged body. But she came too late; and after her death little Hitkarin was kept on at the mission hospital.

Thus out of misfortune came the good fortune that was Hitkarin's. For though the disease, which was not brought under control until her teens, left her with crippled fingers, the little girl had advantages undreamed of in her mother's village. She had lots of fresh milk to drink, good nourishing food to eat and lovely, gay pinafores to wear. She went to school as soon as she was old enough, and after school hours and between treatments she romped and played with the other children. Hitkarin had lost her parents but she had gained a new family of brothers, sisters, and adults who gave her constant assurance of their concern and love.

This is not to say, however, that her life was all red roses with no prickly thorns. There were the twice-weekly, painful injections of chaulmoogra oil (this was in the early days before the sulfone drugs). Then there was the sometimes irksome discipline necessary to any large institution with inadequate staff and facilities. And finally, there was the tremendous struggle to become proficient in a trade. Out of some quirk of perverse human nature she chose the most difficult task for her crippled fingers—the delicate art of needlework. Despite the tremendous handicap (or perhaps because of it) the young girl learned to cut and sew, knit, crochet, embroider, and smock. She learned to use the sewing machine, and when she was not creating beautiful

Christian Economy Is in the Balance

The industrial revolution, rural mechanization, and now automation have come upon us so rapidly that it has been difficult to remain in stride economically and socially. While thirty-seven and forty-hour weeks have solved some of our problems, others have been created. Among them are low purchasing power, boredom, and lack of versatility in our individual abilities.

What shall we do with our time; and having more time to spend our earnings, what shall we spend; and having specialized in our period of training for what seemed a real challenge, what, then, must we do when a new machine replaces us?

A brief review of these problems should be worth our time. For some of these answers we turn to our parents; however, many of these answers must come from our youth.

1. What shall we do with our time? We must reexamine the services we insist upon from our churches, schools, and our communities. We must learn to give service rather than to expect service. We must learn to read and study in an effort to understand better the world about us. We must learn to think and to allow time to meditate to orientate ourselves properly with our God and our people. We must know in whom and in what we believe. We must learn to give to our church, our school, and our community. Our giving may have to be in terms of hours, days, weeks, months, or even in terms of years.

This type of decision must be made individually and must be made within us. It cannot be requested of us by statutes, resolutions, and ordinances. For this we must take time, and for this we must invest.

2. Purchasing power. It is easy to say we must learn to discern between our needs and what we want. However, we still have only as much purchasing power as we produce. There is only one way to obtain permanent purchasing power, namely, through energy spent productively. We must cease to expect our large cities to absorb the youth for whom there are no farms or for whom our smaller Mennonite communities offer only part-time work or none at all. We must learn to recognize needs as they exist and where they exist. "Where there is no vision, the people perish." The majority of our farm homes were originally small flats on wide prairies. From this let us gather strength and courage. We must devote our energy, time, and capital where it will continue to count.

Where we have built model farms in the past, we may have to build model places of business. Some may have to decrease in order that others may increase. Six or even eight hours a day will fail to accomplish this. There will be scars, sweat, anxiety, and suffering. Only the little things in our lives come to us easily and in them we find little happiness. Like a kernel of grain, we must be willing to give ourselves without reservation.

3. Lack of versatility. Specialization has been emphasized to the point where personalities with outstanding skill and ability find it difficult to adjust themselves when a new machine eliminates the need for their specific services. We must again think of education as a preparation for better living rather than job preparation. We must develop our possibilities and increase the capacities of the services we can offer. We must mold personalities and characters that will cope in a Christ-like manner with changing circumstances. We must learn to create with dignity where there is a need.

It is not enough to be an expert, we must be experts who are willing. We have plenty of time to prepare. We need not rush through school. We need not grab the first job that pays the most. The span of life has been lengthened. We can afford to build well. We can no longer afford to think of higher learning in terms of one-year, two-year, or four-year periods.

Young parents must envision the future for their children. Young people must anticipate in a measure the circumstances that are to be. This will not always lead to prosperity, but it will tend to make for a generation in whom our parents have confidence and in whom they will invest. We have the assurance that, "If we will draw nigh unto God, He will draw nigh unto us." We dare not be indifferent.

To solve some of our problems in the business world, we must discontinue measuring success by the size of our bank deposits and by our piles of material things. We must measure success in terms of our honest relationship to our God and to our neighbors.

patterns on dresses, aprons, tablecloths, napkins, towels, etc., Hitkarin was busy mending the hospital linens.

Not so long ago came the happiest day in Hitkarin's life. She took her final test and was found symptom-free. Even her once stiff fingers were much better and there was every reason to believe that with proper exercise and care they would continue to improve.

Now a beautiful young woman, Hitkarin attends the Mennonite Bible School, and hopes soon to repay Dr. Penner's charitable act long ago to the two starving beggars by returning to the hospital to help others as she was helped.

Our Schools

BETHEL COLLEGE

In a student election marked by a sudden outburst of slogans, streamers, and campaign handouts Paul Harms, Whitewater, was chosen president of the student council at Bethel College and Horton Flaming, Reedley, Calif., receiving second highest number of votes, becomes vice-president.

Harms, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Harms, is a graduate of Whitewater High School where he starred in athletics and was president of the senior class. At Bethel he has been an honor scholar, a two-letter man in baseball, a three-letter man in basketball and a member of this year's tennis squad. He has served as sports editor of the "Collegian," Math Club president and business manager of the "Graymaroon." This is Paul's third year as a member of the Student Council, governing body of the students at Bethel.

Horton Flaming, who by virtue of polling second highest votes, becomes vice-president, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Flaming of Reedley, Calif. He attended Fresno Junior College 1952-54 where he served as president of the student body, ranked second in the nation's speech contest and was chosen to the California Junior College Men's State. At Bethel he has distinguished himself in oratory, winning state honors in the peace oratorical contest. He also starred in the all-school play, "Papa Was a Preacher."

New student council representatives are Lucille Peters, Henderson, Neb., from the junior class; DeLila Jane Epp, Henderson, Neb., and Freddie Unruh, Newton, from the sophomore class; and Kay Ewert, Abilene, and Tony Unruh, Hillsboro, from the freshman class.

Pres. D. C. Wedel spent most of the last week in April in Kansas City working with the Kansas Foundation for Private Colleges and Universities. At the business session of the Foundation held Tuesday, April 26, Wedel was elected president of the foundation for the coming year. In the course of the week some 200 contacts were made in Kansas City by members of the Foundation. Similar campaigns are being planned for Topeka and Wichita in the fall. The member schools are encouraged by the response to this initial contact with business and industrial representatives.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

New black top walks now replace many former cinder paths on the Bluffton campus as a result of the $1,100 raised through the annual Booster Banquet held on March 28. This project was begun with last year's proceeds and many additional walks throughout the campus have been black-topped this year.

The new and improved Bluffton College catalog came off the press on April 28. This attractive 96 page bulletin is completely revised and rewritten.

Dr. I. W. Bauman, professor of sociology, has been granted an all expense paid Fellowship for a six weeks Economics in Action Program at Case Institute of Technology from June 19 to July 29. Each year fifty professors of social science, economics, sociology, etc., are chosen from approximately 200 applicants for this program of lectures, visits to industrial plants, and discussions with industrialists, management, and labor leaders.

Mardi Gras was the theme of the annual spring banquet held on Saturday, April 30, in Founders Hall. This banquet, sponsored by the Recreation Club and Joint House Councils, was served amid the festive surroundings of balloons, masks, and streamers, followed by musical numbers and a film.

Diane Lora of Lima, Ohio, and Connie Diller of Wooster, Ohio, represented the Bluffton College Student Christian Association at the Ohio area YMCA-YWCA Spring Conference held at Magnetic Springs, Ohio, on April 29 to May 1. The conference program was planned to aid the individual student in understanding the relationship of the "life of the mind and the life of the spirit."

MCC news & notes

RAY BAIR ASSUMES 1-W SERVICES DIRECTORSHIP

Ray Bair of Louisville, Ohio, whose field of church service has been with Mennonite youth, has assumed the directorship of the MCC services program to Mennonite and Brethren in Christ 1-W men. He began work May 1, succeeding Albert M. Gaeddert.

The position, which Brother Bair is taking up for a two-year period, was created at the suggestion of Mennonite and Brethren in Christ representatives that the churches' services to their 1-W's be strengthened and co-ordinated. His general responsibilities are to work with constituent groups to see that all 1-W's are adequately served.

To effect the new decentralized approach in 1-W services, begun during Brother Gaeddert's term of service, will require considerable time and effort. Altogether 114 local sponsors must still be found to assume responsibility for arranging worship, service, and recreational activities for 1-W groups throughout the United States. Other challenging tasks include pre-service orientation and the preparation of literature to administer the 1-W services program.

Brother Bair brings to this position his experience as assistant pastor of the Beech Mennonite Church, Louisville, since October, 1950, and secretary of youth activities in the Ohio Mennonite Conference. A graduate of Goshen College, he has been president of the Mennonite Youth Fellowship organization of the (Old) Mennonite Church.

With Brother Bair taking over the leadership of the 1-W services program, Brother Gaeddert has returned to the pastorship of the Hoffnungsau Mennonite Church near Inman, Kan. Brother Gaeddert has been on leave from his church during the past nine months for this 1-W assignment.

SUMMER SERVICE LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE HELD

A leadership orientation conference in preparation for the coming summer service program was held at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago May 6 and 7. Participants included leaders of MCC summer units, Akron MCC staff personnel, representatives from the General Conference Mennonite and (Old) Mennonite Voluntary Service programs and Mennonite college faculty members. Approximately 85 young people have applied for summer service in projects in the United States. There has also been a good expression of interest in Canadian projects. Canadian volunteers are attending workshops in preparation for their participation in summer service.

INCREASING WITNESSING OPPORTUNITIES AT GULFPORT

Workers at Camp Landon, Gulfport, Miss., are finding increasing opportunities to make a Christian impact upon the lives of individuals in the community. These opportunities to lead persons to a commitment to Christ and provide instruction in Christian living are an outgrowth of the past community welfare work by Civilian Public Service and Voluntary Service personnel.

Plans are to start a special Bible class to meet one evening a week. This additional class is intended to present the claims of Christ more directly to children with whom the Camp already works.

A recent one-day retreat at the Camp was attended by 13 young people from the community. Topics discussed at their request included "Opportunities for Young People to Participate in the Church Program" and "A Personal Devotional Life."

Plans are being made for another retreat this summer which is scheduled for May 30 to June 3. Summer Bible schools are also being arranged with a workshop to be held before the schools get under way.

Another development is the expansion of the Christian community center in North Gulfport which has had a wholesome effect in the community since its opening in October, 1953. Construction of a small house and the purchase of three lots will make four additional rooms available for Bible school, the craft and recreational program as well as space for additional playground equipment.

Doreen Harms, a member of the Grace Hill General Conference Mennonite Church, Whitewater, Kan., has joined the MCC headquarters staff at Akron, Pa. She is assisting William T. Snyder in his work as director of the Mennonite Aid Section and assistant executive-secretary. Miss Harms brings to this position her past experience in MCC work. From June, 1948, to November, 1951, she worked at Akron headquarters and from January, 1952, to March, 1955, she served at the Gronau, Bremen, and Frankfurt centers in Germany.

by the Mennonite Central Committee. Selective Service considers their work of aiding the natives of Belgian Congo in the areas of health, medicine, and agriculture as being in the "national health, safety, and interest." During their 1-W service, their work must be limited to construction- and rehabilitation-type activity and not include evangelistic work.

The Congo Inland Mission is not the first to use 1-W men in its program. The Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities and the Brethren in Christ Mission Board have 1-W men performing similar tasks on their fields in Southern Rhodesia and Tanganyika.

He related many vivid experiences and showed slides of his work in Central and South America. Sunday evening, April 3, a unique pre-Easter service was conducted by Vernon Duerksen, son of our pastor. Members of the congregation were richly blessed as they verbally participated in commemorating Holy Week events through Scripture and song. On Good Friday morning, our pastor stressed the importance of death as a prerequisite to resurrection. Opportunity was given for personal testimonies, many voicing their convictions as to the significance of Christ's death and resurrection in their lives. Easter Sunday brought many blessings. In the morning visitors and friends participated in hymns and devotion. The choir sang a special Easter cantata and the pastor brought a message from the resurrection chapter (1 Cor. 15). In the afternoon a German service was given primarily for the German immigrants of the community. The C. E. presented a stimulating program in the evening.—Corr.

—Eigenheim Church, Rosthern, Sask.: We are having a very wet spring. There have been three major spring run-offs so far, damaging roads and soaking fields so that it will be impossible to begin seeding operations for some time. P. K. Regier from Newton, was here this winter to acquaint us with the work of the General Conference. J. C. Schmidt, Rosthern, and Werner Zacharian, Swift Current, gave a series of Bible lectures in the last week of January. Gerald Stucky from Colombia gave us an insight of the mission work there, and Dr. Quiring, who has been visiting the Mennonites in Paraguay, acquainted us with the mission work among the Indians. Corny Martens, the secretary of the Saskatchewan Mennonite Youth Organization showed the film "The Call of the Cheyenne." Our church was officially received into the conference at the Sunday school and C. E. Conference at Paso Robles, April 22-24. A number of our group attended. Our church has engaged an architect to draw plans for our church building. The Immanuel Bible Academy choir of Reedley presented a program in our church on April 24. Midweek Bible classes for the children were terminated the last week of April with a program presented by each class. Adult services continue, however.—Mrs. Ray Goossen, Corr.

Krahn, and W. F. Unruh, who presented the Conference work to us. Our pastor, C. J. Dyck, exchanged pulpits with Irvin E. Richert of the Buhler Church. Brother Richert has many relatives in our church and therefore is well known here. Mr. and Mrs. John Ewert and family of Meade, Kan., former music teacher at Berean Academy were welcome guests in church some time in February. Louis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ted Regier, was hospitalized at the Kansas City Medical Center for some time following brain surgery; he has again resumed school work at Newton High. Also Mrs. John R. Klingenberg who had to submit to a major operation. The Lord has heard our prayers. She is recovering and is slowly taking up her household duties. John G. Andres won another free trip to New York from the company he represents. On return he reports an interesting trip. Clarence Wedel, a returned PAX worker gave a report of his experiences in Europe, in pictures and talk. Evelyn and Carolyn Stucky, members of our church were recipients in the capping service held for the student nurses of the Halstead Hospital. The Mission Friends, Home Builders, and Willing Workers Societies of our church are all very busy and report a good attendance. John H. Regier went to Uruguay for an indefinite period to help with the new settlement there. On March 28 — April 1, Peter Dyck of Moundridge held a week of meetings, which were much appreciated. Our men's octet motored to Wichita, April 14, to sing for B. P. Regier who was a patient at the St. Francis Hospital. The occasion was Mr. Regier's 76th birthday. He has to suffer so much. May the Lord give him strength and courage during this critical time.—H. R. Regier, Corr.

MCC news & notes

INDO-CHINA PERSONNEL REQUEST PRAYER FOR CONTIUNED SAFETY

MCC personnel in Indo-China are grateful to God for the protection experienced up to this point in the rebellion and violence, but request prayer for their continued safety. Delbert Wiens of Reedley, Calif., who has his headquarters in Saigon, reported he was looking into the possibility of providing assistance to persons in distress as a result of the recent violence. MCC workers in Dalat, while not experiencing danger similar to that in Saigon, write that the situation has been becoming tense there. Dalat is a city between 150 and 200 miles northeast of Saigon, from where relief distributions have been carried out.

ERNEST W. LEHMANS RETURN TO JORDAN

Brother and Sister Ernest W. Lehman are returning to Jordan for a second term of service among Arab refugees. They were scheduled to sail from Hoboken, N. J., on May 14, and arrive in Beirut about two weeks later. In Jordan they will join the 12 relief and 7 PAX personnel seeking to bring relief, comfort and hope in a Christian spirit to persons who are in their seventh year as refugees. The continuing refugee situation of these people contributes to the intensity of their plight. The Lehmans are returning to take up the leadership of MCC work in the Middle East, having served there previously from 1952 to 1954. During the interim Brother Lehman worked in the Voluntary Service office in Akron.

REPORTS DISTRIBUTION IN SOUTHEAST JORDAN

Walter N. Rutt of Gulfport, Miss., reports that during a recent 18-day period MCC workers assisted in distributing clothing to more than 6,000 families in southeast Jordan suffering as a result of the recent drouth. Many of them were Bedouins. These recipients are poverty-stricken residents of the area whose livelihood has been made more difficult by an influx of refugees. Another distribution in which MCC personnel will assist is with the United Nations Relief and Works Administration to refugees in the area of Amman east of the Jordan River. There are about 16,000 families in the area and the distribution is expected to require about a month's time.

PLAN SUMMER ACTIVITIES IN NORTH GERMANY

Leonard Gross of Doylestown, Pa., in a recent report of work among Mennonite youth of north Germany, requests prayer for the summer activities. Six children's camps are being organized—each to provide two weeks of Bible instruction. A second part of the summer work is the young people's institute program—four of which will be held in July and August. This program is an effort to lead young people to a commitment to Christ and help them find their place in the work of the Church. Brother Gross, who is continuing this work from Robert Detweiler of Souderton, Pa., writes that the canned food and money distributed by American churches, play a very significant role in this work jointly sponsored by MCC and the Mennonite youth commission in north Germany.

PAX CHORUS TO SING IN BERLIN

Another opportunity to be of service and to fellowship with the German people will come to the PAX chorus when it makes a trip to Berlin. Plans are for this singing group of Mennonite and Brethren in Christ 1-W's serving in Germany PAX units to make the trip the Pentecost week end of May 28 to 30.

THE COMING OF THE SPIRIT

Pentecost, the anniversary of the coming of the Holy Spirit, was formerly observed as one of the great days of the Christian year. Gradually it has been neglected until today in many sections it is scarcely known, much less observed. May it be that this condition exists because there has also been a decline in the interest of the subject of the Holy Spirit? For it is a lamentable fact that the place and work of the Holy Spirit is but feebly emphasized in many churches. All readers would do well to study carefully the two-part article in The Mennonite on "The Work of the Holy Spirit," by Erland Waltner. It will give us a better understanding of this frequently misunderstood or little known Person of the Trinity.

We are having various study conferences on certain phases of Christian belief and practice. They are proving very fruitful. Why not have a study conference on the Person and work of the Holy Spirit? Such a study carefully planned and properly directed should be of great value to illuminate this great subject.

RIDING HIGH

The newspapers are sounding an optimistic note. They assure us that the threat of war is fading out, recession is out of the picture, and world troubles seem more remote. It is claimed that in this country people have never had it so good, and that they are expecting things to go still better.

There is an undue enthusiasm for the "new." New houses are quickly bought up while older houses, even though in many cases as substantial or more so than the new, are being passed by. New cars are being sold in record-breaking numbers. The brilliant colors are getting ever more flashy. Used cars are harder to dispose of as people rush for the latest models in two and three-toned colored chariots.

A "new era" seems to be here, with nothing very disturbing in sight. We are riding high; gadgets of all kinds are much sought after; money flows freely. We seem to be on the crest of "good times."

Yet underneath all the glitter, many cannot hide an uneasy feeling that all is not as it should be in the world. We are reminded of the poverty and misery and destitution in many places and among many people of the world. Is there not some obligation on our part?

Our good times are but a temporary measure of material things. This is not a true index of real life. New cars and new homes and new appliances will not insure peace and goodwill around the world. Nor will it guarantee personal peace of soul. The fact that money seems plentiful is no pledge that we will make the best use of it.

In this "new era" we should insist that the permanent must be emphasized above the temporal. We cannot go forever piling up national debts and installment buying. But we can give serious thought to ways in which we can make the spiritual forces more real and more desired. We can give a new interest to religion and the spiritual qualities so often neglected in days of prosperity.

COMMENCING TIME

All over the land, this is the time for school commencements, signifying the close of another school year, and the graduation of certain classes. Very appropriately it is not called closing time but "commencing time." Presumably those graduating are now prepared to commence a new period of their lives. Here is the time of new beginnings, a fresh start, and a launching out into the little known future.

A verse from Ezekiel (27:26) might be an appropriate text for this occasion; "Thy rowers have brought thee into great waters." The teachers and instructors have worked with the graduates and taken them from the shallow shores out into the deeps, and now expect them to do their own rowing and steer for proper harbors. The ports these young people will seek depends largely on how the rowers have directed and inspired them.

The Mennonite Biblical Seminary is just closing its tenth year with special emphasis upon this fact during the commencement season. More will be said of this next week when something of a review will be given of these first ten years. Let us thank God for the fine graduates that are being sent forth from our schools, and for the "rowers" who have toiled in bringing them out into deep waters.

A DAY OF REMEMBRANCE

Our country has set aside Memorial Day as a time for special remembrance to those who have lost their lives in the various wars in which our country has engaged. There are decorations and band music and oratory to set the day apart as a time to honor such.

But peace has its heroes no less than war. This is a good time for Christians to recall the faith of our fathers who often were persecuted, even to the death, because of their belief in Christ. Theirs was a faith so firm and sure that no threat of death could cause them to break from it. They were loyal and true to their spiritual leader, Jesus Christ.

We should remember, too, the many living faithful witnesses around the world. In some places Christians are having a difficult time, and need our special prayers. There is still opposition and persecution in many places. Memorial Day can be made a special time for remembering such.

We frequently see some special room or window dedicated "in memory of" someone dear. But the best way to memorialize our good friends is to be a living memorial; living the truth of the gospel and the teachings of God for which others so bravely stood. They have not lived in vain if we are stimulated to more faithful witnessing because of their lives.

To Help Each Other in Evangelism

ELMER EDIGER*

George Macleod of Scotland in a recent Chicago meeting, said that the priesthood of all believers implies that we all have the responsibilities of priests. In figurative language he explained that the reformers did not drive the priests out of the chancel area and then say "Now we are all equal before God. Each has free access to God." Rather he explained it was more like asking all the people to come into the chancel area!

All of us are commissioned of Christ as priests. We are responsible spiritually for others. Peter wrote, "But ye are an elect race, royal priesthood . . . that ye may show forth the excellencies of him who called you out of darkness into his marvelous light . . ." (1 Pet. 2:9 ASV).

Evangelism as well as neighborliness in the local congregation is to be the concern and work of all of us, not just a few. We have heard this before, now how can we help each other toward this goal? We need sermons to give us clarity and inspiration for evangelism. But we also need a process "to get us going."

There is a process of learning known as the "workshop" approach. Concerned people are brought together to work on a given problem. After a brief introduction to the workshop gathering, the group divides into small groups, preferably of about ten people to list the problems, the difficulties, the concerns. Then all the groups pool their problems, consolidate them into areas to think through the problems and concerns. These smaller groups later report to the total group their conclusions and recommendations for further discussion.

Although such workshops should really cover several days "to get below the surface," there are aspects of this workshop approach which can be used in a one-day evangelism conference. Such a "working" approach is particularly valuable in that the concerns for the discussions come from the learners, everyone has a chance to participate and the answers come from the group of learners. The answer is something they have grown into when the answer is "handed down." Individuals still have the job of "getting started." In a workshop the individuals are to go through a process which makes them a part of their answer.

One-day conferences on evangelism with a partial "workshop" approach have already been held in various areas of our conference. The evangelism committee of the conference is ready to help set up others where there is sufficient interest. This might cover two, three or more congregations, preferably with a total group of not more than fifty people. The larger the group and the shorter the time the less of a workshop and the more of a conference one will have. Things that could be included in such a one-day conference of three sessions, morning, afternoon, and evening are suggested below.

1. Most of the first half day should be devoted to problem defining. This may sound strange to some of us for we feel "we know what the people need." Why not just tell them? But, a great deal has been accomplished if we as Sunday school teachers and other representatives through a process of honest sharing will admit that we need help in evangelism. Meeting in small groups will more readily encourage such honesty and help individuals to define the help they need. Thus individuals are more ready for the answers.

The Newton workshop on evangelism of a year ago was probably a little weak in not dividing the crowd into small enough groups and in not allowing sufficient time for problem defining. One would hope however that the statement of the Newton findings committee (of which the writer was a part) was a true reflection of the group discussion rather than just an honest inference. At this meeting we have said in effect that we are not sufficiently evangelistic. We admit the need for help; we feel the need for further honest searching and sharing, and we pray for a more vital infilling of the Holy Spirit.

2. During the last part of the morning session the whole group might come together for an hour. Recorders of each group should report the problems and the concerns of each group. The chairman with the use of a blackboard can then systematically group these problems and concerns for coverage by the afternoon interest groups.

3. A full-fledged workshop would then go into problem-solving groups for the afternoon. For a one-day conference it may be best however to make a few presentations which are suggested solutions to our needs. One can anticipate that the problems and concerns to evangelism will deal with two aspects—the message and the method. A presentation on method might well elaborate on several basic approaches in evangelism:

   a. Fellowship and visitation evangelism: A check-up on potential of each fellowship group in the church; a census or list of individuals to be contacted; and then fellowship visit assignments to members.

   b. Personal evangelism: As servants and friends winning their confidence; discovering individual needs; honest witness of what Christ means personally; depending on what the Holy Spirit does; decision-making.

4. The afternoon discussion groups can then be focused on problem and interest areas including these "suggested solutions." Individual recorders should be assigned in each group to take notes. If possible chairman and recorders should meet briefly over the noon hour to decide what they want to record.

Arapaho - Cheyenne 75th Anniversary Celebration

JOHN THIESSEN*

Most of you are aware of the 75th Anniversary of our General Conference mission work among the Arapaho and Cheyenne Indians in Oklahoma. The actual celebrations lasted two weeks with two days of celebration at each station. Our stations or congregations are: Canton, Cantonment, Clinton, Hammon, Fonda, Thomas, Longdale, Seiling; and our partnership in the work at Concho Indian school. Guests who enriched the occasion were Mrs. R. Petter who could from personal experience review mission history from the year 1896, when she came to Oklahoma as a missionary, until the present. Since 1916 she has lived in Montana where she and Dr. Petter worked among the Cheyennes for many years. Another visitor was Mrs. J. B. Ediger who, with her husband, worked for forty years in Oklahoma among the Cheyennes. Our traveling evangelist, Rev. J. J. Esau, was also present and gave evangelistic messages at the various places of celebration.

On Thursday, April 21, I went with our Board chairman, Rev. P. A. Wedel to Canton, Oklahoma, for the last part of the jubilee celebration. We spent three great days with our missionaries and Indian brothers and sisters and their children. On Friday there was a morning meeting in our Arapaho church in Canton. In the afternoon we made a grand tour of the northwestern area of our Oklahoma field, visiting Seiling, Fonda, Cantonment, and Longdale stations. In every station and at the Cantonment cemetery short services were held. In the evening we again gathered in the Canton church where our Conference president, Brother Olin Krehbiel, was the main speaker.

Saturday was the big day for the tour to our southwestern mission stations including Hammon, Clinton, Thomas, historic Darlington, and Concho where so many of our Indian children are in boarding school. At all these places brief commemorative services were conducted. By evening we were back in Canton, and our speedometers showed that 260 miles had been traveled in these visits. Mission stations and our Indian people in Oklahoma are scattered. A severe hindrance on this Saturday trip was the awful dust storm. Headlights had to be on at high noon. It was most uncomfortable. Yet the joys of reviewing the 75 years of mission work, and a vision of the future, outweighed all discomforts in the dust storm. Seven cars made the Saturday tour. Several Indian people accompanied us.

Sunday, the 24th, was the biggest day—the last, the best. Before the announced time on Sunday morning, the church yard was filling up with cars. It is interesting how our Indian Christians come in cars, and big cars. The open wagon drawn by horses is in the past, even among the Indian tribes.

The morning program was led by Brother Walter Fire. Part of it consisted of testimonies by our Indian brethren. It was very impressive how they thanked God for the good news in Christ Jesus. They also expressed gratitude to our General Conference for consistently staying with them through 75 years. Rev. Olin Krehbiel, our Conference president, then gave the main jubilee message, based on Rom. 12:1.

The noon meal was a social affair. Our Board of Missions had granted funds to buy a beef; but a lot more food was contributed by Christians and missionaries. It was delightful to see how our Indian Christian sisters took hold of the catering, and some 200 people were fed in a short time and with remarkable efficiency.

The afternoon program was in charge of Brother Herbert Dalke, and again there was participation by our Indian Christians in song and testimony. Brother P. A. Wedel, our Board of Missions chairman, gave the afternoon message based on Amos 4:12, "Prepare to meet thy God." Brother John Esau, who had been the jubilee guest speaker for two weeks, made the close with the fine challenge of consecration.

Since the days were long it was decided that all guests be invited to partake of a lunch and then the evening meeting was to start as soon as all had eaten. At 5 p.m. the evening meeting began and at 6:30 p.m. all was finished. Rev. Arthur Friesen was in charge of the evening meeting. Again there were testimonies, and I spoke on Jesus' statement to His disciples in Luke 22:28 "Ye have continued—," reviewing briefly the past 75 years, and encouraging our Arapaho and Cheyenne Christians and their children to continue. Brother Alfred Wiebe then made a very fitting close using Hebrews 12:1 which was printed on the bulletin for the day. With this the great 75th anniversary jubilee of our General Conference mission work came to an end; but the challenge was to continue in our Lord's work with redoubled consecration and energy.

*Ex. Sec., Board of Missions

It could be all the good comments or only the main trends of the discussions.

5. The evening session should be devoted largely to a summary and evaluation. This can come directly from the group as "Things that have been impressed upon me today." The committee of recorders and discussion chairman may have some recommendations on what "next steps" ought to be taken.

6. Throughout such a workshop or conference one should respect the thinking of each individual, seek to learn from one another, be sensitive to each other's needs underneath, be strengthened by sharing and by sensing the Holy Spirit working in the group. Such a loving fellowship experience in Christ can itself give us more assurance of that which we have in Christ Jesus.

Why not consider a workshop in evangelism for your area? If you are concerned contact your pastor.

Highlights of Eastern District Conference

CLAUDE F. BOYER*

The 157th Session of the E.D.C. convened April 28 to May 1 at Upper Milford Mennonite Church, Zionsville, Pa.

The Upper Milford Mennonite Church, Zionsville, provided an ideal setting for the 157th session of the Eastern District Conference. Here, on an elevated plane, beneath the comforting sweep of the maples, Mennonite forefathers gathered for similar conferences and for worship. Here, also, the Eastern District Conference convened this spring. The spot, itself, is most conducive to worship and inspiration.

The 157th session was most inspirational and well attended. The sessions were informative and the reports and various matters of business were conducted in a manner fitting the Church of Jesus Christ. The guidance and blessing of God, our Heavenly Father, were much in evidence throughout the conference.

There are highlights of the conference that must be accentuated.

The Spiritual Impetus!

Perhaps this, more than any other one thing, made for the inspiration of the conference. It began with the fine conference sermon, by the president, Arthur S. Rosenberger. It continued most wonderfully through the messages of Paul M. Miller, who brought five messages from the Book of Colossians. The impact of these messages upon our conference was quite evident. The exaltation of Jesus Christ, His redemptive work, His power in our social, personal, and spiritual life, without a doubt created, within the minds of all, a sense of dependency upon God and a desire to glorify and serve His Son. These messages set the tone of the conference. They created a harmony that was evidenced in all of the activities. They gave a spiritual impetus to the conference.

The Work of Conference—Growth!

The usual reports were given at conference. These were, however, in one aspect quite unusual. That is, by and large, they presented the need to increase—to spread out. There is evidence of growth in many areas. The conference accepted into it's membership the Belva Bible Church, Belva, North Carolina. The Home Mission and Church Extension Committee reported the granting of a contract to build the church in northeast Philadelphia. They also reported the securing of a church worker for this area, and the desire to start work among the colored folk of Philadelphia. The Home for Aged reported a great need to increase facilities there. They were granted permission to begin an extensive building program there. The Men-O-Lan Board (Retreat Grounds) reported expansion and improvement of facilities there. The conference budget was increased to allow more financial support for improvement and expansion of our Home Mission churches. A number of member churches reported increases in membership and the developing of overcrowded conditions. One new church is being built, and several are planning increases to present facilities. Our Conference school, Bluffton College, reported a need for more dormitory space, to house the oncoming influx of students. Our Seminary presented a thought-provoking report, that could well be indicative of growth. These, as well as several other reports, indicated that the Conference and it's work are growing.

The Challenge of Mission Work!

The Eastern District Conference has always been mission minded. But the conference was once again reminded of her responsibility and opportunity in this great work. Rev. and Mrs. Andrew Shelly, just returned from a five months world tour of mission stations and outposts, injected within the conference a sense of need and urgency concerning our mission work. Their picturesque observations, keen analysis, and glowing enthusiasm were instrumental in this. Rev. Shelly's key phrase, "The Golden Age for Mission Work Is NOW," should not go unapplied. Harry Detweiler, conference treasurer, and a fellow traveler of the Shellys', helped immeasurably, in presenting to us, the world from which we are removed. His slides of their travels were beautiful. Again we were led to respond to the great challenging responsibility of presenting Jesus Christ to the nations.

The General Conference Visitors!

Our conference was much enriched and helped by the presence of Elmer Ediger, Executive Secretary of the Board of Christian Service, Willard Claassen, Executive Secretary of the Board of Publication and Education, Albert Gaeddert, who is working on the 1-W program, and Miss Marie Duerksen, a General Conference missionary, on furlough from India.

Mr. Ediger, presented the opportunities for Christian Service, in the areas of Voluntary Service, and especially in the general areas of spreading of Christian love in our daily living. Rev. Claassen presented the work of the Board of Education and Publication, and challenged the young people, in a Sunday afternoon message, to serve Christ through their churches. Rev. Gaeddert brought us the wonderful work of the boys in 1-W. Miss Duerksen has been a constant inspiration in her visits to various Eastern District churches and in her attendance at conference.

As the various delegates and friends of conference left the "elevation of Upper Milford" to return to the valleys and plains of service, they could not help but feel a spirit of awe and reverence. There was a prominent feeling of "there remaineth yet much land to be possessed." There was a sense of work to be done. But above all, they left with a song in their hearts. A song which said—"The Work Is Thine, O Christ Our Lord."

Not By Bread Alone

Walter and Martha Dyck

Bread and life are inseparable. Life is impossible without bread. But life is more than assimilated bread. "Man shall not (cannot) live by bread alone." The nearer a person lives to Christ the better he knows the relationship between bread and life—temporal and eternal.

We have now labored about five months among our Mennonite brethren in South America to whom the natural bread continues to be a very real thing. Remembering years when they were either without it or when it was rationed to them, leaves an indelible impression.

Probably some of you have gathered from our reports that an undue emphasis has been placed upon the "bread that perishes." It is difficult to remain objective when, day after day, one hears stories that contain words like "verschleppt," "verhungert," and "vertrieben."

The Psalmist once said, "I have been young, and now am old; and yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread," Psalm 37:25. Never, during the past ten to twenty-five years have trusting brethren in the faith been forsaken, but they have often stood in bread and soup lines. Today, harvest festivals can mean a bit more to those who once had nothing but now again have found a new home, freedom, and bread. The temptation is very real to work harder than ever to regain a debt-free economic stability.

How can all of us together, Mennonites in both North and South America, come to a saner evaluation of bread and life? Why is it easier to say, "If any would not work, neither should he eat" and "that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread" (2 Thess. 3:10, 12) than to pray and live with an appreciation of the meaning of "Give us this day our daily bread,"? Isn't it because it is easier to "live to eat" than it is to "eat to live"?

After a fast of forty days, Jesus once said, "Man shall not live by bread alone." Earlier in Israel's history it took forty years to raise a new generation that could begin to see that man only lives by taking daily every word "that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Jesus blessed and divided the natural bread to thousands of His followers. He would have us do the same, feeding, preaching, teaching, and healing the multitudes. Every effort toward the assistance of the needy must be twofold, a sharing of the natural and the supernatural "bread of life." Having invited our brethren to sit at our dinner table, we now come with them to the Lord's table, to partake of the spiritual blessings of His broken body and His shed blood. This is a ministry of reconciliation, and we are most happy in it.

We are here in South America, as your representatives, in a most varied ministry. Repeatedly we have reminded our ministers and congregations here that they should not look "east or west, south or north" for their directives. We are asking them to keep looking to Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith.

Flashes of Thought

Conformed

Walter Gering

I thought the crowd would go wild! In fact, I could hardly contain myself, it was so funny. We had gone to the city park in Copenhagen to enjoy the afternoon after a busy, tiring week. The holiday crowd was leisurely strolling along the pathways stopping here and there to enjoy the beauty of the flowers or the chatter of the birds. Others were fascinated by the animals in the cages.

One spot always attracted the crowd. Near the center of the park was the monkey pit. The antics of these creatures never failed to draw the attention of young and old. The iron fence around the pit serving as a guard seldom failed to be thronged with onlookers. Front seats were usually at a premium.

On this particular day it was evident that something of unusual interest was happening. The shrieks of laughter could be heard from a distance. I could not help myself; almost instinctively my steps turned toward the pit. Surely no group would be so overcome with hilarious laughter without cause. One brief moment was enough to raise my own voice in laughter.

You see, one of the ladies unfortunately had lost her hat. A gust of wind had hurled it headlong into the monkey pit. Hardly had it touched the bottom before it was seized by one of the monkeys. The rest can be imagined. With one grand sweep of the arm it was solemnly slammed upon the head in perfect imitation of its former owner. From one side to another in cocky style it shifted, forward and backward. Leaping from limb to limb of the tree in the pit the monkey dashed about wildly pursued by the rest. A mad scramble followed as the hat passed from head to head. When I left the hat had been torn to shreds in the tussle.

Then it was that the old familiar phrase "Don't be a monkey" took on new meaning. The sight of those monkeys imitating their human spectators was utterly ridiculous.

Or was it? Maybe it was not so ridiculous after all. How often we too have tried to conform to the fashion and mode of the crowd milling about us. The style of our clothes, the songs we sing, the extravagances of our life, the countless other things we do—how much we are consciously and unconsciously conformed to the common pattern of the crowd. In such moments we hear again the appeal of the Scriptures: "Be ye not conformed to this world but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable and perfect will of God."

The Work

ER

PART II

(Concluded from last week)

2. As Witness to Spiritual Truth

Theo Preiss in a penetrating exposition on the work of the Spirit says, "The Spirit is before all things a witness. As Jesus testifies of the Father, the Spirit testifies of Jesus and of the Father."[5]

In giving the promise of the Spirit Jesus said, "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: . . . He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you," John 16:13-14. The sermons of the apostles reported in Acts are usually considered a fulfillment of this aspect of the promise in that they reflect the testimony of the Spirit to the redemptive Saviorhood and Lordship of Jesus Christ. Had not Jesus said, "You will be dragged before governors and kings for my sake, to bear testimony before them and the Gentiles. When they deliver you up, do not be anxious how you are to speak or what you are to say; for what you are to say will be given you in that hour; for it is not you who speak, but the Spirit of your Father speaking through you," Matt. 10:18ff.

The witnessing ministry of the Spirit, however, is not confined to apostolic preaching and apostolic testimonies, but includes also the written testimony which has become our New Testament. The early church soon recognized a body of Scriptures which were God-breathed (2 Tim. 3:16) and which men wrote not of their own will but as they were moved by the Holy Spirit (2 Peter 1:21). Inspired Scripture, according to the early church, is writing in which the Holy Spirit thus spoke bearing witness to God as revealed in Jesus Christ.

A third aspect of the witnessing ministry of the Spirit is indicated in Romans 8:16, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." In Ephesians 1:14 Paul calls the Spirit "the earnest of our inheritance" and John declares that "we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us," 1 John 3:24.

This places the Holy Spirit squarely into the middle of that experience in which we come to recognize the truth which is in Jesus Christ as recorded for us in the Scriptures. The same Spirit whose witness was manifest in apostolic preaching and writing is also at work in us witnessing to us of the truth of Christ and assuring us that we are His in faith; we are indeed the children of God and the heirs of His promise.

3. As Dynamo of Spiritual Power

Among the most expressive names given to the Holy Spirit is the term Paraclete, literally meaning "one called to our side," and commonly translated "Comforter," "Counselor," or "Advocate." Perhaps in its less restricted sense the term can be understood to mean "Helper" in the sense of one who supplies power and strength for the Christian in any need. "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter," Jesus had said, "that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you," John 14:16, 17. Later before His ascension Jesus had declared, "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you," Acts 1:8.

The Spirit then, is the Spirit of power, Whose manifestations are evident in the story of Pentecost and in that which followed. Already suggested in the term spirit itself and in the description of Pentecost in Acts 2, this power, in the words of George W. Richards,

> ". . . enabled men to do what they could not do before they were filled with the Spirit. They now can speak with new tongues 'the mighty works of God.' They can explain the purpose of God in the history of Israel, in Jesus of Nazareth, in the life of humanity. They can interpret the meaning of Christ's life and death and resurrection and exaltation. They can show inquiring people, whose hearts have been pricked with a sense of guilt, how to be saved . . . . They did what their Master had done—'mighty works and signs and wonders.' "[6]

Even as Jesus had once entered His ministry in "the power of the Spirit," Luke 4:14, so it is evident that the Spirit-filled men who move across the stage in Acts are men of spiritual power.

In a generation which is so overawed by the reality of physical power and which is so conscious of a lack of spiritual power, what a crying need we have for a deeper realization of the meaning of Paul's words to Timothy, "For God did not give us a spirit of timidity but a spirit of power and love and self-control," 2 Tim. 1:7 RSV. We need to remember also Sam Shoemaker's remark that the electric wire does not need to suck the power out of the dynamo, it needs only to remain in contact with it.[7]

4. As the Perfecter of Agape Love

As the Holy Spirit is indeed the Spirit of power, so He is also the Spirit of love. He is the same Spirit who was in Jesus as He confronted needy, sinful, and hateful men. Paul teaches clearly that "the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost," Rom. 5:5, that the first-fruit of the Spirit is love (Gal. 5:22), and that among the diversity of spiritual gifts the greatest of all, the more excellent gift, is love (1 Cor. 13). John declares "If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us. Hereby we know that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit," 1 John 4:12, 13.

In the individual this activity of the Spirit is sometimes called sanctification, which Clarke calls the carrying on of the Divine Life in man to perfection.[8] This process by which men become like Christ in love is again not so much an achievement of men as a divine impartation of God through His Spirit. Paul makes this clear in 2 Cor. 3:18 when he says, "And we all, with unveiled face, beholding the glory of the Lord, are changed into his likeness from one degree of glory to another; for this comes from the Lord who is the Spirit" (RSV).

In the early church this activity of the Spirit found expression in the koinonia of the Spirit, the fellowship of brotherly love which bound together the first believers, prompting them even to share material possessions so that none might suffer in need. It transcended differences in background, in social station, even differences in sex, so that the church in Christ was "builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit," Eph. 2:22.

Moreover, the Spirit of love did not exhaust itself in the cultivation of fellowship, but it became a missionary spirit, sending forth mission workers in love to share the gospel with all men. At Antioch the Spirit said, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." These were then "sent forth" by the Spirit, as Luke records in Acts 13:2, 4.

Where the Holy Spirit works there is manifest love of the brethren, but there is also love of the potential brethren. The work of the Holy Spirit in us makes us true brothers and ready missionaries.

5. As Creator of Peace and Order

Because the Holy Spirit is the Spirit of life, of truth, of power and of love, He is also the spirit of peace and order, the spirit of cosmos as over against the spirit of chaos. F. W. Dillistone, in his treatment of the Holy Spirit, lifts up order as one of the results of the Spirit's activity.[9]

This is a function which is often overlooked. In fact to some people that which is spiritual is associated with at least a degree of disorder, basing this on the idea that the Spirit gives liberty (2 Cor. 3:17). The relationship between order and freedom may be paradoxical, but in the Spirit the two are not mutually exclusive. In fact, order is essential to true spiritual freedom.

Did not Paul make this clear in his discourse on the diversity of spiritual gifts when he said "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all, 1 Cor. 12:4-6.

Elaborating his thought, Paul then compares the church to a body characterized by the orderly functioning of every part. When he then moves on to discuss the problematic gift of tongues he declares, "For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace," 1 Cor. 14:33, and concludes saying "Let all things be done exactly and in order," v. 40.

Order is peace. Order is harmony. Order is pattern. Order is cosmos. Order is integration. Order is regularity. Where the Holy Spirit is given freedom to work in the individual life and in the church there is order.

"Man's Disorder" in the church and in the world is not the work of the integrating Spirit. It is sin that separates. It is Satan who pulls apart. The Holy Spirit draws together. It is He who makes brethren of faith one and unites in peace and fellowship. Let us then "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," Eph. 4:1-3.

Every sincere believer desires to be a Spirit-filled man and that his church shall be a Spirit-filled church. But how can this take place? George Richards says,

> "We cannot fill ourselves with the Spirit; we can only put ourselves in the way of being filled by Him. If one desires to be filled with pure air, he goes to the fields, to the hilltops, the mountains, breathes deeply and is filled with the invigorating draughts of ozone. He cannot create the air but he puts himself in the way of being filled with it."[10]

But where does one go to be filled with the Spirit? One need not take one step or move an inch, for the Spirit is wherever God is and God is wherever we are. To be filled by the Spirit we have but to ask and to receive—to keep on asking and to keep on receiving with all the profound dimensions that such asking and receiving involves, simply giving God room to live in us as Life and Truth and Power and Love and Orderly Peace.

East and West Meet in One Family

The week of April 11, nine of the ten sons and daughters of Rev. F. F. Jantzen gathered on the old home place in the verdant rolling green hills of Willow Creek, twelve miles west of Paso Robles, California.

All had arrived by Wednesday, April 13. The occasion was the celebration of the 25th wedding anniversary of Mary and David Schultz and a reunion of the Rev. F. F. Jantzen family on April 14. Six of Rev. Jantzen's children have served as missionaries in foreign lands.

The youngest, Ruth, with her husband, Rev. Earl Roth, and two children were not able to attend the celebration. They are missionaries to Africa under the Congo Inland Mission, supported by the General Conference Mennonites. At present they are in Belgium studying the French language, before taking up their work in the Congo this fall. The nine children who could be present visited their father for varying periods of time but all were together only from Wednesday evening, the 13th, until Thursday afternoon, the 14th. They were: Rev. and Mrs. David Schultz and family of Paso Robles, who are active members in the Willow Creek Mennonite Church. Rev. and Mrs. Albert Jantzen and Lyman. Their daughter Grace attends Bethel College. They are missionaries to the Hopi Indians in Arizona. At one time they served on the General Conference mission field in China and were among those interned for three years as prisoners of war on the Philippine Islands.

Oswald Jantzen, who resides on a farm near Dallas, Oregon, but whose wife and four children could not be present. Minna Jantzen is attending Reedley Junior College in Reedley, Calif. Rev. and Mrs. Aron Jantzen and daughter, Cynthia, have just arrived in the States after completing two terms of service on the General Conference mission field in India, superintending the Leprosarium at Champa. Dr. and Mrs. Richard Jantzen and four children have served one term in Africa as medical missionaries under the Sudan Interior Mission. They now reside in Vista, Calif., where Dr. Richard has his own practice. Rev. and Mrs. John B. Jantzen and daughter, Evelyn, have served one term in Africa. They sailed on May 7 for their second term under the Congo Inland Mission supported by the General Conference churches. Rev. and Mrs. Lubin Jantzen and four children have served one term on the General Conference mission field in India. They are located temporarily in Tempe, Arizona, while on furlough, where Lubin is doing graduate work in the field of education. Anne Jantzen is a nurse at Immanuel Hospital in Turlock, Calif.

Since retiring from the ministry of the Willow Creek church in 1945 where he served as pastor for over 40 years, Rev. F. F. Jantzen, now 80 years of age, resides in a small house on the yard of his daughter, Mary, and son-in-law David Schultz. Besides compiling a 54 page family record of the Jantzen family since 1704, Rev. Jantzen takes care of a small poultry business to help keep him occupied and in health.

Many relatives and friends joined the Jantzen family in praising the Lord for His great goodness. It is only by His mercy that such a reunion could take place, for in a few days John sailed for Africa and in less than a year Arons and Lubins are to be on the field in India. A reunion such as this is but a foretaste of what heaven shall be. How faithful the Lord is to His servants!

This is a story of how Cornelius, a Roman Centurion, comes to know and believe in Jesus Christ, the risen Lord as His personal Savior.

Cornelius learns of some of the events in the last week of the life of Jesus from his friend, Longimus, and others from Thomas. A few of the events he sees himself.

The film gives the story of the last week of the life of Jesus reverently and with great meaning. The film can well be used with an audience from older primaries on up. The film should lead those who see it to a greater commitment to Jesus Christ as their risen Savior and Lord.

Education for Service

"I want my son to have an education." Many fine, Christian fathers and mothers have not only made this statement but have worked hard to make it come true. But often they do not reap what they hope to reap in their children. One father who had worked hard to give his boy a college education and had great hopes for him, said later, "My boy has less respect for God, less capacity for hard work, and at times, I believe, less ability to think than many of his friends who never had the advantage of a college education. Why?"

I do not know the answer. Perhaps the school he attended was wobbly; perhaps his dad was spoiling him; perhaps the boy did not see living Christianity in his own home. It is true, however, that those who are not clear as to what they want an education for, do not get much out of it. Young people need not always know what they will do later to earn a living, but they ought to know what they are getting an education for.

Some get an education because everybody else does; some because daddy has the money; some because they don't know what else to do; some to learn how to make more money faster; some go just to have fun. For the Christian young student some of these factors may enter in, but only secondarily. Primarily the Christian young student studies to qualify him or herself better for service in the vineyard of Christ.

Parents ought to do more to encourage their children to enter full time church vocations. There are

EDUCATION FOR SERVICE

18 vacant pulpits in our General Conference at this time and few men to fill them. More missionaries are needed. Parents ought to begin early in this work, since life plans are often laid before we realize it.

Education? We need more of it! But the motive must be service. The person who merely studies for studies' sake is not educated. Neither is he who sees every year in college as raising his salary by $300. Young people cannot soon get too much of the right kind of education, but a little bit of the wrong kind is too much. Study? Yes, but ask "what" and "what for?"

The opposite of study might be undue emphasis upon service and little emphasis upon education. The academic standards for teachers and other professions are constantly rising but at times we seem to have no academic standards for very important Christian service positions. This reminds me of the man who always paid his creditors before he gave anything to the Church. Finally someone asked him why and he replied, "My creditors get after me if I don't, but the Lord doesn't." Now the Lord can use anyone, surprisingly, if he wants to be used, but there is no excuse for ignorance if there is a way out. Neither is there any excuse for clothing laziness with a pious frock. If young people can get an education, get it! The Lord needs the best that we have, not merely the leftovers from the competitive business world.

There will be many diplomas granted in these days but few receiving them will enter full time church vocations. As parents and as a Church we have a great responsibility here. Some young people need encouragement, others need convincing, others need financial aid, or just a friendly chat. A man who knows said recently that young men sometimes hesitate to choose the ministry because they do not know whether they can take all the criticism ministers often get. We need to show our young people that this is not so.

What are you doing about it all?

Intellectual Freedom

One of the important issues of the day, dealt with in publications ranging from newspapers to learned journals, is the question of academic freedom. Of course, the larger more basic issue of intellectual freedom per se is involved in the question. And it is this larger issue of intellectual freedom which concerns us more directly at this time. Our question then is, what position shall the church hold in relation to intellectual freedom?

Traditionally the church has been opposed to intellectual freedom, insofar as the church has been or becomes a vested interest. The Holy Inquisition of the Middle Ages, the persecution of Copernicus, Newton, Darwin and countless others who have attempted to make advances in science and thought, and the tragic deaths of hundreds of martyrs of the Reformation all stand as melodramatic witnesses to that fact. Traditionally the church has found it necessary to destroy those ideas which it could not assimilate or which it felt contained elements which would destroy something important to the church.

But then, what is the church? Is it a governing body to execute conformity to a set, prescribed body of beliefs? Is it the servant of its members, working toward smoother relations and more efficient execution of their plans? Or is it, to adopt more inclusive definition, nothing more or less than its members in the totality of their personalities, thoughts and beliefs, with the organization a small but necessary part of it?

In Zurich, in 1525, a small group of young men formed a body which was at least similar to my last definition. This body of believers did not formulate a creed. They did not establish a new liturgy. But rather, this body of believers' unity depended upon a constantly growing constantly deepening "concensus of opinion." Thus began the Anabaptist movement.

And of course, "concensus of opinion" depends completely, entirely on intellectual freedom in its deepest sense. It assumes that each man will discipline his own mind. It assumes that each man is searching, honestly and sincerely, for the truth as he knows it.

The church is like a living thing—a tree. When its roots are destroyed or cut, when it is forced to grow in a predetermined manner, it will become warped and crooked, or it will wither, or it will die.

Camp Landon ----

What Are Our Objectives?

The following articles are taken from the GULFBREEZE, a paper published by the Voluntary Service unit at Gulfport. Many of you will be going into Voluntary Service this summer. These articles will help you to see a little bit of what goes on in one of the many Voluntary Service units.

The present work of Camp Landon is a twofold ministry—spiritual and social. Both are needed for a well rounded service program. Bible truths need to be presented and taught as well as maintaining a continued contact with the children and young people in social and recreational activities. In this way we learn to know the children better and can continue to teach Christian principles in action while participating in extra activities with them.

There are several phases of the more direct spiritual ministry. During the school term Bible classes are taught in six grade schools and two high schools. These open doors provide the opportunity to teach the Word to the children. The summer Bible school program is a concentrated period of Bible study reaching many children in the various communities. The spring retreat offers special classes in which Bible and important subjects related to the Christian life are taught and where the opportunity to make a commitment to Christ is given. Short devotional periods conducted daily at the Center provide thoughts for Christian living. Finally, we are hoping to start a Christian growth Bible class one night weekly for those definitely interested in it.

A great deal of time is also given to the social aspect of our work through recreation. Along with the Bible classes in the public schools, recreation classes are taught and inter-school sport activities sponsored. The Community Center is the scene of much recreational contact as many of the children come daily to participate. At the retreat there is also a great deal of social activity through recreation, meals, the craft period, and cabin life. At various times throughout the year special outings are also planned with the young people.

To lead young people to choose the Christian way of life and to continue growing in it is the great challenge that we face here at Camp Landon.

Harold

Center Program Expands

In October, 1953, the camp opened a community center in North Gulfport, a Negro community of approximately 500 homes. The participation at the center was good from the beginning. The 1954 summer activities, however, created increased interest and since that time we felt the need for additional facilities. We made the need a matter of prayer and the door was opened.

Mr. Frank Bolton, owner of the Community Center building, agreed to buy three lots and build a small house with our help if we paid some rent in advance. He purchased the lots a few weeks ago and on April 14 we set the blocks for the foundation. We hope to have it finished before summer so that we will have the additional four rooms available for Bible school and the craft and recreational program. The additional lots will enable setting up additional outside equipment. We hope to add some tall swings, a merry-go-round, and slippery slide, and an additional basketball goal. Because of the limited equipment children have sometimes resorted to aimless running about and therefore getting involved with the children that they disturbed.

The additional outside playground and the additional rooms present a challenge to a more effective program.

What VS Has Meant to Me

As one reminisces the activities of two short years of Voluntary Service, it is difficult to put into words just what they have meant to me as an individual. Certainly this experience has been one of spiritual growth and a deepened interest in Christian service.

Voluntary Service offers the opportunity to be of service to others in a very personal as well as in an organized way. It provides the privileges of helping to meet the physical and spiritual needs of those whom Voluntary Service reaches. It challenges one to look beyond himself and develop a concern for the needs and problems of others. All of these have been opportunities of Voluntary Service that have had real meaning to me. Working with children in Bible school and recreational activity, seeing their enthusiasm, interest, and appreciation for this work, realizing some of the adverse situations in which many of these people find themselves, and seeing some respond to the Christian love shown them, implants a deep impression and lasting challenge to those working in such a field.

Just what has Voluntary Service meant to me? It has meant an increased vision of service opportunities right at our doorsteps. It has been a challenge to look upon one's work as an opportunity to serve our fellow men. This experience has also helped me to grow spiritually through the fellowship of the VS Unit and through working together with those having the same motivation to serve "in the name of Christ."

Does Voluntary Service end with the termination of one's VS experience? Regardless of whether or not a person is in Voluntary Service as an organization, he can still be a part of the spirit or attitude of Voluntary Service. To me Voluntary Service means to continue to serve or help our fellow men "in the name of Christ" as we have and make opportunities to be of service. May we as Christians be faithful to the challenge of service that is ever before us.

Our Schools

BETHEL COLLEGE

New faculty members in the area of home economics, mathematics, and music have been announced by Pres. D. C. Wedel of Bethel College.

Miss Wilma Toews will return to Bethel to teach the courses in food and nutrition in the home economics department. Miss Toews is a graduate of Bethel College, securing her M.S. degree at Kansas State in 1945. Her teaching experience includes two terms of teaching at Tabor College 1942-46, and 1951-54, and a period at Bethel College 1946-51. She is at present doing graduate work at Oklahoma College of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts.

Courses in textiles, clothing, and design will be taught by Miss Lorraine Galle, Bethel graduate of 1950. Miss Galle, a native of Valley Center, has since served as dietitian at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, and as house mother and instructor in home economics at Freeman Junior College, Freeman, S. D. At present she is completing work toward a Master of Arts degree at Kansas State College, Manhattan.

Returning to teach mathematics after an absence of two years is Arnold Wedel who was on the Bethel teaching staff 1951-53. Dr. Wedel secured his Master of Arts degree at the University of Kansas in 1948 and his Ph.D. degree at Iowa State College in 1951. He has spent the past two years in alternative service in Denver, Colo.

Gerhard Buhr, Lehigh coach, was previously announced as basketball coach for the coming year. Milton Goering, who has coached Bethel's football team the past season, will take over as athletic director and continue as football coach.

Darlene Duggan, native of Halstead, and now doing graduate work at the University of Wichita, has been announced as instructor in instrumental lessons and music theory. She will organize and conduct instrumental ensembles and conduct the college band and orchestra. Miss Duggan is at present a flutist in the Wichita Symphony Orchestra.

Final examinations on May 19-20 will draw the curtain on the current academic year at Bethel College with a series of closing activities to follow over the week end.

The seniors presented their class program the evening of May 20. On Sunday, May 22, the annual baccalaureate service in honor of the seniors was given in Memorial Hall at 8:00 p.m. Pres. D. C. Wedel delivered the sermon on the subject, "Resources for the Journey."

The college a cappella choir presented its home concert at 3:00 p.m. on Sunday. The concert closed with several numbers by the reunion choir with former members of the choir participating.

On Monday, May 23, the alumni gathered for reunions and the annual banquets in the evening. Speaker for this latter occasion was Robert Anderson of the class of 1930, now traffic manager of the Rock Island Railroad, Amherst, Ill.

At 2:00 p.m. Monday, the honors chapel was conducted with scholastic, forensic, and athletic honors being awarded.

The climax of the closing activities was the commencement program at 10:00 a.m. Tuesday, with the Rev. J. F. Balzer of Crete, Neb., as the featured speaker. He addressed graduates on "Our Tomorrows Now." The Rev. J. F. Balzer is pastor of the First Congregational Church, Crete, Neb., and member of Bethel's golden anniversary class.

A member of the Bethel graduating class of 1905, Mr. Balzer then secured his bachelor's degree at Carleton and his master's degree at Chicago Divinity School. From 1913 to 1918 he taught at Bethel in the field of Bible, serving also as Dean of the college for several years.

A total of 60 seniors are included in this year's graduating class, including 24 women and 36 men. Three students received the associate in arts degree for two year's work.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Editors and business manager for the campus newspaper The Witmarsum for 1955-56, were selected recently. Editor-in-chief is Diane Lora; news editor, Helen Neufeld; managing editor, Marion Keeney; assistant editor, Omer Nisley; business manager, Sam Diller; and sports editor, Clair Hershberger.

Editors for the school annual "The Ista" were also elected recently by the sophomore class. Editors chosen were Carolyn Schnell and Shirley Shelmadine.

George Bailey, work day chairman, reports that $650 has been turned in thus far from work day activities. Proceeds will first be used to build a campus radio station, and the remainder will go toward the construction of hard surfaced tennis courts. The radio station, to extend only on campus, will be built by students.

Twenty-nine students were chosen recently to act as big brothers and sisters to freshmen and new students on the campus next fall. Tom Clemens, junior from Lima, Ohio, and Emma Schmutz, sophomore from Bluffton, were chosen as president and secretary, respectively, of this group.

Dr. Robert Kreider, dean, spoke at the regional conference of the Presbyterian Youth Westminster Fellowship held at Ada, Ohio, on April 26. Dr Kreider also spoke at the East Coast Club of Bluffton College at Lansdale, Pa., on May 7.

Two speaking engagements are scheduled for Dr. Lloyd Ramseyer, president, in the near future. On May 23, Dr. Ramseyer will speak at the annual ladies night of the Lima Torch Club, and on June 6, he will speak at a dinner meeting of the Minister's and Youth Conference of Churches of God of North America at Findlay College, Findlay, Ohio.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

On May 1 the choir of our college presented the oratorio, "St. Paul," in the Winnipeg Mennonite Mission Church. Rev. J. Toews, pastor of the church, was the chairman of the evening. The meeting was well attended.

The next performance of this oratorio will take place in the Bethel Mission Church on the evening of May 15.

Preparations are being made for the graduation which is to take place on June 12th.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Rev. Harris Waltner, pastor of the West-Zion Church at Moundridge, Kansas, spoke in chapel recently. He is a graduate of both the Academy and Junior Department of Freeman.

Rev. George Claassen, pastor of the Bethel KMB Church near Yale, South Dakota, was another recent chapel speaker.

Erna Friesen will spend the summer at Camp Friedenswald near Cassopolis, Michigan, as a counselor.

In a special chapel service the Senior Class presented their gift to the school. They presented velvet curtains for the two archways leading from the main auditorium to the stage in Pioneer Hall.

Students from four high schools met on the campus last week when a National Business Entrance Testing Center was established here. Tests were given in typing, bookkeeping, business fundamentals, and shorthand. After a noon lunch in the dining hall the afternoon program featured a panel discussion by some leading businessmen. The local chapter of the Future Business Leaders of America was host to the group. Mrs. Emma Schmidt Hofer is their sponsor.

A six week summer school session is scheduled for May 31 to July 1.

United States Senator Francis Case will be the speaker for the Freeman College Booster and Alumni Banquet on May 28th.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Rev. and Mrs. Andrew R. Shelly and their small son returned to the Seminary on May 9, after an extended trip East. While they were gone they attended the Middle, Central, and Eastern District Conferences.

On May 3 to 6 Rev. Shelly was the guest speaker at the Missionary Emphasis Week of Bluffton College. Brother Shelly spoke twice daily—at the morning chapel service and in the First Mennonite Church of Bluffton each evening. "Missions Today" was the theme of the morning messages. The evening series was well illustrated by slides taken by the Shellys during their recent world tour. This series closed with two special services on Sunday, May 8.

John Oyer led the Wednesday evening prayer service on May 11. The potter at his wheel was again brought to our attention. We must be ready for "breaking experiences" in life and also be ready to be remolded by our Potter.

Activities reminding one of the end of another school year are at hand: on Thursday evening, May 12, the Seminary had its annual communion service. The Senior Vesper program was given Sunday afternoon, May 15.

Mennonite Brethren Visit Pentagon

Representatives of the Mennonite Brethren Conference had a lengthy interview several months ago with Department of Defense officials. The question of whether or not the principles and practices of their church would be recognized by the armed services if members of that church were inducted into the army as noncombatants was discussed.

Four deductions were reached by the Mennonite Brethren representatives. They are:

(1) The primary purpose of the Medical Corps is not that of saving lives, but removing every obstacle which so easily is created through wounded and suffering soldiers in the pursuit of the Army's assignment to destroy the enemy.

(2) A conscientious objector who . . . considers it inconsistent to participate in the conflict of the Army must face the issue that in spite of personal interprepations which he may attach to his participation in war as a member of the Medical Service, from the standpoint of the Army, he is considered a part of the combatant operation.

(3) The request made for provisions of a possibility to serve in a noncombatant capacity as civilians conflicts with the dual status of the civilian and military law. Because of these principles, the Army cannot consider the possibility of such arrangement.

(4) The military oath (as well as the induction ceremony) is an acceptance of the combatant status as part of the Army and thereby transfers an individual from the position as a civilian into structural organization, aim, and purpose of the Armed Forces, whether he himself is willing to admit such status or not.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY TEN YEARS OLD

This school year brings to a close ten years of seminary work in Chicago. Launched as a venture of faith in 1945, with no buildings, these ten years have seen a healthy growth. As the need arose, buildings have been added to the center around 4614 Woodlawn—the first building—until today we have adequate housing facilities for the seminary family and also for some other Mennonite youth studying in various schools in the city.

The seminary center has become a favorite meeting place for various boards and committees of the Conference. This brings conference workers in touch with the students and staff and forms an excellent contact. No week passes but what there are guests stopping over at the seminary headquarters, and these, too, become acquainted with the location, the people here, and the work done. The Mission Center just across the street also forms a favorite place for meetings, guests, and visitors.

Of those who have attended the seminary during these ten years—not including this year's graduating class—there are twenty-six pastors, twenty-two in the mission field, six in strategic places of church or Conference responsibility, others in work under the Mennonite Central Committee, and other forms of service.

God has richly blessed the work of the seminary. Through the generous response of our many friends, it is now hoped that the total debt for the buildings may be cleared this year.

Plans are now under way for the next ten years, that the seminary may continue to prove a great blessing to many, and a help in bringing souls to Christ and building them up in Christ. The prayers of the entire church are requested for God's definite guidance that His will may be properly interpreted and followed.

MEN OF CONVICTION

One cannot help but be impressed when reading the biographies of the Christian heroes of the past, that they were men of strong conviction. They knew what they believed, and lived by those beliefs, even when to do so was unpopular and brought them into all sorts of conflicts. With Luther they could say, "Here I stand."

Having great convictions may not be the strong point of today's Christians. We too readily water down and thin out such convictions until they often are but mild opinions. We even hesitate to express these opinions lest they run counter to the generally accepted ideas of the world about us. We too often follow the path of least resistance and make what feeble convictions we may have fit into the pattern of life about us.

But this is not a time for feeble opinions, this is a time for great convictions. This is not a day for compromise of our faith, but for a firm and heroic faith in a great God.

Two things are extremely important: that our convictions square with the will of God, and that we stand up to our convictions, cost what it may. God needs men of strong Christian conviction to champion His cause.

OUR VOLUNTARY SERVICE PROGRAM

By this time the Voluntary Service program, both of the Mennonite Central Committee as well as of our own Conference, is quite well set up. This arrangement, where young people give a summer, or a year or two, to some definite type of Christian service, usually at considerable financial sacrifice, is one of the finest enterprises that our church has undertaken in recent years.

One is thrilled at the number and willingness of young people to go into some such type of Christian service. It demonstrates that our youth are eager to render service if we but supply the opportunity. It is an enriching experience to the youth involved. For many this taste of real Christian service is the beginning of a full life dedicated to such service. It is a help to the needy areas where the work is carried on. It is an opportunity to witness to the great truths of Christianity.

We hope this type of work continues to grow and expand with the years, and that every youth will have some opportunity to engage in some form of such voluntary Christian service, all "in the Name of Christ."

CURTAINS OR HORIZONS

We live in an age of curtains; the iron curtain, the bamboo curtain; curtains of prejudices, selfishness, and suspicion. Such curtains restrict and smother the soul. Christianity seeks to lift these curtains and push back the horizons of a man's life, causing him to lift up his eyes and see beyond the smallness of self.

Jesus is the supreme example of the extender of horizons. He found people's ideas of God too small and pushed back the horizons of their soul until they could comprehend more of the greatness and majesty of God. He met with people with small outlooks and caused them to lift their eyes and see the eternal values. He raised the horizons of human understanding and relationship.

The world has been pushing back horizons of time and space; of methods of work and of inventions and discoveries until we live in an altogether different world from what our forefathers did. But the spiritual horizons have not been pushed back accordingly. Our outlook is still too limited, our faith too weak, our souls too narrow.

Curtains stifle the spiritual life and smother the best in us. Horizons give us vision and understanding to interpret the present and the future as seen in the light of God. This should be a time of expansion of horizons of the spiritual life as well as of development of the material.

Christians With Conviction, About God

I. CONCERNING THE NATURE OF GOD

JACOB J. ENZ*

The way a Christian thinks and believes about God is bound to be revealed in his daily life. If he conceives of God as a kind of indulgent grandfather who overlooks the sins of his children, then his life will lack moral firmness and he will develop no sense of sin and daily need of the Savior. If, on the other hand, he thinks of God much in terms of the little boy who defined God as someone who was always snooping around to see if anyone was having a good time and then stopping them, then that Christian will spread a gloomy gospel of judgment that knows nothing of the love and grace of God—a gospel that will repel rather than attract people.

This Caution

Before going a step farther in our discussion it is imperative that we be clear at one point. There will be many occasions in our thinking about God when we shall have to say that we do not know the answers. This is in the very nature of the case; if we expect to enter a discussion of the nature of God with the expectancy of getting all questions clearly answered then we are not really serious about finding God. God will always be out beyond the borders of our weak human comprehension. This, again, must be tempered with the observation that regardless of how far beyond our understanding God may be, we know He has made himself known sufficiently so that we may know what is necessary to be at peace with Him and serve Him.

There is no better place to begin our thoughts concerning God than the place where the Bible begins: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth," Gen. 1:1, RSV. This statement suggests infinitely more than the origin of the material universe. It was not meant to satisfy our curiosity, about how the world came into being, it was meant rather to show that we have first of all to do with God. We do not live in a universe which is all there is to life and existence. Life is much more than getting material things. After we have gotten all we still do not have God. If we attain all without the God who made all we shall lose all. Ancient peoples as well as modern people soon took their eyes off the Creator and placed them on the creation. It was only a logical next step that they should worship the sun, the river, or fertility, gods which seemed to give them more things. In the case of moderns, we look to our powers in science, invention, and creation and feel no need to look beyond to the God who created them. The first sentence of the Bible speaks to our secularism and materialism with the force of a thunderclap. Life to be truly life begins, continues and ends in God.

A Great Gulf Fixed

We read on in the first chapter to note that in each act of creation the result proved to be good. This repeated statement makes clear where God stands in the matter of good and evil. Throughout the Scriptures it is always clear that fellowship with God involves the forsaking of evil to take one's stand firmly on the side of God. The Israelites to whom God revealed himself could not think of God without thinking about right and wrong. They could not think of good and evil without thinking of God. They belonged together. There is a great gulf fixed between the good and the evil and God will ever be on the side of the good. Thus when we sin we can only have one feeling—that God is far away. When we obey His voice we feel His nearness.

God Is Like Man

We dare not dwell too long on the holiness or distance of God. For God is close to us. From the same first chapter in Genesis we note that man is created in the image of God. If we want to know what God is like, one place we may look is to man. If man is created in the image of God then God is like man. Let us hasten, however, to add that God is not like fallen man but like the perfect man (and perfect God) Jesus Christ our Lord and Savior. But the image is not wholly gone else Christ could not save us. There must be something that is like God left in fallen man if he is to be drawn back to a position of peace with God. It is here that the irresistible grace and love of God are working. Even though man sins away his opportunity for intimate fellowship with God, God keeps knocking, seeking, and (praise His blessed name) finding!

This knocking, seeking, and finding is a matter of tremendous cost to God. It involves bearing with the stupid sins and follies of the creatures of His creation. Sin must be banished from the presence of a holy God; it separates; it destroys that which is God in us; it kills. Sin is alien to life because it is alien to God. Sacrifices reminded people that sin meant death of the animal for them. When associated with faith in God's forgiveness, the gulf between God and man was bridged and fellowship restored. But it was at a tremendous cost to God in that He took into His nature that which is forever foreign to His nature—sin. This we know to be a fact because of Jesus Christ our Sin-bearer. Should we be surprised to find such accurate prophecies as Isaiah 53? God is the same, and if He revealed himself to the prophets it would be strange indeed if it were essentially different from what we have seen in His supreme revelation—our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ!

God Lives with the Unholy

But how can a holy God live with that which is unholy? Are we not then returning to the "indulgent grandfather" concept of God? No! First of all God humbled himself in Jesus Christ at the cost of all His glory to lift man. His love took our sins upon himself and His holiness and purity untainted by sin has completely neutralized the power of that sin

Attitudes Toward Money

HOWARD RAID*

"For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness," 1 Timothy 6:10-11.

Oftentimes we feel about money as the college boy. He wrote his father the following letter:

Dear Dad:
No mon.
No fun.
Your Son

Then reality comes back at us in the same manner as the father wrote to the son.

Dear Son:
Too bad.
So sad.
Your Dad

Yes, it is too bad, indeed it is tragic if we depend upon money for our fun. If such is the case it means our joys are determined by the material things we possess. In fact then the biblical words of 1 Timothy apply, "The love of money is the root of all evil." That is, we become so concerned about money that getting it dominates our thinking and acting.

We must make it clear that the statement does not say that money is evil but rather the love of money. Therefore we may proceed to point out that there is nothing evil about having or getting money as such. That is a realistic approach to life, is it not? We all realize that in our type of an economy we must have or get money in order to secure the necessities of life.

Thus we are all economic beings, we must make some decisions about money. The first question we usually face is how to get more of it. I am reminded of a cartoon I once saw of a young man working in an office, he was saying "When I get a quarter of a million dollars I will retire and live." The next picture showed him at 40 with the quarter million but a caption that read, "When I get a half million then I will retire." The next picture showed him at 50 with the half million and the caption stating "When I get three-quarters of a million then I will quit," but at 60 he wanted a million and at 70 he was too old to enjoy it very much. I would not discourage your family from trying to get a million dollars, or even merely increasing your earnings, but I would point out that we seldom ever get enough money if that is our chief concern.

Another approach to the money problem is to try to get more use out of the amount that we have. It is very easy to let small amounts slip through our fingers. In the words of the old proverb, "The careless housewife can throw out more with a teaspoon than the husband can bring in with a scoop shovel." In advising young couples it seems so very difficult to get them to keep track of their expenditures. They will drive 35 miles to a sale to try and save a few pennies but it seems like too much effort for them to try and keep records of where their money is being spent.

I sometimes wonder if the general aversion to recording expenses is not due to the many jokes and stories of couples who failed to live within their budget. Perhaps this story will help to overcome your hesitancy. One young couple set up a carefully prepared budget with one column headed "oil." One day a friend was being shown their books and he asked what they meant by the column "oil." "Well," explained the young couple, "it is this way. When either of us buys something we really had not budgeted for and probably could have gotten along without, yet something that we wanted, we put it under oil." "But why," asked the friend, "under oil?" "We call it oil on the troubled waters of the sea of matrimony."

This illustrates clearly an important point, namely, that it is almost impossible for anyone to budget perfectly for all expenses and thus a little lee-way is necessary. Furthermore unless you are an accounting major, do not expect your books to balance out perfectly every time. Do not let it disturb you too much if you cannot account for a few cents. If the couple, and later on the children, work together, any family can keep a reasonably accurate record of their expenses. Then on the basis of the record they can make wiser decisions about how to spend their income in the future.

We have established two points, first if we are seeking money as the goal we will probably never get enough of it; second, we can all use our money more carefully and thus get more out of it. The third point we would make is that as Christians we have another concern about money. This concern springs from our being Christian and also from the usual method of securing income. Very few of us ever get any money without using up some of our time and energy.

As Christians our bodies are to be the temple of God. Furthermore we have given ourselves to God. Thus when we use up our time and energies to get money that money represents ourselves. Logic would prove that if our bodies are temples of God and they are used up to get money, then our money must be both a part of ourself and also God's. If such is the case then it becomes very important how we use this money.

Any Christian family will not set money up as its goal, it will try to get the most out of the amount of money that it has and more than both of these it will be concerned what it buys. They will use their money as Children of God, thus for His causes, because it will be the love of God that constrains them and not the love of money.

He That Putteth His Hand to the Plow

CORNELIUS WALL

The world knows of times of dire need and human distress in Europe, the Middle East, the Far East, and even in the Americas. Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches in North America through their Mennonite Central Committee have "put their hand to the plow," dedicating themselves to alleviate these needs to the extent possible for them. They have not discontinued this task and have the admiration of thousands in many parts of the world and certainly in Europe.

The refugee problem of a few years ago. Thousands of Mennonite refugees jammed the camps of Europe. MCC put its hand to the plow, and today the operation is practically completed. Thousands of new settlers in the United States, Canada, and South America are grateful for the persistent faithfulness of MCC and its constituency. Its presence through these years has meant hope, a different outlook and a new chance in life.

Resettlement of Mennonite refugees in West Germany. Again MCC saw fit to ease the load of new settlers who had left everything in the East Zone. Financial aid from America and free labor by our PAX men did and still do perform miracles for Mennonite settlers. No one of the donors will ever know the many grateful hearts who thank God for the assistance received from American Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches.

Places of worship in new Mennonite settlements. Brother C. F. Klassen in the spring and summer of 1953 while visiting churches in the States and Canada presented the problem of building places of worship in the Mennonite settlements. His plea fell on receptive hearts. So encouraging was the response to Brother Klassen that he felt safe to plan an extensive program and make commitments at two places.

Brother Klassen suddenly summoned by his Master. Among the many loose ends left with his passing is the church building in Backnang. Brother Klassen felt our churches should raise the amount still needed after the Backnang settlement itself and the German Mennonite churches had made their contributions. The building is now under roof. The policy we follow in Backnang is not to go much beyond the cash on hand. Since local contributions are nearly collected, future progress will largely depend on the flow of contributions from churches in America. About $1,500 are now needed to complete the project. We are hoping the church can be finished this summer.

The construction of the Backnang church has been started in confidence that American Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches will raise the contributions hoped for and by us that enable Backnang to finish the project. We at this end are grateful for the loyal support in the past and confident that our churches will not let an unfinished church remain standing on the Backnang-Sachsenweiler site; that they will shoulder the balance of the commitment their servant made in good faith; that they will do their part toward finishing the church building. We all, including the many PAX men who spent many hours working on the church, would like to see the church building finished as evidence that our churches once having put their hand to the plow did not look back.

(Gifts of money to raise this needed $1,500 should be contributed as soon as possible. Contributions for this project should be clearly designated for the Backnang church and sent to Board of Christian Service, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas, or Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Penn.)

Abiding

The day dawns fair and clear for me,
And my heart sings;
I shall be busy with the tasks
That each day brings,—
Living, loving, laughing, working—
Good friends are nigh;
Planning, doing, going, coming,
What more need I?

The evening comes, my work is done,
I sit alone;
I add the busy moments up,
What have I done?
I count them o'er—as empty shells
They seem to me;
I see my doing as they are,—
No use to Thee.
I lived my life as unto self,
Not unto Thee;
I've nothing in my hand to bring
For Thee to see!

Tomorrow—shall it be the same?
It dare not be!
I now will heed Thy loving call—
"Come unto me."
Then life, and work, and love, and joy
Will fruitful be.
I thank Thee Lord, that Thou hast said,
"Abide in me."
I do abide, and Thou art near,
The way seems new;
"I shall be with you," Thou hast said,
And Thou art true.

The Way, the Truth, the Life, the Light,
Now walks with me.
I shall have much this day to bring,
To show to Thee.

Flashes of Thought

Convinced

Walter Gering

We really had no right to be standing idle on the spot. We were engaged in contacting possible recruits for the Voluntary Service program and the time was rapidly slipping by. But when we saw that well drilling rig standing on the field ready to begin we could not resist the temptation to pause for a few moments. Such operations were always fascinating.

Then it was that the impossible happened. With a long wire in hand he began to walk slowly toward the spot where the well was to be dug. The wire was held firmly with both hands. Suddenly that horizontal wire began to swing up and down. The closer he came to the spot the more violent became the motion. Above the spot indicated it dipped far to the ground as though some irresistible power was pulling it down. He insisted that he was not moving it; the wire was under the influence of some other power.

That I could not believe. Much as I respected the man's word, inwardly I was not convinced. Pieces of wire held in hand simply do not begin to jerk on their own accord. I needed further confirmation before I could believe in this sort of thing. Taking the wire in my own hands I tried it; my friend with me tried it also. Of course there was no response. The wire remained motionless even above the very spot which had caused such vibrations before.

Just then a friend of mine stopped to watch the procedure. He needed no further demonstration; it was not possible to find water by means of a piece of wire. Grasping the wire with both hands he too held it out as he advanced to the spot.

Words will never describe the look of utter amazement which swept over his face. He did not believe in such foolishness; he would not believe. Yet there in his very hands the wire began to dip to the ground. Much as he tried to hold it steady, he could not keep it from swaying. He had been convinced. Sobered with the reality of that which we had seen we went our way.

So it was with the early disciples. They could not explain it; the multitudes sneered and ridiculed the thought of a resurrected Jesus. It was utterly impossible. Taking these unlearned disciples in hand they "charged them not to speak or teach at all in the name of Jesus." But they could only cry out: "We cannot but speak of that which we have seen and heard."

No—there is much about the Christian faith which we cannot explain. But once we have experienced the reality of the Living Christ in our own lives we can join in saying: "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you."

LORD, GRANT US FAITH TO BELIEVE

Blessing and Challenge During Ten Years

TEN YEARS

"Bless the Lord, O my soul . . . ."

We look back over ten years. It is good to reflect on the past. The Bible records much of the details of the people of God. We pause at this important milestone in the life of our seminary.

We look back to pay tribute and honor to those "to whom honor is due." First and foremost we praise our Lord for His marvelous goodness in leading each step of the way. Indeed, it is true that without His power and guidance, nothing worthwhile could have been accomplished.

We also pay tribute to those who labored so faithfully in the early formative years. In particular do we think of Dr. Abraham Warkentin, the first president. During the first year he was the only permanent staff member. The Lord worked through him in leading to the establishment of Mennonite Biblical Seminary.

As we turn our eyes backward we also observe the accomplishments of the first ten years. As we do this we exclaim "What hath God wrought!" With the Psalmist we say: "This is the Lord's doing and it is marvelous in our eyes."

Under God, the first years have been used in getting established and in training many men and women for Christian service. Enrollment in seminaries is usually not large. But when we look at the number of graduates over a period of time we note an impressive list of servants of Christ. Among the graduates are 45 ministers, 9 ministers' wives, 19 missionaries, 2 conference secretaries and 8 serving with the Mennonite Central Committee.

One of the primary values of the backward look is to evaluate that which has been done so as to be used more fully of the Lord in the future in this task for His Church.

As we pass this tenth milestone our prayer is that this institution of our Conference may be used ever more fully in the training of those whom He calls.

"For other foundation can no man lay th

It is appropriate that the tenth anniversary comes at the time of Pentecost. Pentecost means the release of the power of the Holy Spirit. We also think of the church in connection with Pentecost. We pray that we as a church may be "with one accord in one place" so that the Lord can bless and empower us.

This issue of The Mennonite is dated May 31, the day which marks the end of our tenth fiscal year. We wish to take this opportunity to thank our loyal constituency for faithful support during these years We appreciate the continuous response and now especially do we thank you for your support during the rally of the past weeks.

THE FUTURE

"Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith," Hebrews 12:2.

It is a joy to be engaged in a work about which there is no doubt as to future need and value. In the secular world many changes occur which makes products either obsolete or unnecessary.

The proclamation of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ is a continuing challenge in every generation. Jesus Christ is not only the hope for people today, but will be in years to come.

The Church of Jesus Christ is not a transient institution, but part of the eternal purposes of our Lord. We read "Christ loved the church and gave himself for it."

The question of leadership for the church has always been a vital one. Throughout the Bible the importance is pointed out.

As we look ahead we anticipate that many more will pass through our buildings into areas of service. That there is need today is as obvious as the need for the spread of the gospel. That we will need leaders in the future is also clear.

We do not face the future with full knowledge of what will occur. Indeed decisions need to be made. We need not know the path ahead of time if we know the guide. We do know He will lead in the future as He has in the past.

In the task of training for church vocations, it is especially true that "we are laborers together with God," 1 Cor. 3:9. The Lord calls young men and women from our churches to be "vessels" for His service.

As a Conference we have been praying for and supporting a school for the specific task of training these young people. Through prayer and gift support, and through the work of the board and staff we are working together for His Glory in fulfilling the prayer "that he may send forth laborers into His harvest."

Mennonite Youth

Sponsored by the Young People's Union of the General Conference, Editor, Lois Duerksen, North Newton, Kansas

Youth and the Present Age

The Needs of This Age

We as young people have been privileged to live in an age of great progress. New inventions are being introduced almost daily that should be leading us into a more peaceful way of life. Advances are being made in the medical field that only a short time ago we thought to be impossible. Great improvements and progress in the field of travel bring people of other nations much closer to us than we ever expected.

The Needs Are Many

With all this "reported progress" it would seem that the needs of this age would be kept to a minimum and we as young people would have a sense of security merely living in this age. Yet, as we read our daily papers and listen to the commentators we find that there is much unrest and a sense of instability quite prevalent among the youth of today. In our schools we find pupils unruly and hard to manage. Juvenile gangs and gang wars are ever on the increase. Girls and boys are dressing and acting so nearly alike that it is difficult to tell them apart at a distance. Feminine traits and manly habits which should be developing in this age group are strangely lacking. These are only a few needs found in our secular youth. We are also faced with pressing needs in youth who regularly attend our churches. Disobedience, inattendance, and disrespect for the Word of God are a few of the needs pertaining to this group.

The Greatest Need

Whether we are speaking of the needs of secular or church-going youth, we are certain that the needs are basically the same. Men and women in places of authority throughout our nation will tell you that the need of young people in this age is a spiritual need. The President of our nation has expressed this many times and has set an example for us by his church attendance, setting aside days for prayer, and expressing the fact that he is dependent upon God for daily help and guidance. In acknowledging that our greatest need is a spiritual one, we feel that the following are the most pressing needs of our youth today.

Need of Accepting Christ As Savior

When we as young people recognize this as the greatest need in our individual lives we will be getting to the "root" of our troubles. Upon accepting Him we will begin to see a great change in our lives. We will begin to have stability and a new inner peace. We read in His Word, "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature. Old things pass away, behold all things become new."

Need of Serving Christ

"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." After we accept Christ we will find a need we had not known before. Serving Him will be the greatest joy of our life. When we surrender to Him we will find our lives taking shape in a manner that we had not expected and choosing our life work will be much easier with His leading. We may serve Him in a great number of ways. Some in the ministry, others on the mission field, and for many, it may be a service in our local churches. Regardless of how small the service, if we love Him, we will serve Him.

Need of Christian Homes

Many youth today are in need of Christ-centered homes. Homes where plain Christian principles are taught and lived by the parents. Many homes today are merely a place to eat and sleep. Parents are too busy with outside affairs and do not take time to have fellowship with their own children. They leave it up to the Sunday school teacher, pastor, and other church leaders to instruct them in the principles they should be learning in the home.

Need of Christian Fellowship

After Christ takes control of our lives we are in need of fellowship with other Christians. Our local churches are perhaps the best source for this fellowship. The youth fellowship groups formed in our churches have also seen this need. They realize that young people are drawn closer together as a group and will be of a greater value to the church in many ways when they find fellowship in a group of this type.

Workshop—Consecrated leaders present YPU plan to our Conference youth, stimulating them in its further application to their local groups.

Youth's Responsibility to These Needs!

Let us imagine a world without youth. If we have such a picture in mind, it is obvious that this age (as any other) needs young people.

What are the responsibilities that young people face? The main task is to prepare for the future when the world will fall into the hands of those who are the youth of today. Without youth there can be no future! Success or failure depends on the success or failure of the preparation. Schools, colleges, military service, civic organizations, and places of employment all have their programs geared to help young people prepare themselves to take responsibility now. This will help them to be successful citizens when they become the adult generation.

The Church and Youth

The Church has the part of helping young people prepare themselves to be Christian leaders. "Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity," 1 Timothy 4:12. Even in the early part of life, young people are instructed to live as examples of what a believer in Jesus Christ should be.

Drama—Adoption of YPU plan results in creativity and originality in local youth fellowship programs.

In Word

The Christian young person has a responsibility to speak in a way which shows a proper relationship to Jesus Christ. Words should not be careless, critical, complaining, boastful or in any way detracting from the example which is being set.

In Conversation

The word for conversation, here, means way of life. The young person has a responsibility in this age to form a pattern of life that is pleasing to God. It should be a happy life of peace and contentment, knowing that "all things work together for good to them that love God," Romans 8:28. It should be a life of service.

In Charity

Young people have a responsibility to love friends and enemies. They must show that love, by a willingness to sacrifice.

In Spirit

The responsibility is to be an example, not only outwardly, but in a sincere spirit. Outward action should be a sign of that which is inner and real. If this is not the case, a so-called "good life" will have no value.

In Faith

To be a Christian we must have faith in the finished work of Christ, who is the Savior of all who accept Him as such. This faith, in order to be exemplary, must be steadfast. It is the responsibility of youth to continue in faith—in disappointment as well as in success.

In Purity

It is the responsibility of youth to live lives unadulterated by the sin of the world. As an example, the life should be lived so that there is no shame.

What is the responsibility of youth to the needs of this age? We would say that all young people must prepare for the future; but the Christian young person has a far more important responsibility—that of being an example of the believers.

Meeting These Needs With Christ!

To be a teen-ager in this, the middle of the twentieth century, presents many more problems than those which our fathers and grandfathers faced when they were in their early years. Because of the complexity of modern day living and the demands which society places on youth today, it becomes more apparent that in reality, the answer to their problem is just as simple as it was a year, or a hundred years ago. Youth must not set their goal in life to please their friends, gain possessions, or fulfill their dreams, but must go beyond anything which places ultimate faith in mankind and his accomplishments. Youth must seek God in their hour of need, to turn their minds from the temptations which reach out greedy claws to enlist them in their ranks. They must have a security which cannot be bought or earned and which must bring about peace of mind rather than fame or riches. With God as the driving force behind them, no problem will be too great for the youth of today, as is illustrated by the question Paul asks in Romans 8:31, "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

The Effects of Environment

Is it any wonder that many of the teenagers of today are unstable, frustrated individuals? They have been raised in an environment, brought about by parents, which creates this atmosphere of futility and hopelessness. If parents forget their duty to their children, to bring them up with God as the center of the household, how can we blame the teen-ager for seeking self-esteem outside of the home? Without parental guidance, inspired by God, youth turns to other forms of self-expression to build up his ego as an individual. If he has acquired a sense of responsibility, in spite of his parents, he might express himself in sports, school activities, a desire for higher education, etc., but, if he cannot think for himself he may turn to crime, alcohol, etc.; as a means of expressing himself. Youth must be told by parents, ministers, and Christians that man was placed on earth by God for a specific reason. It must be brought to their attention, that our duty as children of God, is that of service to our fellow men.

What Can Be Done?

If we, as Christians, see the dilemma which faces youth today, what can we do to change the purposeless life which they face? How can we replace futility and despair with hope and meaning? If it were not for the power and love of God, this indeed would be an almost impossible task. The Church and all Christians must recognize youth's need for Christ and provide them with the opportunity of coming in contact with Christian activities. The Church must grasp every opportunity to present the gospel to youth. Within its door lies the answer to life's problems. The Church must provide activities for youth, that are stimulating to the point where they cannot be resisted.

The Program of Youth Fellowship!

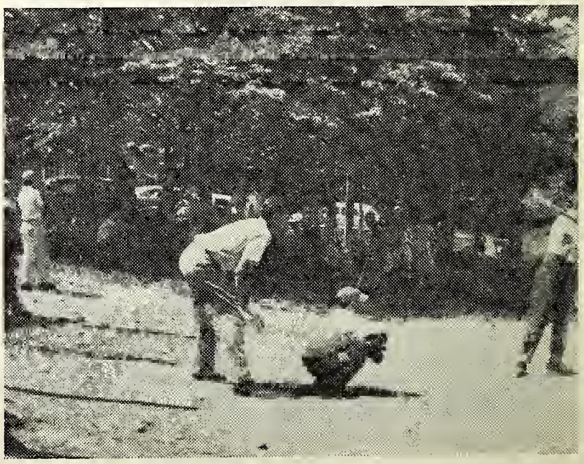
Youth Fellowship is one example of what can be done. Youth can see reason to the three area program provided by Youth Fellowship. It is clearly obvious that a Christian's first need is spiritual. Once he has discovered the love of Christ, he has a desire for service. Also a Christian must release some of the joy and energy which he possesses, in good, wholesome fellowship. Thus Youth Fellowship is one way of giving youth purpose in life and also a means of healthy outlet for excess energy. But Youth Fellowship must not be content to limit itself to its own group. It must reach out and encourage others to join. All too often we acquire a false sense of pride by limiting our groups to our friends. This is not Christianity, but vanity. Perhaps there are youth in the neighborhood who do not dress as well as we. Perhaps there are those who seem above us, due to wealth or social stature. These individuals also have souls and it is our duty to help them, regardless of prejudice or opinion.

The Program of the Church!

The Church, also, must have something for youth to do. It should have an active youth choir to help make these young people feel a part of the Church. Sunday school should also take advantage of every situation where youth help can be utilized. Young people want to help. They must be kept active in order to keep their interest, and also to fill their desire to do something constructive.

Christ, the Sure Foundation

With Christ as their foundation, youth will be able to meet their needs without fear or uncertainty. They will be faced with temptations and will be able to conquer them. In the event they become weak and fall, as many of us do, they will rise and become stronger in that knowledge that our God is a loving God who will forgive our sins if we ask Him. Through Christ, all things are possible and when youth accept Him as their Savior, their tasks in life will become easier. Youth will walk with a sure step, knowing that they have a friend who will guide, love, and protect them at all times. With Christ there is purpose; without Him there is nothing. Surely, if youth would turn to Christ, the world of tomorrow would be one of peace and love.



Recreation—Christian application of recreation has helped to unite the youth of our Conference.

This issue of the Youth Section has been planned and written by the Young People of the Eastern District Conference. Thanks is given to the following young people who contributed to the above write-up: Clarence E. Carbaugh, East Swamp Church; Violet Keiser, West Swamp Church; and Ed Tice, Deep Run Church.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Bluffton College will hold its 55th annual commencement program in Founders Hall on Monday, June 6, at 10:00 a.m. Baccalaureate services will be held on Sunday, June 5, at 3:00 p.m. The presentation of diplomas will conclude a week end of May Day activities beginning with Swiss Day on Friday, June 3, at 12:00 noon.

Speaker at this year's graduation exercises will be Dr. Bland L. Stradley, vice-president of Ohio State University. His topic will be "Durable Satisfactions."

Highlights of the May Day week end will include: the crowning of May Queen Adele Bertsche of Pontiac, Illinois, escorted by Popular Man Dave Tice from Perkasie, Pa.; the Swiss Day program; Box ceremonies; the Vesper Choir concert; and the Alumni Banquet.

After 27 years of service in conducting the Vesper Choir, Professor Russell A. Lantz has asked to be relieved of this part of his college work due to the heavy demands of time and energy which are necessary in carrying on the work of the choir. Beginning with the fall semester he will no longer conduct the Vesper Choir but will continue his regular teaching and administrative duties as head of the department of music and also as the conductor of the Choral Society.

His work at Bluffton began in 1927 as director of the men's glee club and in 1928 he began conducting the Vesper Choir. Throughout the years an estimate of 1,350 students have sung under his direction. The choir next year will be under the direction of Mr. Earl Lehman, the present director of the Choraliers.

Gifts from friends of the college and the Men's Varsity "B" on campus have enabled all the new seats to be installed in the Founders Hall bleachers. Each donation of $12.50 enabled one seat to be installed with the name of the donor being placed on a metal placard on the seat.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

We recently had a visit from Rev. J. J. Thiessen of Saskatoon. In chapel service he spoke on the theme John 12:24.

Rev. B. B. Fast of Elmwood Mennonite Brethren Church also gave us a message in a chapel service.

The theme for a recent Saturday night prayer meeting was "Mother." The following topics were discussed: "What Do Christian Mothers Mean to the Nation?"; "What Does a Christian Mother Mean to the Family?"; and "What Does My Mother Mean to Me?"

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

A new Hamilton piano was installed in chapel. This completes a student sponsored project to redecorate the chapel to give it an atmosphere of worship. This started as a Christian youth volunteer project. The funds for the piano were earned by students and faculty through their workday activities.

The Academy A Choir and the school band gave a joint concert on May 10. Howard Heise directs the choir and Harold Moyer the band. Another spring musical event was a piano recital by the grade school pupils of Mrs. Orlando Goering and Harold Moyer.

A Home Economics tea, the Junior-Senior banquet, and the all-school picnic climaxed the social activities of the school year. Members of the Home Economics classes held a style show and tea on May 9. An oriental theme designed to promote better understanding between nations was carried out in the Junior-Senior banquet this year. The all-school picnic was held on recreation grounds near Fort Randall Dam. A conducted tour of the dam and the hydroelectric plant there was part of the day's activities.

A number of students will be teaching vacation Bible school both in local churches and in unchurched rural areas. Some of the seniors and college students will also participate in Voluntary Service projects.

The Willard Unruh family moved into their new home east of the campus. Mr. Unruh and Walter Jost have spent considerable time in student solicitation. They plan to visit the Mountain Lake, Minn., and the Henderson, Neb., areas next.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Rev. Andrew R. Shelly was guest speaker at the Woodlawn Mennonite Church on Sunday morning, May 15. "Missions at Mid-Twentieth Century" was the title of his message. At the evening service Brother Shelly gave an illustrated report of his recent world tour.

Sunday afternoon, May 15, the annual Senior Vesper Service was held. The program was presented by the seniors and their wives. Members of the graduating class include: Bruno Penner, Master of Theology; Norman Bergen, Stanley Bohn, Paul Dyck, William Gering, Levi Koehn, Leonard Smucker, and Gerrit Veendorp, Bachelor of Divinity; Edmund Felske, John Gaeddert, Norma Jost, and Jo Tan, Master of Religious Education.

Norman Bergen was in charge of the Wednesday evening prayer service, May 18. This was a time of sharing when members of the Fellowship who are leaving told of their plans for the future.

The annual banquet of the Almuni Association of Mennonite Biblical Seminary was held Thursday evening, May 19.

CHRISTIANS WITH CONVICTIONS, ABOUT GOD

to separate and kill. If pure human love can absorb the wrongs committed against it by others how much more the grace and love of God.

Should we find it surprising to find the great commandment spelled out in the first four chapters of the Bible? In the case of our first parents it was a matter of love to God. In the case of Cain and Abel it was love to neighbor. Our belief in God is not complete without our brother. The blood of Abel was crying to God from the ground. When Cain struck Abel it was God who felt the full force of the blow! Here in the fourth chapter of Genesis is a striking evidence of the truth so central in Jesus' teachings, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." We cannot believe in God, trust in God, and be at peace with God, while we are hurting any of His children. It would be like a husband taking his wife in his arms, telling her how much he loved her, and then instead of kissing her, slapping her face! Love and hate or God and Satan cannot dwell together.

A God Who Needs Man

Finally our belief in God involves certain beliefs about doing God's will and God's work. In the first chapter of Genesis, God not only created, He named the results of His creation. This is evidence of His love and care for His creation. Nothing is to escape His divine and loving care. Nothing is to be left unnoticed in the mass of things. In German school we used to sing a song which translated freely runs like this:

Knowest thou the sum of the stars
  Fixed in the dome of the night?
Knowest thou the number of angels
  Going throughout all the earth?
God the Lord has counted them
  That none escapes Him
    Of their tremendous sum.

When man was created he was given the task of subduing the earth and, specifically, naming the animals. Being created in the image of God he was to do the same work as God. This is a labor of love and concern which in the Scriptures finds its focus in the missionary task to bring the knowledge of the love and forgiveness of God to all mankind. It is to put the name of Christ on every man—the name that assures individuality and fellowship, salvation and maturity. It is a task which God has left to man by the help of the Holy Spirit. Jesus said, "greater works than these shall ye do." Our tasks are given to us by God not to earn our way to heaven, not to see if we are fit for heaven, but because we are sons of the Father and as such must do the works of the Father which otherwise would be left undone. Not only do we believe that man needs God. We believe that in a very real sense God needs man. We are truly the body of Christ moving about in a hopeless, despairing world bringing new hope and courage and Life!

Christian, do you really believe in God?

Topics discussed at the staff meeting a day previous included day care and foster home care for patients by Arthur Jost, Kings View administrator; needs of the aged and chronic mentally ill and mentally retarded by Myron Ebersole of Prairie View Hospital; the development and expansion program at Brook Lane Farm by administrator Arthur Laemmlen; the field of service among the mentally retarded by Harold Vogt, Prairie View psychologist; and community clinics as related to the prevention of mental illness by Boyd Nelson of the Mennonite Relief and Service Committee, Elkhart, Ind.

ORIE O. MILLER VISITING SOUTH AMERICA

Orie O. Miller is spending six weeks in South America visiting MCC centers and projects, consulting Mennonite colony leaders and reviewing and planning the continuation of assistance to the South American brotherhood. The MCC executive-secretary left the United States May 23. Brother Miller will first visit the LeTourneau project in Peru where PAX men are working, then continue on to Brazil, Paraguay, Uruguay, and Argentina. Before returning to the United States on July 4, he will participate in the Fernheim Colony 25th anniversary celebration on July 1.

MVS IN EUROPE PLANS SIX SUMMER CAMPS

Mennonite Voluntary Service in Europe is planning to operate six work camps this summer in Austria, Germany, Greece, and Holland. With the exception of the Greece camp which runs from July 15 to Aug. 14, the camp season will be July 24 to Aug. 28.

Comparable to Voluntary Service in North America, MVS work camps are an opportunity for European young people to serve sacrificially, to demonstrate their faith to the world and to come to a better understanding of each other. These camps enable young people to grow in their spiritual experience by working and worshiping together and provide opportunity for volunteers to make Christ available to those who do not know Him.

The six camps planned for this summer and a brief description of their projects: Lefkohori, Greece, construction of a community church; Berlin-Heiligensee, Germany, construction work in a new settlement for refugees; Elmshorn, Germany, repair of old barracks and building of new homes for refugees; Bad Godesberg-Annaberg, Germany, construction of a refugee youth home; Vienna, Austria, reconstruction of Evangelische school now under way by Brethren and Mennonite 1-W men; and Niewerkerk, Holland, construction of a playground on the flood-damaged island of Schouwen-Duiveland.

MCC BENEFITS MORE THAN 12,000 IN INDO-CHINA

According to a March report, nearly 12,000 persons in Indo-China—most of them refugees—had directly received relief supplies from MCC personnel. In addition, other people had benefited from MCC material aid made available to missionaries for distribution. Another means of assisting needy persons in Indo-China has been through an Evangelical Relief and Welfare Committee formed shortly after MCC's arrival. Food packages made available to this committee by MCC were given to about 1,200 families. The presence of MCC workers is considered to have contributed to the formation of this committee. Indo-Chinese Christians were stimulated to organize for relief work when they heard of American churches who considered relief work as part of the ministry of the Church.

SEVEN MENNONITE REFUGEES ARRIVE IN URUGUAY

A group of seven Danzig and West Prussian Mennonites who fled their homes in 1945 and who have been living in West Germany since then arrived in Montevideo, Uruguay, on May 7. Their immigration to Uruguay marks the end of many months of negotiations and processing. So long and difficult was the processing that a group of more than 100 refugees originally interested in migration dwindled down to the seven. This group is being assisted in their settlement by the Mennonites of Uruguay who entered the country in 1948 and 1951.

—Hereford Church, Bally, Pa.: Miss Violet Keiser of Quakertown, Pa., recently gave a very interesting talk, during our Sunday school mission period, on her experiences as a Voluntary Service worker last summer in Colombia, South America. Mrs. Paul Fritzsche, after a time of great suffering, passed away on Sunday morning, April 24. She was the oldest daughter of our deacon emeritus, John H. Latshaw. At our communion services on the 24th of April, Mrs. Homer Moyer joined with us by transfer of letter and Mr. Francis Mauger by rite of baptism. Wilmer S. Shelly, our former pastor, had charge of this communion service.—Mae Latshaw, Corr.

—Lehigh Church, Lehigh, Kan.: Our Men's Fellowship served a pancake-sausage supper Jan. 31. The men did all the work. About 75 per cent of the proceeds were sent to help purchase the Linotype machine for South American Colonies. Later in the evening Dr. Krahn showed slides of his trip to Europe. The World Day of Prayer was observed by the ladies of our church, inviting the ladies of neighboring churches and the girls of our high school. Mrs. Henry Buller brought an inspiring message at this time. Prof. Roy Just of Tabor College was our visiting minister, March 6. A Bethel College Fellowship banquet was held in Hillsboro High School gym at which our church joined with Johannestal, Brudertal, and Hillsboro Mennonite churches. George Stoneback was the special speaker and the Madrigal Singers of Bethel College gave a fine program. On Sunday evening, March 27, Mr. and Mrs. Milford Schmidt showed pictures of their 1-W work in Portland, Maine. Good Friday morning the cantata "The Seven Last Words," by T. DuBois, was rendered in our church by a community choir directed by Robert Unruh, and the accompanist being Mrs. Robert Unruh. Our pastor, Peter W. Goering, was the narrator. A high light of our Easter morning service was the Easter Carol sung by our junior choir. Two of our older church members have been laid to rest lately. Ed. H. Ewert on March 16, and Abr. D. Wiebe on April 18. The "Christian in Business" conference held in Hillsboro Mennonite Church was attended by our pastor and several business men of our church. The "School for Ushers" at Hesston in the evenings of April 21-23 was reported to have been interesting and instructive by our ushers and pastor who attended. A profitable day was spent at the retreat at Camp Mennoscah, April 24, by a large group of our men. Child consecration was observed in connection with Mother's Day, on May 8. The junior choir sang for their mothers the choral "In Thee Is Gladness." In the evening we were privileged to have three foreign students from Bethel College tell about their various countries. They were Harmina Meerdink of Holland, Armenia Urey of Liberia, Africa, and Rudi Stubenrauch of Germany. This program was sponsored by our YPU.—Mrs. G. F. Friesen, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Okla.: Our pastor and his wife have completed 10 years of service, in which the church has prospered in many ways. Average attendance, 40. This is the Kaufmans first church. They have been faithful and loyal to their calling. A dinner was given in their honor. Rev. and Mrs. Henry Hege were special guests. The young people have completed a good number of projects for children in hospitals. Seventeen Christmas bundles have been sent to MCC. Bethel College sponsored a hamburger fry May 5, at Hydro. Several churches were represented. Close to three inches of rain fell recently and we do thank our Heavenly Father.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

—First Church, Upland, Calif.: April 17-22 we enjoyed spiritual blessings from meetings conducted by E. G. Kaufman, who with our pastor Paul Goering, Nate Cross, and W. B. Klinger, left directly after the last service to attend the California Mennonite Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conference at Paso Robles, Calif. Sunday, April 24, Albert Epp, student at Fuller Seminary at Pasadena, Calif., preached for us in the absence of our pastor. May 1 we observed General Conference Sunday, our pastor preaching on the theme, "Our Unity in Christ," which was a challenge to every listener. That evening we enjoyed pictures featuring "PAX Service in South America." These pictures were sent home by Bruce Boshart, who is serving in that unit.—Mrs. Joel Bachman, Corr.

—First Church, Chicago, Ill.: The Men's Fellowship presented a play May 15, entitled "God Will Lead Us," directed by Edward Berg. The Young People's Fellowship sold enough cards to purchase a new mimeograph machine for the church. The Women's Missionary Society gave a "Mother's Spring Banquet," May 13. We were shown slides on "Mothers of Many Lands," by Mrs. Bertha Harder.—Mrs. Ella White, Corr.

—First Church of Clinton, Okla.: John Esau, evangelist from Reedley, Calif., was with us from April 24 to 30. His service was enjoyed by all. All the young people went to Geary Okla., for the Church Workers' Conference, April 29. They gave a skit about young people's work. May 5, the Gomezs and Borthtols, missionaries from Old Mexico, showed pictures, and also brought a message in song and music. May 8, the Oklahoma Bible Academy students gave us a musical program. May 9 the young people met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ewald Schmidt to finish the church signs. Although it was raining they put in a full evening's work. We have had a wonderful rain recently. We feel it is a gift from God. Although the wheat is very poor, it is very encouraging to have the rain for the spring crops. May 11 a Sunday school meeting was held in the church. Pie and coffee were served at the end of the meeting.—Mrs. A. P. Schmidt, Corr.

—Friedensfeld Church, Turpin, Okla.: The first Thursday in May we had Ladies' Aid all day meeting. We packed clothes for relief and the Salvation Army. We also cut blocks and rolled bandages. The birthday of Mrs. H. B. Regier was celebrated by song and refreshments. May 5 the young people of our church presented a one-act play, "He Came Seeing." The story is based on the account of the blind man healed as found in John 9. They did very well. We wish to thank our young people for repairing some of our hymnaries. Mr. and Mrs. Menno Ediger visited the Home Builders class May 9. After refreshments everyone took part in playing of games and enjoying the fellowship. Mrs. Ediger read two Low German readings.—Mrs. Chester Windsor, Corr.

Film Review

Thy Will Be Done, black and white, 16 mm., sound, available from Religious Film Association, 220 W. Monroe, Chicago, Illinois, rental $8.00.

This film tells the story of a young medical missionary who is unable to do effective work in China because of insufficient funds to buy the necessary medicine he needs in a cholera epidemic. Many people die including the wife of an older missionary simply because the doctor doesn't have the necessary funds.

The young doctor feels that it is not God's will that these people die as a result of insufficient support from his denomination. Thus, he spends his furlough in America raising funds for the work and returns to China with the needed medicine. He and the senior missionary kneel in a church sanctuary giving thanks to God for His guidance and provision.

The picture is somewhat dated by references to the Second World War but these references do not hinder the message of the picture. This film tells an interesting story in a moving way and also gives a challenging appeal for the support of missionary work. The film was produced by the National Council of the Episcopal Church but has no denominational references.

MEN'S BROTHERHOOD AIDS SOUTH AMERICAN PROJECT

Newton, Kansas. A few days ago Ponta Grossa, Brazil, in which is located an Evangelical print shop, witnessed an unusual event. A linotype arrived there and was set up in the print shop. The linotype was nearly new and one of the last ones available to be shipped from the USA to Brazil at a government subsidized price. The cost of subsequent linotypes shipped there has been tripled.

Of even greater significance is the fact that the Evangelical print shop which had thus far been doing all its printing by setting the type by hand now has a linotype in operation. It is in this print shop that the paper Bibel und Pflug (Bible and Plow), which is gradually becoming the medium of communication for all Mennonites in South America (Brazil, Paraguay, Uruguay, Argentina) is being printed. The editor of the paper, Dr. Fritz Kliewer, works under an editorial board composed of representatives from all Mennonite settlements of South America. This paper was started in 1954 and is the first South American Mennonite paper which attempts to serve all Mennonite groups in all countries. Dr. Fritz Kliewer, a well-known educator among the Mennonites of South America, is well qualified to do this job.

The linotype, which cost over $4,000, was purchased with money contributed by the Western District Men's Brotherhoods and some other agencies of the General Conference Mennonite Church. It is being used to print Bible und Pflug and other literature for the Mennonites of South America, and in addition to this is being rented out to the Evangelical print shop to print other materials. The income from this linotype is being used to reduce the cost of publishing Bibel und Pflug.

We here in North America take it for granted that the mail brings us more papers daily and weekly than we are able to read. One linotype more or less does not concern us. Out there one linotype makes a world of difference.

The Cover Picture

The Inman Mennonite Church is an outgrowth from the Hoffnungsau Church. The first church building was erected in 1908; the congregation was organized in 1921. As early as 1939 a building fund was started for the erection of a new church.

Ground breaking services were held May 19, 1953, and cornerstone laying services December 20, 1953. The first Sunday school class was held in the new church May 9, 1954. A farewell service was held in the old church on October 31, 1954, after which services were held in the basement until its dedication.

The new building was formally dedicated March 15, 1955, with Erland Waltner of Bethel College preaching the dedicatory sermon. The dedicatory service was conducted by the pastor, Ben Rahn.

The building is 38 by 100 feet with a 26 by 38 wing on the one side. It contains 15 classrooms, mothers' room, church library, Sunday school office, and minister's study. The seating capacity of the main auditorium is about 325 with a total of about 550 with the overflow and balcony. Approximately 5,000 hours of donated labor was contributed.

3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

SLIGHT IMPROVEMENT IN AUTO DRIVING

There were 3,000 less traffic deaths in 1954 than in 1953. This is the first year since 1949 to see a decrease in the death toll from auto accidents. But still the traffic deaths totaled 35,500 last year, according to the report by The Travelers Insurance Companies. This is still over 97 traffic deaths a day throughout the year.

Saturday is the most dangerous driving day of the week. Thirty-nine per cent of the deaths and thirty-five per cent of the injuries occurred on Saturdays and Sundays of last year.

Three out of four auto accidents happened to passenger cars driving in clear weather on dry roads, and 78 per cent of vehicles involved in fatal accidents were traveling straight ahead.

Drivers under 25 years of age were involved in more than 24 per cent of last year's fatal accidents, even though they constitute only about 14 per cent of the total of all drivers.

The pedestrian record also shows a slight improvement for the fourth consecutive year. Pedestrian deaths were reduced to 7,700 in 1954 compared with 8,600 in 1953. Crossing between intersections, "jaywalking," remains the chief cause of pedestrian deaths and injuries.

While the mechanical and safety devices of the automobile are being constantly improved, there has not been a corresponding improvement in the main cause of practically all these accidents—the drivers.

No one knows how many traffic accidents are caused by drinking drivers, but everyone knows it is a major problem.

The above facts and the causes involved should be material for a strong sermon in each church about this time of year when people are making their vacation and travel plans. If it is objected that this is not a proper theme for a sermon, it should be noted that we preach against killing people in war; we preach the importance of preventing people from dying by starvation, why should it not be proper to preach about preventing the taking of human life by careless driving? Life is sacred and any cause of careless taking of another's life should be a proper theme for a sermon.

It might be well to read again the "Motorist's Prayer" found in the May 3 issue of The Mennonite.

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS

By this time many churches are giving serious thought to or may just have completed, their term of daily vacation Bible schools. This is one of the most fruitful as well as one of the most necessary parts of a church program. It is worthy of the very best a church can give it.

The important factors in making such a school a success are the courses taught and the teachers themselves. As to the former, fortunately we now have a series of courses that have been prepared with special thought to our needs and beliefs. Our Board of Education and Publication has worked hard on such a series and has something really fine to offer.

As to the matter of supplying the needed teachers, some churches experience difficulties here. Public school teachers, having just finished a year of teaching, sometimes hesitate to plunge right in again. Others who may qualify may find themselves with such jobs or situations which makes it almost impossible to give this work the time it requires.

But wherever possible, the opportunity to have a part in this work should be accepted, even if at considerable sacrifice. The good that may be done, the lessons taught, the bent given the growing character, are all matters of eternal significance. It is a great task to teach in a daily vacation Bible school, but it has its great rewards and results.

CONNECTING THE BOILER TO THE WHEELS

A beginning student, attending a prayer meeting for the first time, was much impressed by the fervent prayers of those in attendance. But when later he noted how they lived and talked and acted during the day's routine, he concluded that "the boiler was not connected with the wheels."

It is one thing to become all tense about religion and give a fervent outlet in words, but it may be quite another thing to get our profession connected with the wheels of everyday living.

Which is but another way of saying that Christianity is a religion to be lived, not merely to be talked about. It may be a pleasure to join in singing the great hymns of loyalty and consecration, but all of life should be a hymn of consecration and devotion. Religion must make the wheels of life go around in the right direction or it is not the real thing.

To be rude or unkind to our friends, to become irritated with the slightest provocation of our neighbors, to take advantage of another in business dealings, cannot be righted by merely praying fervently at a public prayer meeting. It requires genuine repentance and the forgiveness of God and the wronged person in all sincerity and humility.

Christianity is living the Christ life, and consists in being a faithful witness of His life and teaching, not by mere words, but by everyday living.

Christians With Conviction

II. ABOUT JESUS CHRIST

JACOB J. ENZ*

Jesus Christ is central and crucial in Christianity. On Him our faith stands or falls. For this reason Christians ought to know what they believe about Jesus Christ and why. This article is intended to deal with some of the Scriptural evidence concerning Christ's nature and work and how this affects every aspect of our faith and life.

When we read the Gospels we find incidents that point clearly to the fact that Jesus was a man. He was born as an infant. He grew up as a child being subject to His parents. He was baptized. He was tempted. He worked, teaching and healing. He was hungry. He suffered. He wept. He died. Again and again Jesus speaks of himself as the "Son of man."

This Amazing Difference

On the other hand, Jesus does not refuse Thomas' testimony when He places his fingers in the nail prints of his hand, in the pierced side of Jesus and confesses, "My Lord and my God," John 20:28. There are many points at which the Gospels show clearly that Jesus was not merely man. He was born as any other infant, but Matthew and Luke give clear witness that He was not conceived as any other human being. He was born of a virgin, conceived of the Holy Spirit. Luke indicates how He was subject unto His parents, but also how He astonished the teachers with His astounding wisdom at twelve.

He was baptized of John like others, but only on Him did the dove descend with the voice from heaven saying, "Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased," Mark 1:11. If we turn to Hebrews (4:15) it is pointed out that He was tempted "in all points" as we are but remained without sin. When He taught, men saw the tremendous difference between the authority with which He taught and the lifeless teaching of the scribes (Matthew 7:28, 29). When He healed people He performed not only the miracle of healing but also the miracle of forgiveness (Mark 2:1-12). He suffered in that His blood was ". . . shed for many for the remission of sins," Matthew 26:28); in His suffering He suffered for others. He died; but, He rose from the dead according to the united witness of the Gospels. He ascended into heaven and in that experience made it possible for the Holy Spirit to enter powerfully into the life of the disciples (John 16:7; Acts 2).

Thus Jesus Christ is both God and man. This, as we shall see presently, proves to be the basis for the saving power of the Gospel, the mandatory character of the teachings of Jesus, the significance of the church, the hope of God's final triumph, and the obligation for world-wide missions.

Christ and the Saving Gospel

Being both God and man Jesus' life, death, and resurrection are effective in behalf of our salvation. Jesus specifically stated that He came to save man (Luke 19:10). He insisted it was through His death that this was to be accomplished (Matthew 26:28). When God raised Him up at the resurrection there was evidence that He accomplished what He set out to do. "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself," 2 Corinthians 5:19. Because God was in Christ we know that the final word has been spoken concerning the forgiveness of the sins of the repentant sinner. In the blood of His Son, God was pouring out himself for our sin. What more could be done to banish our guilt? The conscience of the repentant, believing individual may here find complete rest! The refusal of Christ, on the other hand, would involve the terrifying alternative which the New Testament portrays as something which by all means must be avoided—that eternal separation from God called hell. Sin is real and eternally damaging and destructive of the human soul, but God loved and gave that we may believe and live! (John 3:16).

Christ and His Teachings

When we believe that "God was in Christ" we are also led to a deep conviction regarding the mandatory character of the teachings of Jesus. As Son of God His teachings come with the authority of Heaven. In Jesus God is speaking. As the words and commands of God they are as eternal and unchangeable as God himself. Usually there is little question about the eternal authority of Jesus' teaching. But the question is often raised as to whether God expects us to follow these teachings now. Is love to enemies and a continual spirit of forgiveness meant for us now? Does God really expect us to "take no thought for your life"? The human side of Jesus gives us the help here. If Jesus obeyed, and we have accepted Him as our Master, then we have no other alternative. If Jesus became man to bring God to us in salvation, would it not follow that in the realm of His teachings, He became man in order not only to make known the will of God, but also to show the possibility of a man doing the will of God?

Christ and the Church

In John 17:23 Christ prays in behalf of His disciples that He may be in them. This emphasis on identification of believers with their Lord is emphasized in 1 Corinthians 12:27 where Paul says we are the body of Christ. The humanity of Christ has enabled God to draw us into himself and thus make us as individuals and as a group of disciples the very manifestation of God in the world today. This makes the church crucial in the world. It is not simply a fellowship of people with a religious concern; it is Jesus Christ alive, living, working, teaching, helping, and reconciling in our present world. In the redeemed fellowship of the believers, God through Christ is in the world today. Salvation is more than a deliverance from the godless; it is a participation in the nature of God through Christ in the midst of

Have We Lost the Vision?

JOHN P. SUDERMAN*

"And he (Jesus) took a child, and set him in the midst of them: and when he had taken him in his arms, he said unto them, Whosoever shall receive one of such children in my name, receiveth me: and whosoever shall receive me, receiveth not me, but him that sent me," Mark 9:36, 37.

"Then were there brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands on them, and pray: and the disciples rebuked them. But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven," Matthew 19:13, 14.

Lately there has arisen a great interest in child evangelism work. This field is not necessarily new, for here and there in the past there have been movements along this line. It is sadly true that we have thought of children as being too young to understand the things of God. Some have even taken the attitude that the child must become acquainted with the things of this world and then make his own decision as to whether he would be a Christian or not. Another opinion is, "If you can get the parents first to join the church, you will also get the children."

The influences outside of the Christian fold upon the children are mighty strong. The tobacco and liquor interests appeal to the children to think nobly of their products. Television presents its productions and the little three-year old knows how to tune in on exciting pictures, not realizing the harm that comes to its impressionable mind. There are as yet very few good programs televized in comparison with the ones which are questionable.

God has throughout the years saved children, a fact we need to recognize. A little boy about six years old, whose father was a preacher and soul winner, sat in one of his father's meetings. The father asked any who wished to be prayed for to raise their hands. Among others his own little boy did so, but no notice was taken of him—"too little to understand." When later those seeking the Lord were asked to go into another room, he got up to go. His father told him to run away home. When at last the father reached home he found his little son inconsolable because: "I wanted to come to Jesus and Daddy wouldn't let me." The little lad was quite broken down, and father and son together sought and found the Lord's forgiveness.

If we want to go forward with God in His Word, we must accept the words of Jesus concerning little children. We honor Him when we believe that "of such is the kingdom of heaven," and then do our God-given task of making Christ known to them. We must realize that children can be saved now. If we have full faith in God's Word, there will be success in child evangelism. Little children are willing and ready to open their hearts to the Savior. They are anxious to be led on in Bible knowledge. They pray touching and believing prayers immediately to their new-found Friend and Savior.

How is child-training looked upon by other than non-Christian groups? The Indians initiate their children early into their heathen rites. The Jews never neglected any of their children. In their Talmud, the Jewish book of wisdom, they have this statement: "By the breath of children the world is preserved."

The Catholic Church says: "Give me a child until it is seven years; then you may have it and it will remain Catholic." Sall Russ Moss has well said: "From the hour of the physical birth to the day of his spiritual birth there is not a moment to be lost." At a certain stock show one farmer repeatedly took the first prize with his sheep. When asked how he did it, he said, "I take care of my lambs." JESUS asked Peter, "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these?" Peter saith unto Him, "Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my lambs."

The parable of the one lost sheep among the hundred in Matthew 18, was spoken in connection with the child text, indicating how much Jesus was concerned about the salvation of children.

There is much evidence in the world that God's Spirit is brooding over the children of today. More and better Sunday school and daily vacation Bible school material is being produced. During the last twelve or fifteen years the summer Bible camps for children have been increased. More good material for bringing the child to understand the gospel story is available.

God has also been pleased to raise up various agencies dedicated to the work of child evangelism. Such organizations as the Child Evangelism Fellowship, the Pacific Coast Children's Mission, and others are a proof that it is God's will that children of today must be won for Christ. Many of us are at least somewhat familiar with the Bible memory work done by the "Go Ye" Mission in Oklahoma and by the Children's Bible Mission where some of our missionaries are at work. Many others could be mentioned.

Child evangelism is usually an interdenominational endeavor, though it helps the churches. The churches furnish the workers and the children won are referred to the churches of their choice.

The question may arise in your heart, "What can I do to help win the children of our community for Christ?" If God lays it upon your heart to do something, you may be assured that He will also guide you in it. Any one who has any training to impart knowledge is a valuable person for such work. Then there are those who can pray. Faithfulness is a priceless gift: always on time, always carrying out the assignments, always looked up to by children, and always dependable. Others are blessed with a lot of ideas, and that may be your part in this ministry. Or if you are an artist, a musician, stenographer,

Loyalty to Christ

AARON J. EPP*

(The Pacific District Conference Sermon, condensed)

Among the last words that Jesus spoke before ascending into heaven were these . . . "And lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world."

This we preach—this we believe. In the November 8, 1954, issue of Time magazine the report was given of the 85 musicians who assembled on the stage of Carnegie Hall. There was the usual hush which precedes the appearance of the conductor. But no conductor appeared. Instead the big orchestra began to play to a full house and an empty podium. The group was Arturo Toscanini's famed Symphony which NBC dropped last year when the Maestro retired. Superbly trained, the men played with perfect balance and beautiful phrasing as if the Maestro himself were conducting. Afterward they received a great ovation. They had played under his leadership so long that without his physical presence his spirit directed them and when the score read pianissimo, they played pianissimo.

Even so, as we learn from Jesus in the New Testament and through the discipline of prayer, His unseen Spirit directs us so that our life is music instead of noise, harmony instead of discord. And even when we come to an unfamiliar passage we know how to play it because His Spirit directs us. We, today, are dependent upon the leading of the Holy Spirit. We are adherents to the Christian faith and Christianity does not hesitate to make demands upon its people.

Paul wrote to the Corinthians, "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong. Let all your things be done with charity," 1 Cor. 16:13, 14.

The Corinthians tended toward false security, reliance upon gifts and teachers; so the apostle said, "Watch ye." They were wavering in believing the gospel which Paul preaches; so he said, "Stand fast in the faith." They were but "babes" so Paul incited them to seek more qualities of manhood, "Be courageous." They were enfeebled by false doctrine, Church abuses, irregularity of spiritual life; so he said, "Be strong." They were more remarkable for jealousy, rivalry, contempt, and pride than for Christian grace; so Paul said, "Let all that ye do be done in love." Corinthian perils are our perils. The Corinthian need may be our need.

I. "Watch ye"

1. First of all he calls their attention to watchfulness. This is a summons to understand our time and its significance, to discern clearly and unconfusedly the issue of the present hour. We are called by our loyalty to Christ to see with clear and undeceived vision the conflict between falsehood and the Christian truth.

Be not deceived—understand the time.

a. In the mind of the Seventh Day Adventist "Watch ye" usually means, looking for the coming of the Lord and regardless where he begins, he will always end by saying that it points to the coming of the Lord. Basically, we have adhered to this concept also, but have been more concerned with the Apostles, Paul and Peter, that the watching has reference to that which we find in 1 Peter 5:8, "Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour." If we can watch for this, we will certainly be watching for the day of the Lord.

b. That is, we who are of the day should be awake lest we succumb to false teachers, to bad examples, or unholy influences. We should realize that these things are possible. But not only do we need to fear dangers from without but they also come from within. We often tempt ourselves, often deceive ourselves. Our greatest enemy as a rule is not without, but within.

2. There is also another sense in which we need watchfulness—and that is to watch for God's blessings and opportunities, for they often must be seized instantly or not at all. And what makes it more difficult, these blessings often come disguised. It is only the sharp eyes that notice the king's purple beneath the peasant's coat.

a. Watchfulness certainly means a continual expectation of some wonderful opportunity which is liable to be presented at the most unlikely time. Watchfulness involves study, and an habitual attitude of putting one's whole mind and will upon the subject in hand, so that when a crisis comes, as the boys say, "he will be all there."

b. The watchful man knows that the day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night. The Lord himself said, "And what I say unto you I say unto all. Watch." As it were we have almost lost the awed sense of being on the verge of some mighty and glorious manifestation of God. God has certainly revealed himself marvelously in the realm of matter, would He then not be able to do it in the realm of the Spirit?

II. Stand Fast in the Faith

What faith? Paul's answer would be clear: "Faith in the Divine Lordship of Christ." The question has been raised in the time of our Lord here upon this earth and has been raised ever since. Is Christ—God coming down to humanity or man lifting himself to God? If it is the former we have a gospel. If it is the latter, we have a despair.

Our concern is not only that Christ will be received as the Savior, but received as Lord of life. "For to this end Christ died and lived again, that he might be Lord both of the dead and of the living," Romans 14:9 RSV.

If this is true then we will not be vacillating, wavering Christians, "tossed by every wind of doctrine." Our faith must be deeply rooted in Christ, lest persecution or prosperity carry us astray. He who is not steadfast in the faith cannot grow spiritually, is a stumbling block to others, offends his Lord and spoils his own spiritual joys.

III. Be Courageous

"Quit you like men." Where did Paul get those words? They were the rallying cry of the Philistines when God let them punish Israel and the ark was taken; "Be strong and quit yourselves like men, O ye Philistines."

Years later Jacob appealed to his brother Abishai in an hour of national crises: "Be of good courage, and let us play the man for our people, and for the cities of our God," 2 Sam. 10:12 RSV. Joshua also used the words, "Be ye therefore very courageous . . . ," Joshua 23:6.

Paul was not less a man because he was a Christian and he did not hesitate to make a man's appeal to Christian men. As Christians and as men, loyalty to Christ calls us to fearlessness, to honesty, to the full measure of duty and devotion.

IV. Be Strong

This is one of Paul's favorite appeals. "Be steadfast, immovable," "Be strong," "Stand fast in the Lord and in the strength of his might." He assumes a conflict. When we are bidden to be strong, then we often feel our weakness most.

But where, in this spiritual conflict and for this conquest over spiritual evil, is the power to stand and to prevail to be found?

Christ is our power. Our only source of power is in Him, in His cross, and in His resurrection.

V. Let All That You Do Be Done in Love

Several questions come to us immediately—Do these things count—What is the purpose of these acts and do we do all of it in love? He only really lives as he acts; inactivity is death. But while the acts of men are numerous and varied, the stimulating and controlling spirit should be one, and that spirit is love.

Love is a principle of action. We know how much human love can effect and it, of course springs from divine love. This divine love is expressed supremely in Jesus Christ. While He was here on earth love gleamed from His countenance, spoke in His tones, flowed from His presence and was wrought by His hands and love then finally led Him to the cross.

Our authority to love comes from Christ. It was His new commandment, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples—that ye love one another." Human love can effect great things. And divine love is the motive which God himself has appointed for the renewal and salvation of our humanity.

There is no limitation in the language of the text; "Let all that ye do be done in love!" This is a grace not to be displayed only on certain occasions or in certain relations. Not until we adopt it for ourselves universally, can we satisfy our Lord.

Conclusion

If we have a real love toward God and man, it will become easy to live in watchfulness; we will not want to relinquish our faith; our Christian manliness will rapidly develop; and we shall be strong, for we shall be like God.

Flashes of Thought

The Eternal Rock

Walter Gering

It was dark—absolutely dark. Not one ray of light could be seen anywhere. While the lights had been burning it had been a weird experience. The thought of being down deep in the bowels of the earth, surrounded by great massive rocks and lurking shadows was enough to create an uneasy feeling. There had been many interesting sights. Those long, fingerlike formations hanging from the walls were a sight to behold. The winding tunnels and the little streams of water trickling down the sides caught the fancy of all who followed the guide. Now suddenly it was dark—absolutely dark. The entire group was hushed into silence.

There are times in life, too, when it seems as though all the lights have gone out. For miles we have traveled in the light. While the way has often brought on uneasy forebodings, yet there has been the warm assurance of the light of God's Holy Word to cheer the anxious soul. Then suddenly the lights have gone out; darkness—utter darkness—has cast its shadows upon our way. Not a ray of light has pierced the shadows. We have been sobered into silence.

So it was, deep in the heart of the earth. And in that darkness came a never-to-be-forgotten experience. Like the sound of angels' voices came the melody: Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee.

And then far off in the distance it seemed a ray of light pierced the thick darkness. Somewhere a little light had gone on. As the melody of the hymn grew stronger the darkness seemed to disappear. Slowly but surely the light grew stronger and flooded the cave with its brilliance. Once again it was light.

How often in the darkness of life's night there comes the sound of a melody, pointing the way to the Eternal Rock of Ages. The threatening boulders, the terrifying darkness lose their power and once again it is light.

THANK GOD FOR THE ROCK OF AGES

Budget Receipts During First Four Months

Taking a second look at the Stewardship Chart for the first four months of 1955, appearing in the May 31 issue of The Mennonite, we see that whereas receipts for the Young People's Union went 7 per cent OVER their budget, Board of Education and Publication receipts dropped 16 per cent BELOW theirs. The other three boards went only 8 per cent below their budgets. Dollarwise the receipts were encouraging, for even though receipts did not meet the budget total cash received for the four boards was $8,500 more than a year ago. —A.J.R.

We Attend the Anniversary Celebration

HILDA EDIGER VOTH

Seventy-five years of mission work! That in itself perhaps would not be a cause for much celebration. The one thousand souls who were won to Christ in these years—that's the cause for the real jubilee held on the Oklahoma mission stations from April 10-24.

After leaving my parental home, which was the mission station at Clinton, Oklahoma, in 1938 I settled down to a rather ordinary type of living in a large Mennonite community in Kansas. I am now on the giving end of mission work with little opportunity of actual contact with the Cheyenne Indians with whom I shared church benches throughout my childhood. However, when the first reports of a jubilee in Oklahoma were but rumors my husband and I made plans to attend. Others would go out of curiosity perhaps but I was going home!

My husband and I could manage to be gone only the week end of April 22, 23, and 24. According to all reports the preceding eleven days had been filled with inspirational messages, dinners, reminiscences, etc., by the Christians at the various mission churches. My mother, Mrs. J. B. Ediger, spent the week as a guest of the Rev. and Mrs. Arthur Friesen, Clinton, in the house she occupied for forty years. She spoke repeatedly of the impressive candlelight consecration services held in the Clinton church on Tuesday night.

On Friday forenoon, April 22, we attended the services in the Arapaho church at Canton, followed by a fellowship meal prepared by the ladies of that church. Rev. and Mrs. H. T. Neufeld, former workers at Fonda and Canton, also attended. The tour that followed included the new church and parsonage in Seiling; the old Indian school at Cantonment and the old church near it. These are not being used now but were of interest as far as the history of our mission work is concerned. Here Mrs. Petter vividly related the pioneer work of our early missionaries including herself, her late husband, and his first wife, also Miss Agnes Williams, Rev. and Mrs. Albert Claassen and later Rev. and Mrs. G. A. Linscheid. At the nearby cemetery we gathered to pay tribute to the first Mrs. Petter who was buried there in 1910. Of more personal interest to me were the graves of Annette Williams, adopted daughter of Miss Agnes Williams, and Carl Claassen, small son of the Albert Claassens. Annette and I sometimes lost our patience as baby sitters for the younger missionary children while all our parents were busy formulating the plans that were behind this mission work we are now commemorating.

After short services at the Fonda and Longdale churches we returned to Canton for supper with Missionary Alfred Wiebes and back to the Arapaho church for 7:30 services. The church was well filled with both Arapahoes and Cheyennes, as well as white guests including our General Conference president, the Rev. Olin Krehbiel and Mrs. Krehbiel of Berne, Indiana; also the evangelist, Rev. J. J. Esau of Reedley, California. Both these men were inspirational in words and song.

Saturday was a never-to-be-forgotten day. By 9 a.m., it was obvious that the Oklahoma weather was not to be co-operative. Winds increased in velocity; dust hung heavy in the air; visibility was reduced sharply. The group that met at Hammon to begin the tour was smaller than it would have been if weather had been favorable. These few proved their genuine interest in mission work in Oklahoma. Personally, I felt it was a bit more difficult for the out-of-state guests than for us who have learned to smile through red dust as long as we can remember. Here at Hammon it was a thrill to meet Ruth Kliewer Linscheid of Arlington, Kansas, who was born, reared, and married at this very place. She is the daughter of the late H. J. Kliewers who served as missionaries for 40 years. The dilapidated house shook in the "breeze" but to Ruth and P. R. it was full of fond memories. It was heartwarming to see the mutual show of affection between Ruth and the Homer Harts who are the Indian mission workers at Hammon. Surely the true spirit of Christ erases all racial differences!

The drive to Clinton—a distance of 32 miles—was slow and hazardous due to ever-increasing dust. We were rewarded, however, for in the lovely new Clinton church the ladies had a well-cooked dinner ready for us. Here, of course, I was more interested in visiting than eating. The ladies who served the meal were my girlhood chums.

After this meal a vote was taken to see if the tour was to be continued or if the dust storm would prove its undoing. I was glad to note an undaunted spirit of going on which reflects the spirit of those early missionaries who faced untold dangers and inconveniences in their work.

Our next stop was the Thomas church nestled in a grove of trees in the Deer Creek Valley. It is comparatively new and well kept.

Next was the original site of all mission work of our General Conference—Darlington. It is in complete ruins but filled with historic interest. Rev. John Thiessen, defying dust and rubble with his natural dignity, gave a brief history and tribute of a wonderful work begun here. Across the road in lonely silence we found the graves of Mrs. H. R. Voth and infant daughter. Rev. P. A. Wedel offered fitting words of tribute here also.

The last stop was Concho, the government Indian boarding school. Here, our missionaries explained, is an opportunity to reach Indian youth with weekly Sunday school and church services, thanks to the co-operation of friendly government officials.

Sunday was a relief, weatherwise, and a milestone in mission work. The church at Canton was filled to overflowing by ten o'clock. It was a wonderful climax to the previous 13-day celebration. Indian Christians and white Christians gathered with one purpose in mind—to praise God for seventy-five years of uninterrupted mission work. The white race and the red race interlocked in an effort to win more souls to Christ! Each and every message, song, and testimony throughout the day were evidences of harmony and goodwill. Other "missionary kids" there for the occasion were Prof. Harold Linscheid, son of the late G. A. Linscheids, Mrs. Helena Neufeld Wehmiller, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. H. T. Neufeld, and my brother, A. C. Ediger.

Our thanks and appreciation go out to the Oklahoma missionaries, both white and Indian, for the excellent job they did in accommodating us, their guests. Surely such a mountain-top experience will spur us on to greater interest and more souls won for Christ in the next seventy-five years.

the living organism which is the Church, the Body of Christ.

Christ and Missions

After the resurrection Christ said to His disciples, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost . . . ," Matthew 28:18. There is only one Christ. Only to Jesus has God given universal authority. Paul has said in 1 Timothy 2:5, 6, "For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for us all . . . ." This makes the missionary task indispensable. Salvation can come only through Jesus Christ. We know of no other way that truth, righteousness, and love—the elements of eternal life—can come into the life of a man except Christ come along with them. Truth, righteousness, and love are eternally in God who has revealed himself and works through Christ. Thus our conviction about Christ brings with it an inescapable mission to tell of Christ in whom is life eternal.

Christ and History

Christ is portrayed as Lord of history in the Bible especially in view of the repeated emphasis on His second coming. In answer to the high priest as to whether He was the Christ, the Son of God, Jesus said, "I am: and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in clouds of heaven," Mark 14:62. God will have the last word in the affairs of the world and that too will be through Jesus Christ. Nothing can happen to the world that will finally take it out of God's control. The end as well as the beginning is in His hands through Christ. Thus when we are in Christ we are automatically in the place of greatest security though, of course, not necessarily exempt from suffering which He himself promised would come our way.

Jesus Christ brings God to us and us to God at every point in our experience and the world's. He makes possible the only secure foundation for life—fellowship or peace with God. Christians must not only experience this but be on the alert to show inquiring or troubled hearts the reality of saving help in the God-man—our Lord Jesus Christ.

Film Review

FOR EVERY CHILD, black and white, or color, 16 mm., 22 minutes. Available from Association Films. Rental, black and white, $8.00, color, $12.00.

This film tells the story of a Sunday school superintendent who visits the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox asking Mr. Wilcox to teach a class of juniors the following Sunday. Mr. Wilcox, although a member of the church, had planned to go fishing on Sunday. Before the superintendent leaves Mr. Wilcox promises he will get someone to take the class. He is not able to find anyone so reluctantly takes it himself.

The picture deals with transformations that take place as Mr. Wilcox accepts the responsibility of the class regularly. There are transformations in the life of Mr. Wilcox, in his home, in the surroundings where the class meets in the church, and in the faith and lives of the boys and girls.

This film presents so many emphases that are needed by young adults in every church. The film could be used for groups of parents, young adults, teachers, brotherhoods, etc. The film could be used for inspiration or could be followed with a discussion relating the principles in the story to a local situation.

craftsman, pastor, publisher, organizer, or almost any kind of worker, you can be used of the Lord. Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, the head of the FBI, has repeatedly spoken of our moral responsibility in reaching a helping hand to the children. May our hand be the spiritual hand which saves the child for Christ!

"Some would gather money along the path of life,
Some would gather roses, and rest from worldly strife;
But I would gather children from among the thorns of sin,
The boys and girls the devil tries so very hard to win.
For money cannot enter the land of fadeless day.
And the roses that are gathered soon will wilt and pass away;
But the laughing children, as I cross the sunset sea,
And the gates swing wide to heaven, I can take them in with me."

Program Helps for June

General Conference Mission Work in Japan

By MRS. FERD EDIGER

INTRODUCTION

"Let's Get Better Acquainted with Japan" is the first of two programs prepared for the Young People's Union by Missionary Mrs. Ferd Ediger, Tomitaka Machi, Hyuga shi, Miyazaki Prefecture, Kyushu, Japan. These program helps will help young people to gain some background information for the proper understanding of the mission program in that country.

Youth groups would do well to obtain a map and other resource materials which might be available at the General Conference mission headquarters, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas. Missionaries in Japan have prepared a number of sets of slides, posters, black and white pictures, and a calendar.

General Conference missionaries at present in Japan include: Mr. and Mrs. Verney Unruh, Miyakonojo; Mr. and Mrs. Pete Voran, Nichinan; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Boschman, Kobayashi; Miss Leonore Friesen, Miss Esther Paetkau, and Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Thiessen, Miyazaki; Mr. and Mrs. Ferd Ediger, Hyuga; Miss Anne Dyck, Miss Martha Giesbrecht, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ramseyer, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Derksen, all at Kobe.

INTRODUCTION

The Japan Mission, one of our newest mission fields, was first viewed by W. C. Voth, who was sent on an inspection tour by the Mission Board in the summer of 1950. Then in January, 1951, Leonore Friesen was the first General Conference missionary to set foot on Japanese soil. Since then altogether 18 missionaries have been sent out by our Mission Board to work in Kyushu's Miyazaki Prefecture.

In the last ten years or so Japan has figured largely in the shaping of world events. Conditions within the country have been changing rapidly. Hundreds of missionaries have poured in since the war. Financial and prayerful support has been promised them but do we really know and understand the conditions under which they are living and working? Do we know how to pray and give intelligently in order to meet their greatest needs? This program is designed to acquaint us with some of the geographical and physical factors that have much bearing on their way of life and work. Let us try to get a better vision of our missionaries in the setting which we shall present today.

I. LOCATION OF JAPAN

First of all let's get Japan located—in the world and then also within itself as to some of its most important cities and why they might be of special interest to us. Will you introduce Japan to us in this way, ——————————?

Location: It is a group of islands found in the North Pacific Ocean off the east coast of Asia. The Sea of Japan lies between it and Korea. From the lower part of Honshu Island it is approximately 150 miles to Pusan in Korea. From an Old Mennonite Mission station in Hokkaido (the northernmost island) a Russian-held island can be seen—a distance of about 25-30 miles. From Honshu Island directly across to California is a distance of approximately 5,000 miles.

Size: Total area is approximately 150,000 square miles, or about the size of California, with a population of about 87,000,000 people.

Latitude: Extends from about 31 to 45 degrees north. Range of latitude in itself tends to produce marked climatic contrasts between the northern and southern parts. Latitudinal differences in winter temperatures and in length of frost-free season are striking, being equivalent to those between the spring wheat area in South Dakota and the sugar cane region of Louisiana.

Number of islands: There are hundreds of islands, but four main ones: Hokkaido—northernmost island, where the Old Mennonites have mission work. Honshu—largest island, the central one, where the Mennonite Brethren Mission is located and where GC missionaries go to language school. Shikoku—smallest of the larger islands, where the Southern Presbyterians have a well-established mission work. Kyushu—southernmost island, where our General Conference has already established five mission stations. The two atomic bombs of World War II fell on two cities on this island—Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Some large cities that have more than usual interest to us: Tokyo—capital of Japan, home of the Emperor, Mennonite (Old Mennonite) Center, new home of Japan's MCC, location of one of the three Naganuma Japanese language schools. Osaka—second largest city in Japan which is well-known for its manufacturing and industry. Kobe—where General Conference and many other missionaries study language at another Naganuma language school. Most European and Asian ocean-going vessels coming to Japan dock at Kobe first. It has one of the best harbors in Japan. Yokohama—only about 20 miles from Tokyo and is an important point of embarkation as well as greatest port in Japan, an important transportation center, world's greatest silk port.

II. GEOGRAPHICAL FACTORS THAT AFFECT THE LIVES OF THE JAPANESE PEOPLE

Do you ever wonder why we live in a certain way or do things a certain way? Perhaps we do not even realize it but geographical factors affect our lives very much. What if you had been born in an area near the equator or in some extremely northern place? How would your life be different than it is today? It will be interesting to note what it is that has influenced the lives of the Japanese people.

Typhoons: Typhoons, floods, earthquakes, and fire are the four things Japanese people fear most. There is an average of two typhoons a year in Japan. Violent winds and rains beat down on the ripening rice and flood the rice fields. Typhoons cause rivers to overflow their banks which then bring death and destruction to the villages. At the first warning of a typhoon the people begin boarding up windows and reinforcing their fragile homes. Some of the poorest huts and shanties are often swept away by the wind and the rain accompanying the typhoon.

Floods: Not only do they destroy their precious crops but their homes as well, even to the extent of washing down a whole village at once. Road and railroad bridges that are washed out greatly cripple their important transportation system which hourly brings thousands to and from their jobs in the cities and children to and from schools.

Earthquakes: Japan has an average of 1500 earthquakes each year or about four shocks a day. In the Tokyo area they have one sensible shock every three days. There seems to be a continuous building program because homes and other buildings have to be rebuilt so often. One marvels at the people's courage to build and rebuild again and again.

Mountainous nature of the country: No matter where you are in Japan you can see mountains or sea or both. During the war many people fled to the mountains and lived in caves. Seventy-five per cent of the country is rugged hill and mountain land whose average slopes exceed 15 degrees and are therefore unfit for normal cultivation. They do, however, terrace the ground as high up as possible in order to utilize as much land as possible.

Climate: Japan's climate is for the most part much like the climate of the Atlantic seaboard or Mississippi Valley states in similar latitudes. Winter temperatures range from about 10 or 15 degrees in northern and central Hokkaido to 35 or 40 degrees in central Japan and 45 degrees in the extreme southern part of Kyushu. The growing season for crops varies accordingly and in Kyushu where our particular mission area is located it is about 250 days as compared with 120 or 130 days in northern Hokkaido. The number of degrees of temperature do not always indicate the actual cold or heat. In summer it is generally very hot and humid, so that many people seek refuge in the cooler regions of the mountains and the sea. In winter, on the other hand, the cold is so penetrating that one wonders how the Japanese can live comfortably in their thin-walled and breezy little houses. They can't—they suffer from the cold and must of necessity dress warmly.

III. THE MISSIONARY'S SITUATION

The important part of our lesson is to become familiar with the situation in which our missionaries find themselves. Here at home we're interested in finding out such things as: What food will they find available? What kind of transportation is used? What kind of clothing will the climate demand? What kind of housing is suitable? How about getting us started, ——————, by telling us something of what you know about their food situation. I understand it varies from place to place, but what do our missionaries write us about their experiences? (Also transportation, clothing, climate, housing, etc.)

What food is available: Vegetables—The ones most commonly found in America are also found here, although the market is definitely seasonal, and in Kyushu the variety is definitely limited, mostly to cabbage, carrots, potatoes plus a few of their own varieties. To the foreigner, corn is conspicuously absent except in places where the presence of foreigners has brought a demand for it. There are a few canned fruits and vegetables but the price is about twice as high as in the States.

Fruits: Most citrus fruits can be bought with tangerines being the most plentiful and the general favorite. Other fruits are bananas, pears, persimmons, apples, plums, and some strawberries.

Meat: To the Japanese fish is the most common, but beef, pork, and chicken are also available. Pork often has a fishy taste because fish are fed to the pigs.

Milk: Although it is said to be pasteurized in most places, yet to be absolutely safe, it must be boiled. Powdered milk is widely used.

Bread: Can be purchased almost anywhere, although unwrapped and unsliced. Many varieties of small cookies and crackers are popular, especially with the children.

Rice, noodles: Rice is still rationed and comparatively expensive so that the poorer people mix it with barley and buy a poorer grade, which is not rationed. The rice ration is enough for only about 10 days of every month, so also much black market rice is bought or the Japanese noodles are eaten as a substitute.

What transportation is available: Nearly all kinds are available! The most prompt and best is railroad, but also apt to be the most crowded. For short distances one usually travels third class where there is often only standing room. They have an interesting way of determining the price of a ticket. Third class is one price, second class is twice that amount, and first class is three times as much. To go second class special, one buys a regular train ticket, another one for the privilege of going express and finally a reserved seat ticket. One can also travel first class, second class sleeper, and first class sleeper. Fares are quite reasonable and since students can travel for half fare on third class, train travel is possible for nearly everyone. One very enjoyable feature is that trains are always on time.

Ship: Since Japan has 17,000 miles of coastline and many good harbors, it is possible to travel enjoyably by boat. Cars, trucks: both Japanese and foreign models are widely used, but in the rural areas where roads are poor travel by car is not so pleasant. Bicycles, motor scooters, motorcycle: Most plentiful but when traveling by car on narrow roads travel is difficult and slow. Airplane: Good connections between larger cities but still quite expensive.

What clothing will the climate demand: The climate demands quite a variety of clothing, with a good bit of emphasis on warm clothing—coats, suits, sweaters, woolen clothes, warm underwear, comfortable walking shoes (preferably some that can be slipped off easily especially when entering a Japanese home where they have to be taken off). Hats may be worn occasionally but are not a necessity. Since they sometimes have two rainy seasons a year you can imagine that raincoats, overshoes, and umbrellas are very important. Everyone may not own a raincoat, but chances are they do own an umbrella. In summer cool, light-weight clothes are the most comfortable. An electric fan and plenty of refreshing drinks would seem necessary but no doubt most of the Japanese people get along without them.

What housing is suitable: Two styles are available: the typical Japanese house and the foreign or Western style, which usually has a few features of the Japanese home, such as the ofuro, or Japanese-style bathroom; the entrance, or genkan. The Western style will probably have somewhat of an American style kitchen, hardwood floors and solid walls instead of their dark, crude little kitchens; tatami or grass mat floor (which is never walked on with shoes or slippers), and the sliding doors and walls made of paper and glass which allow plenty of ventilation winter and summer but no thought of sound-proofing at any time.

Both styles of houses are being used by our missionaries and though the Western style is definitely more comfortable and convenient it is possible to get used to the Japanese home and even enjoy living in it.

SUMMARY

Much of our lesson tonight has been quite factual, but we know that in order to understand our missionaries, their program, their problems, their methods of work, we must have this background of information. For instance, if we know that typhoons can be expected every year and that many people will lose their homes and possessions, then we are not surprised at a question like this which often faces the missionary: Shall we preach the gospel in word only or in deed also? Does Matthew 25:40 "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," mean that we must give physical help as well as spiritual?

This is but one of the many questions the missionary faces. Another very real one is: Shall the missionary live on the same level as the Japanese? Eat his common food? Live in his type of house and learn to know how cold must be his life in winter? These are not easy decisions to make, but by prayer and dedication the right answers can be found.

Let us this evening spend a few minutes in prayer, remembering some of their special needs and problems. (Name one item and then have a special period of prayer for it and then list the next one and so on).

Pray: 1. That they might be wholly dedicated to their high calling as God's messengers to the Japanese people.

2. That the Japanese people might respond to the voice of God speaking through earthquakes, floods, typhoons, etc.

3. That the missionaries may have the courage and physical and spiritual power to carry on the work.

4. (Any others may be listed also).

While still in an attitude of prayer, read "Our Missionaries" by Margaret E. Sangster, taken from Masterpieces of Religious Verse by James Morrison, or any other suitable poem.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The "Mennonite Singers" of Bethel College will assemble at the college Sunday, May 29, for a week of intensive rehearsals under their veteran conductor, W. H. Hohmann, prior to their second European Concert Tour.

The first European tour by a group under the direction of Dr. W. H. Hohmann was made in 1952, in connection with the fifth Mennonite World Conference at Basel, Switzerland.

The repertoire of the choir will feature a group of European numbers with some Latin and German selections, American Negro spirituals, numbers by American composers, and several hymns.

Dr. W. H. Hohmann is currently completing his thirty-second year on the Bethel staff. He has led college choirs on summer tours over most of the United States and Canada. In 1950 the Chicago Conservatory of Music granted him the honorary doctor of music degree. Dalke is himself on leave of absence from the Oklahoma mission field. His study tells of the early interest in missionary activity among the General Conference Mennonites, the work of S. S. Haury, the first missionary, the establishment of Indian schools and the progress of the work to the present time.

Second prize including an award of $15 was granted to James Waltner, senior student from Marion, S. D., for a paper on "Menno Simons and Infant Baptism," while third prize of $10 was granted to Lenore Pankratz, junior student from Mountain Lake, Minn., for her work in compiling the Penner family history and genealogy.

SIX PAX MEN SAIL FOR GERMANY

Six PAX men were scheduled to sail for Germany from Montreal, Canada, on May 30 following a week of orientation classes at MCC headquarters, Akron, Pa.

The group includes Glenn Kisamore of Harmon, W. Va.; Marvin Moyer of Danboro, Pa.; Wilson Myers of Doylestown, Pa.; Kenneth Nussbaum of Apple Creek, Ohio; Earl Schmidt of Rosthern, Sask.; and Jacob Schrock of Kalona, Iowa. After arrival in Rotterdam, Holland, around June 9 and a brief orientation period at the Frankfurt MCC center, they will be assigned to construction projects in Germany.

KOREAN ORPHAN BOYS
EAGER FOR MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

That trombone John used to play in the high school band or that violin Susan had for her first lessons—still in good shape, but just gathering dust in the attic or garage—would be a pride and joy to one of the 200 orphan boys at the Kyong San Christian school in Korea.

A project is now under way for Sunday school classes, young people's groups, MYF's, YPU's, men's brotherhoods, summer Bible school classes, or local churches as a whole to collect or buy any kind of musical instrument in good condition and easily packed and shipped. Since it's quite impossible for MCC personnel in Korea to purchase such instruments, it is thought there might be many useful instruments which persons in Mennonite and Brethren in Christ communities would like to contribute.

The boys at this Christian home and vocational training school are eager for musical instruments to play in a band or orchestra. Instruments for this project should be clearly designated for Korea and shipped to Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pa.

HOW AN MCC NURSE SERVES KOERA'S SUFFERING

Katherine Dyck of Rosthern, Sask., MCC nurse in Korea, reports challenging work in her new assignment at the Presbyterian Mission Hospital in Pusan.

"This hospital for women has 20 beds, but the average census is from 30 to 35," she writes. "I have never in all my life worked in such crowded conditions, but it is impossible to turn away patients who so desperately need help."

Miss Dyck works in the hospital in the mornings and in the baby clinic in the afternoons. Further information from her report indicates how much the services of such a hospital and clinic are needed.

"One 45-year-old mother came with her baby who weighed four pounds at the age of 1 ½ months. After the mother had been given careful instructions and powdered milk, that baby gained three pounds in two weeks and has been climbing the scales ever since. Just yesterday I got in a 3½-month-old baby who had been fed only rice water since birth. I have approximately 100 babies on the list now who come regularly every week for a check-up and a supply of milk. All of these are cases where the baby would probably starve if it were not for this help because the mothers are poor and unable to buy the expensive milk on the market.

"Our morning work begins with devotions for the staff and patients. During the day a Bible woman works with each patient. It is good to know that the physical help you are giving the needy in Korea is being followed by spiritual help which truly is the greatest part of a man's life."

THE MENNONITE is a weekly religious journal of the General Conference Mennonite Church devoted to the interest of the MENNONITE CHURCH, and THE CAUSE OF CHRIST, in general. Published every Tuesday, except the weeks of July Fourth and Christmas, by the Board of Publication of the General Conference. Nine 1-W's on Atomic-Treated Diet

After several months of preparation, the nine Mennonite conscientious objectors in 1-W service in Denver, Colo., offering themselves for research in human nutrition, have begun a two- to three-month diet of food "shot" by atomic rays.

Objectives of this experiment which began May 9 are to evaluate the energy, wholesomeness and taste of food preserved by rays emitted from mixed products of nuclear fission. This process which kills decay-causing bacteria and permits food to be kept for several months without refrigeration could have revolutionary effects in the preservation of food.

Thus these 1-W men find themselves in a project directed toward the constructive utilization of atomic energy. In this experiment they are able to make a positive expression of their conscientious objection to war by contributing to the welfare of humanity.

The nine Mennonite 1-W's currently participating in the experiment at Fitzsimons Army Hospital: Virgil Erb of Geneva, Neb.; Kenneth Goertzen of Hampton, Neb.; Wilfred Meyer of Orrville, Ohio; Eldon D. Miller of Albany, Ore.; Harry Pankratz of Inola, Okla.; Harley Rediger of Miller, S. D.; Abe Siemens of Buhler, Kan.; George Smith of Meno, Okla.; and Arlie Thiessen of Conway, Kan.

One replacement will be needed by June 15 and three more by July 15.

The volunteers have been divided into two groups. One eats irradiated foods while the other eats an identical menu of non-irradiated foods. There are three meals a day plus a bedtime snack.

At unstated times, the groups alternate each few days. At no time does any volunteer know whether his meals have been irradiated.

Officials have emphasized there is no danger in eating the food. The thirteen food items were tested by the Fitzsimons Medical Nutrition Laboratory and twelve universities throughout the country with the U.S. surgeon general. Experiments were conducted with animals.

Dear Lord and Father of mankind,
Forgive our fev'rish ways;
Reclothe us in our rightful mind,
In purer lives Thy service find,
In deeper rev'rence, praise.

THE LORD'S PRAYER

With this issue we bring to a close another monthly series on prayer, by Rev. Frank R. Mitchell. For six months these articles have appeared in the second issue of each month, showing us a deeper insight into that perfect prayer, usually called "The Lord's Prayer."

It is sometimes pointed out that there is a difference between repeating the Lord's Prayer and saying it "by heart." The mere repetition of the words without the corresponding feeling of the soul may mean little. Some ministers hesitate to have the congregation repeat it in unison for fear it will become so familiar that it loses its significance.

There is this danger, of course. On the other hand, where it is repeated "by heart," that is when it comes from the heart and is the heart's sincere desire, it cannot be prayed too often.

It does not begin as our prayers usually do, with a long waiting list of things we want God to do for us. It begins with fixing the attention on God, and being concerned about His Kingdom and His Will. Where we first get a right conception of God, our prayers may be considerably altered.

The Lord's Prayer should be repeated thoughtfully and with deep understanding, again and again. It need not grow dull nor meaningless; it can mean more each time it is uttered. Perhaps all of us should first make the request as did the disciples—the request which brought forth this great prayer—"Lord, teach us to pray."

THE TIME FOR RETREATS

To many of our young people, some summer retreat has been a turning point in their lives. Here, perhaps, they have made commitments and dedicated themselves to God and His service in a definite way. Many follow these decisions through and shape their lives accordingly. Retreats fill a large place in the life of the church.

Yet, for our people, retreats are comparatively new—only about thirty years old at best. Within the last quarter century they have become a well-organized and developed method of bringing young people face to face with the great spiritual truths and with their Lord Jesus Christ.

Committees responsible for working out the details of a week's retreat have a great responsibility upon them. But every member of the church should feel responsible. Some for giving direct help in such a program, others in sending their own children, others in promoting and furthering the whole idea, and in their prayers and faithful support.

Parents should encourage their children to attend even if it does mean extra work and expense. Children and youth attending should look upon such occasions, not merely as a week in which to "have a good time," but rather as a time to grow and develop spiritually, and face the real issues of life. It is a time to withdraw from the usual routine and be in the presence of God.

NOT FOR SALE

It is far too common a practice in white communities to try to keep out people of another race. Usually in parts of a city traditionally white, when a colored family moves into the community panic begins to spread and "For Sale" signs spring up as property owners scramble to move out of the community.

It is encouraging to note that in Kansas City recently, when this was happening a Presbyterian minister did something about it. He not only preached a sermon attacking the situation head-on, but encouraged the putting up of "Not For Sale" signs. Soon in his neighborhood such signs began to blossom forth much to the surprise of passers-by. A typical sign would read, "Not For Sale; neither my home nor my moral convictions. I believe in my neighborhood and neighbors."

These signs are doing much to stabilize this particular community. "For Sale" signs are coming down as these "Not For Sale" signs appear. The minister also called together his fellow-ministers, so that fifty, both negro and white, met to formulate plans which they hoped would help integrate and stabilize the community.

One man can do a great deal if he is on the side of God and right.

CO-ORDINATING OUR SOLICITATIONS

This is a time of building new churches and of expansion programs in general. There are being built hospitals, homes for the aged, college buildings, as well as the needed additions and improvements in our local churches. Many churches have already shouldered heavy financial burdens in their building programs.

But our Conference institutions—our schools and colleges and seminary—need yearly help to keep going. They are doing a great work and must not be neglected. Yet again and again, when representatives of these institutions ask permission to solicit funds in a church community they are informed that this is not the time, the church has its own enlarged financial program.

Yet we believe in our colleges and seminary—or at least we should. They are doing a very important work. Just because there are imperfections in such establishments is a poor reason for refusing to aid them. For every individual and every home has its imperfections. "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone."

Could there not be found some way of co-ordinating the various solicitations in a church community? Could there be a meeting of representatives of Conference and the various institutions that must depend on help from the churches, so that a general plan could be agreed upon whereby the different institutions do not solicit funds at about the same

III. CONCERNING THE INSPIRATION OF THE BIBLE

JACOB J. ENZ

Christians believe that the record of God's dealing with Israel and His manifestation of himself as incarnate in Jesus Christ is the most important record in the world. Because of the utter uniqueness of God's dealing with Israel and because God has taken up His abode in no other man than in Jesus Christ, we have come to call the record of those events the very Word of God.

No Other Full Record

Furthermore, in view of the fact that we have no other full record of these important events (though we do have plenty of archaeological and literary materials that refer to them) the Bible becomes doubly important to us as a revelation of God and His salvation for men and of His revelation concerning His kingdom.

Then, finally, Christians accept at face value the Bible's own claims for itself as the Word of God because that Word conveys the gospel which not only redeems man from his soul-destroying guilt, but also plants within his soul the resurrection life which makes new men who through the "in-as-much" of the New Testament deal with their fellow men as they would deal with the Lord himself—the very essence of the kingdom. No other message has been found capable of thus roundly converting a man.

We have said, in summary, that we believe the Bible is truly the Word of God because of its singular revelation of God, because it is the only record of that revelation, and because it is sufficient to meet the needs of man at the most fundamental level of life—his relationship to God and man.

Our Authority for Interpretation

This in no way closes our eyes to some very real problems in the Scriptures. To shut our eyes to the problems is to detract from rather than enhance the Word of God. It will also detract from the glory of Jesus Christ the Lord who is also Lord of the Scriptures, our highest authority for the interpretation of the Scriptures.

Having insisted that the Bible is the very Word of God, men may ask by what earthly logic we come to such a conclusion when we see, for example, such contrast of ethics as warfare in the Old Testament and love to all men in the New Testament. We see polygamy practiced by the chosen of God and monogamy taught by Jesus Christ. We see a Samuel cutting an Agag to pieces. When we read the Psalms praying down God's vengeance on the ungodly in the same book with Jesus' "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," we are frankly disturbed.

We need not remain disturbed, however, for the Lord Jesus himself has given us the answer by His words, by His life, and through the New Testament writings concerning the Gospel. If we are really true to the Word of God, the Bible, we shall come to the Bible as Jesus did. That He had the highest regard for the Bible (in His day, of course, the Old Testament) is clear when He apparently extended inspiration not only to the word but to the very letter. Not "one jot or one tittle" (not the dotting of an i or the crossing of a t was to pass away till all be accomplished. On the other hand Jesus did not accept the Old Testament at face value. In the Sermon on the Mount He clearly went beyond the Old Testament teaching of an "eye for an eye" by aggressive love and prayer for enemies. He also went beyond the Old Testament conception of divorce.

The Test—the Nature of Christ

Now it may well be insisted that none of us are Christ that we may make pronouncements of that nature on Scripture. And with such an observation we are in absolutely full accord. But this much we not only can but must do. We must observe that being the true Son of God (believing as we do in the deity of Christ) and being the fulfillment of the Old Testament He has authority in accordance with His very nature to pronounce thus. He tested all Scripture by His own nature. If we are faithfully to follow Him we will bring any difficulties of interpretation into the presence of the Lord Jesus as He is revealed to us in the New Testament in particular.

Only as we read the whole Bible in the light of the revelation of God in His Son Jesus Christ—in His virgin birth, teachings, sufferings, atoning death, and resurrection, as well as in the light of the presentation of Christ by the Apostles in the rest of the New Testament—will we come to a full inner conviction that the Bible has truly come to us by inspiration of God; then we will be able to learn much from the detailed and heartfelt obedience of Old Testament heroes even though in the bright light of Christ we cannot follow their examples at some points. Only then will we find the utter abandon of faith which understands the Bible to be one harmonious God-breathed whole.

A Mennonite Name

Elaine Sommers Rich

"That isn't a Mennonite name, is it?" someone asks dubiously when he has just been introduced to Brother or Sister McCammon or Tucker. Perhaps his Bible says, "Unless thy name has come down from the Dutch or Swiss Brethren, thou canst in no way enter the kingdom." And then again, perhaps it does not.

We need to recognize that although Christian discipleship may produce in a group a culture different from a surrounding society, the Church is not to be identified with a particular racial or cultural group. The Jews made such a mistake in Paul's time.

When a person becomes a member of the Mennonite church, he automatically has a Mennonite name, even though it bear not the slightest resemblance to Klassen or Duerksen.

The Doxology of the Lord's Prayer

FRANK R. MITCHELL

The Lord's Prayer which leads us into the very presence of the Father in heaven, also leads us back "in the world" (John 16:33b) praying, "Deliver us from evil." The last word of the prayer, as it came from the lips of Jesus, is a reminder that we are still confronting evil. There is a battle still to be fought. But also there is the assurance that we need not fight it alone. We may pray right here in the midst of our struggle, "Deliver us from evil," and our God will hear our prayer and give us the victory.

It was in testimony to this victory, that a doxology was added to the prayer by its early users in public worship: "For thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen." This doxology which in the King James Version we find at the close of Matthew's account of the prayer, and which has become so familiar to us by its constant repetition in the public use of the prayer is not a part of the earliest and best manuscripts of Matthew. Neither is it found at all in Luke. Almost certainly these words were not spoken by Jesus. But they are true words of praise and adoration, and none of us would be willing to omit them from the prayer as it is now offered.

To the earliest church fathers these words seem to have been unknown. When they were introduced we do not know. A doxology closely similar to this one was attached to the Lord's Prayer, in the custom of Syrian Christians, before the end of the first century. We find our familiar doxology in common use in the worship service of the second century.

The doxology seems to have been added for liturgical purposes in the church service. It is curious how this doxology helps to confirm the authenticity of the prayer. The church never would have created the prayer to have ended with the word "evil." The fact that it was felt necessary to append the doxology to make the prayer more suitable for public worship is revealing as to the divine authorship of the prayer.

The majestic words of the doxology were probably drawn from the Hebrew of the passage found in 1 Chronicles 29:11, 12. The condensing of the passage to form the doxology has strengthened it and made it most fitting and in harmony with the prayer. Certainly the early church was guided by the Holy Spirit in giving us the words as we now have them. The ancient doxology is centered in the petition for the Kingdom and rests on the confidence that God is all powerful and all glorious forever. The doxology ends with the "Amen," the Hebrew word for certainty, which seals the prayer with the faith of the pray-er.

The study of the Lord's Prayer is inexhaustible. He still stands ready to teach us. We learn to pray it best by humbly starting at the beginning, and, sentence by sentence, with willing and praying heart, seek to apply each lesson as we learn it. We must learn to pray it together. Whatever our language or race or custom, whatever our differences or circumstances, we must seek to pray it together. We must learn the prayer by our hearts and our wills, and by our minds and our hands.

I wish to make some needed acknowledgements concerning this study of the Lord's Prayer. There are scores of helpful books and articles that have been written through the centuries. Only a very small number of these have I been able to see. There have been a few excellent sources, however, that are available and which I have studied. I wish to name two or three which have been valuable to me:

Hastings' Dictionary of the Bible
Five volume set, Vol. III, pp. 141-144
Article "The Lord's Prayer" by A. Plummer

Hastings' Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels
Volume II, pp. 60-63
Article "The Lord's Prayer" by J. C. Lambert

There is also a more recent book by E. F. Scott, The Lord's Prayer, Scribners, 1951, 124 pp. $2.25. This volume is valuable and quite unique in the study of the prayer as it treats of its character, purpose, interpretation, and background.

In closing, may I say that it has been most inspiring to be privileged to study with the readers of The Mennonite this past winter. With you, I share the longing that we might continue to sit at the feet of our Lord and learn the prayer which He would teach us to pray.

The Peace of God

The story has been told of a woman who lay dying. A minister sat beside her and tried to break the news as gently as he could. He said, "The doctors think your time is short."

"Yes," she answered, "I know it."

"Have you made your peace with God?" he asked quietly.

"No," she replied, "I haven't made my peace with God."

"Then are you not afraid to die?"

"No," she answered positively.

"Do you realize that in a few hours you must meet God . . . and yet you have not made your peace with Him?"

"No, and I'm not going to." There was a strange light of perfect peace in the woman's eyes, and the minister realized there was something back of it all.

Finally she enlightened him. "Listen," she said. "I know I am dying, yet I have no fear of meeting God. I am resting in the peace which Jesus Christ made in His atoning death upon the cross, and I don't have to make my peace with God. I am included in the peace which Jesus Christ has already made."

Working Churches

A meditation by the president of the Northern District Conference.

"My Father worketh hitherto, and I work,"
—John 5:17.

This is the value which our Lord places on work. God works and therefore Jesus worked. Jesus works therefore we should work. God intended for us to be occupied in gainful activity. The great and perfect example is the work of the Father. God not only created the world, but He also sustains the world every waking and every sleeping moment. God is at work consciously and unconsciously. What is true in creation, is also true in redemption. God is at work at all times in the hearts of men working out His great salvation. The sun never sets on the fields of God's working. God does not merely begin a good work in us but He will "continue it until the day of Christ." He is the author and the finisher of our redemption.

The artist Ruskin said, "Life without industry is sin; industry without art is brutality." The farmer is not merely putting out his crops but he is a partner with the Lord. The minister is not just preaching sermons or serving the congregation, he is the shepherd of the flock. Churches are not merely engaged in activity (too often we are) but the Church is God's husbandry, a field for the Lord's cultivation. The Lord has set people together in families. There are families of Churches. Our Northern District Conference is a community and community life means work. We do not say, "He works like a wolf" or "as busy as a fly." We say, "He works like a beaver" or, "He is busy as a bee." All these last mentioned live in communities and must assume their share of labor in the community. Churches are not "lone wolves" and even evil travels in "packs." As Churches we are the flock of God. Even the body is a community as feet, hands, etc., must all work together if the whole is to prosper.

The Lord looks at the work of the Church. Christ is more searching in His gaze than the most exacting foreman. Public school projects hire an "inspector" to inspect the nature of the workman's work and to see that only good materials go into the structure. How much more does the Lord look upon the labor of our hands and hearts. This truth is repeated again and again in the Lord's inspection of the seven Churches in the Book of Revelation. Such phrases as: "I know thy works and thy labor, and thy patience . . . for my name's sake hast labored . . . repent, . . . and do the first works; . . . I know thy works, and tribulation and poverty . . . I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot." Without exception, the Lord sees the "work" of the seven churches. We need to remind ourselves that although salvation is all of grace, yet God looks at the work of the Church. Man-made rules of religious conduct can never cancel out the great truth and example for the Church, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work."

There are different grades of labor which we may mention. First, there is a slave labor. Work that must be done under the whip of necessity and the lash of fear. Some nations do not hesitate to resort to this type of labor. Israel in ancient Egypt knew what it means but their cries entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth. (Lord of Hosts or armies). The Lord does not want forced labor. When a Conference must "beg" its members to serve, such labor is of doubtful value. A pastor does not desire to recruit "slave labor." The Lord desires the glad and cheerful work of His servants.

Then, there is the work which seeks to satisfy ones desires. To equip a home and to supply the luxuries of life. Our desires may so easily become our needs. There is danger that our so-called "needs" may leave God out of the picture or make God secondary. A good rule which has been mentioned is to point one arm upwards toward God and one arm toward man. This will give proper balance.

Furthermore, there is work for works sake. Work for the sheer pleasure of being gainfully occupied. This is absorption in the task at hand. I am sure that we have all at times become absorbed in our task so that we even have lost the desire to eat. Jesus was so occupied with the work of the Father that He told His undiscerning disciples, "I have meat to eat that ye know not of." God give us this desire to work! What kind of workmen are we in the vineyard of the Lord?

Work is honorable! Many of our churches in our District are small churches. Salaries must be supported by additional labors. Where this is truly necessary it is certainly justified. Yet the so-called "white collar" work is perhaps even more demanding in the exaction of nervous energy from one's body. Thus the work of the mind must be balanced with the work of the body. Paul demonstrated the honor of this balance when he made tents for a living. His trade opened up doors of opportunity for witnessing. Most Mennonite ministers can do other things besides preaching and ministering. Jesus labored in His Father's carpenter shop. The Christian message places dignity on the labor of our hands. We need also to realize that the Christian message also places dignity on the work of our hearts and minds. Christ was not now working in the carpenter shop. We never read that He went back to the carpenter shop. Others supplied the needs of the apostolic group, among them the honorable women. It is then that He states the great truth of an incessant work.

According to the 1950 statistics, there was in the United States a laboring force of 62 million with 58 million gainfully employed. We are only a group of about 6000 adults and 2000 children in our Northern District Conference and what percentage shall we

Tests in India

Dear Mission Friends:

We want to share with you a short letter which we received from one of our Christians in India. This letter tells us something about the spiritual agony our Christians are in and the uncertainty in which they live. We would like to ask you also please really pray, not only once but often, for our fellow Christians in India. Let us also at the same time remember our Christians in China. Here follows the quotation from the letter which was written by our brother Dhani Ram in Jagdeeshpur, India. He is a teacher whom we have known for many years, very faithful in the work and a devoted friend of Christ Jesus our Lord and also an earnest Christian worker in the Christian Church of India.

> "Weakness within and difficulties and hardships from without is the present summed up condition of our churches. But Jesus comes to us walking on the sea, and immediately the ship was on the land whither they went; These are dark days. Winds are around us. The sea is rising mountain high. We are afraid. But Jesus comes to us treading under foot the forces of nature and forces of principalities. We pray for His strength, we pray for His grace, we pray that He empty us and fill us with His strength. We are sitting at His feet. We need your prayers—the prayers of Mennonites for Mennonites who stood bravely the test of the times. Please ask all our friends who have been with us in the past and our friends who have not seen us with physical eyes to take us to God in prayer."

Let us not look upon this as merely an isolated case nor as an emotional eruption. Let us think of this as something that our Christians in India have to face increasingly from day to day in all their connections and relationship with fellow man in their own home country.

school in mechanics, etc. I would be most happy to do so, but with what and how? There would have to be a special building, equipment, teachers, etc. Then we would have to charge fees like in every school and after training they would have to find jobs outside of the mission, so we would still not be solving the problem. One of the greatest things we can do is to create an initiative in our young people so that they will be willing to go outside of the mission compound and make something of their lives as well as be a living witness of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. The young people's retreats have just closed and some of these very problems were discussed. Please pray for the young people of the church in India. May God bless you as you labor for Him.

Flashes of Thought

Power Indeed

Walter Gering

It was dead; absolutely dead. For some time we had been waiting for this moment, anticipating the activity once the machinery was set into motion. We had watched them dig the preliminary hole in the ground. The young man had climbed to the top of the derrick to untangle the cords. All the necessary preparations had been made and the moment had come for which we had been waiting.

I had often visualized in my own mind the process of digging a well. I had stopped more than once along the side of the road to watch the men drill for oil. But never had I seen them dig a well. It soon became apparent from all the preparations being made that this was a different kind of procedure. This would be an interesting experience.

All things ready, the starter button was pressed, followed by an ominous silence. Instead of the loud clanging of grinding wheels there was nothing to indicate that there was any life. The battery was dead; there was no power. No machinery, however well adjusted, will move into action without a source of power at its center. There we stood, dismayed at the silence of the motor.

A few days later the young man who had climbed the derrick and had helped in the preparations left the church at the close of the service to return home. Seated at the wheel of the auto he pressed the starter button in anticipation of a quick start. There was silence—strange silence. Yes—the battery was dead; there was no power. Without that live battery the wheels refused to turn.

Joking about the fact that this had happened to him twice within the space of a few days we watched him get started under the power of a friendly push by another worshiper. How could he allow something like this to happen to him twice in a row?

Little did I realize my own situation. Late in the evening I hurried to the garage, stepped on the starter—and no response! The battery was dead. Everything else was in order; all it needed to travel down the street was the power from a live battery. Without that there was no response.

Of course I thought of the text of the morning: "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." Three times in a few hours it had been impressed upon me that all the machinery in the world, well oiled and prepared meant nothing without a source of power. That was what Jesus meant when He told His disciples to wait until they had been endued with the Holy Spirit. He—and He alone—would give life and power to their activity.

So it is today. The great forward movements of the church shall ever be dependent, not upon well organized plans and activities, but upon the energizing power of the Holy Spirit.

The Fire of God

PETER W. VORAN

It wasn't so much the fire that arrested our attention. Fires are common in Japan. Most houses are built of wood and paper sliding doors form most of the inside walls. When the fire siren sounded shortly after midnight and aroused us from our sleep we just marked it as another fire. From the excitement in the neighborhood we could tell that the fire was close so we too investigated. Looking out of the window we were fascinated by the weird shadows that were dancing against the mountain side. The fire was burning intensely. Sparks were flying high in the air as the wind carried them up and away. Each spark—the potential of another flame! It was an awesome spectacle, fearful; without words it told of a power greater than that of man. In all four houses were burned before the fire was put under control.

It wasn't so much the fire that arrested our attention, but it was the 'time' of the fire that made its lasting impression on our minds. You see, just the evening before in our Bible class at Tontokoro the Fire of the Holy Spirit burned with conviction power. Indescribable, yet present in such a way that all gathered will never forget the experience, the Power was in our midst. Looking at the fire before us destroying the homes seemed to set a seal on all that had happened the night before. It was almost like a dream. There were eighteen of us gathered together for the study of the Word. Four of us were Christians, others were secret believers, others on the verge of making decisions for Christ, the remaining ones were thinking about eternity but from their words and actions one could not determine their thoughts about Christ. The Word was opened, broken, studied and discussed. In the Word we were brought face to face with our sins and our Savior. Jesus said, "And I, when I am lifted up . . . will draw all men to myself." When Christ was exalted this night our hearts were drawn together in Him. Then the Holy Spirit fell! In what was like one voice, the group confessed their sins and accepted Christ as their Savior. For a few moments after a season of Holy Spirit directed prayer no one could say anything. We were all as in a dream. Then an uncontrollable feeling of joy spread as the Holy Spirit gave witness with our spirits that all were children of God. One word of praise was lifted to God. Not knowing what else to say, the word "Hallelujah" sounded to heaven.

Returning home we were still in a daze. The next day when Satan tried to throw doubt in our hearts as to what happened we opened the Scriptures and claimed again the promises of God. Committing the young converts to the 'grace of God' we retired for the night. Then it happened! Fire! Fire! The first thing that came to our minds upon seeing the weird effects of the fire against the mountain side was the Bible class the night before. Fire! Hallelujah! The Holy Spirit of God was confirming again that His work of exalting God and revealing Jesus Christ to men as their only hope of salvation was a sure work. All doubts vanished in that instant. Seeing the blaze before us we had no doubt about the burning buildings. They were going up in smoke. In like manner the fire of the Holy Spirit burned the dross of sin from lives the night before and transformed the repentant ones into children of light.

The following meeting with the group confirmed the work and continued the working of the Holy Spirit. We met with a new group of people. The names were the same to be sure, but the new babes in Christ were different. Faces were shining with the joy of the Lord. The fire of God had kindled in their hearts a flame to burn for eternity. Sparks from these fires are spreading in the air as the 'winds of God' continue to blow. Every spark—the potential of another flame. It tells us of a power that is completely different from the power of man. There is only one explanation. It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Fourteen lives were consumed in the love of God! This flame will not be extinguished. It is eternal. Hallelujah!

The Daily Dozen

The two pictures show us a goodly number of our potential Christian workers in our Jagdeeshpur mission school, India. These and similar young people are our hope for the future and are those whom Christ calls. "Who will go for us?" Let us remember these young people in our prayers. —J.T.

Glimpses of a Missionary's Life

Leona and I have been very busy these past months. We are very thankful that the Lord has given us strength for each day so that we have been able to do much necessary work. We often sing the hymn 'Work for the night is coming,' and how true that is. When we see the night approaching we wonder how we shall ever be able to get the Lord's work finished. That means we will have to apply ourselves in a much more enthusiastic and consecrated manner than ever before.

We have many things to be thankful for. One of these is the fact that we have been able to finish the required course of study in the Hindi language. It was with a good deal of relief and yet with some reluctance that we finished taking the second year Hindi written exams. I am sorry that I cannot give you the results of that exam as yet. We are trusting the Lord that we will have successfully made it. We were very fortunate to have six language students on the Champa Station at one time. That truly is a proof that God is expecting big things from us. Many other missions are being refused entrance to India. Because we were six students we were privileged to have the oral examination here in Champa. This suited our mothers with small children very well. We were all very successful in the orals, not that we deserved to pass. Of course finishing the required course of study does not say that language study is finished. There is much more to learn and we are striving to keep in practice constantly.

The first of January became a time of new responsibilities for me. It was then that I fully took over the charge of the workshop including the pad sheets and budgets. This is real responsibility and takes considerable time. It makes one very conscious of the required duties of a good steward of God's money. During the winter months I spent every morning at work and afternoons in language study. Since the first of April I have been spending full time in the work. There has been an excessive amount of work in the shop this winter. We have had some unexpected breakdowns. There have been two broken axles to repair. In both cases it has meant scouring the various repair shops of Calcutta and even Bombay to find the spare parts. We have been able to do this by letter, so that trips to these places were not necessary. Then recently our light plant broke down in a very serious way. We were very doubtful that the parts could be secured, but a Bombay firm was able to supply the needful. It still is not working. It seems as though there is a short somewhere which does not allow it to produce current. We hope to have that fixed this week. We have had to do very much driving this past winter so our motors need much attention.

Leona and I have both been able to help out in the Sunday school work. She is the supervisor for the primary department and I am teaching a young boys' class. This has proven to be very interesting work. At present I have a large class of about eighteen boys. Leona has turned her duties over to one of the teachers for the summer months. She and the children are in the hills at present, so I am experiencing a new role as bachelor.

I shall probably be going to the hills around June 6. There is some repair work to be done on Ellangowan House before the rains set in. I should be there to supervise the work. Starting May 23 I will be teaching a two weeks Bible course in Hindi to the young boys. I will be using the course put out by the General Conference, 'Christian Life and Conduct.' I hope the Lord will bless these feeble efforts.

One of the problems that we face constantly is what to do with the unemployment problem. There are a number of young boys sitting at home idle because there is no work. And now with the decreasing mission activities and the increasing Indian church activities, we do not have enough work to go around. Then the people say that there is a certain amount of persecution in regards to getting a job outside of the mission. One of the problems is the fact that many of the Christians feel it the duty of the mission to give them work. We must try to help them change their viewpoints. I have been approached a number of times to open a training

If It Were Not for Menno-Heim

DAVID P. NEUFELD

David P. Neufeld served as one of the MCC workers in Menno-Heim, Berlin, Germany. Since writing this experience of a Mennonite woman from Germany's East Zone, he has returned to his home in Rosemary, Alta.

I met Mrs. Meier of Germany's East Zone (we will call her that though it's not her real name) for the first time this morning. She had stopped in here at Menno-Heim, the MCC service center in Berlin, on her way home after visiting her husband who is sentenced to 25 years in prison by the Communists. In our chat she was able to tell me a little of her story.

"Both my husband and I are Mennonites from South Russia," she began. "We decided to move to Germany shortly after World War I. Three children made for a happy family until we were again in the clutches of the Communist regime. Six years ago my husband was suddenly arrested and taken to one of the worst prisons of the East Zone—one where several Mennonites have already had to lay down their lives."

"You have just come from a visit to your husband," I said, "how often may you visit him?"

"Every three months I have the privilege of seeing him for a half hour. We are first drilled on what we may and may not ask the prisoners. For instance, we may not ask what our husbands work, how many are in his room, on what he sleeps, what food he gets or whether he has been sick. All we can do is to observe our loved ones closely and ask carefully. Six months ago I noticed that his sight was getting very bad. The way he walks, the way he touches the chair before he sits down, the way he peers into the room are proofs enough for me. When our husbands come in, they are seated across a table from us. We may only press their hand in greeting. Five feet behind me sits a guard who carefully listens to every word we say. This time I had some pictures from my family along so I inquired whether I might show them to my husband. After inspection two were allowed. I showed him the pictures of the family of our married daughter and of our own little girl, now 10 years old, who hardly remembers her daddy because she was only four when he was taken from us. Of course no one under 16 may visit the prisoners."

"Do you think your husband is getting enough to eat?" I inquired. Mrs. Meier was quiet for a bit and then sadly shook her head.

"Obviously not," she said, "else my husband would not be so anxious to receive the seven-pound food parcel we may send once a month. The difficulty is, of course, that I can hardly afford to buy this food since I am sick and unable to earn anything. Only through the repeated help of Menno-Heim, the clothing and food parcels we have received from here was it possible to continue this far."

"Your husband has been in prison for six years now, Mrs. Meier, do you have any hopes that your husband will be released before the 25 years are up?"

"Yes, it will be six years in June when my husband was arrested on charges of spying, though he was never politically involved. I asked him now whether he had ever heard anything of an early release and his answer was 'no.' Sometimes we just don't know what to do. I would like to join my daughter in West Germany, but then I would never be able to visit my husband. Yet I always have the feeling that I am closely observed and it may well be that the borders will close tightly one day. I really don't know what is the best."

As she rose to go, I pressed 100 East Marks into her hand—a mere $5 that were to symbolize the concern of the American Mennonites for her and others of a similar fate. It would enable her to see her husband again in three months.

"Twice I was unable to go," she confided, "because I didn't have the money to pay the train fare. I thank you most sincerely for this gift. It will enable me to see him again on the sixth of June."

WORKING CHURCHES

say is gainfully employed? There need be no unemployment in the work of the Lord. The tasks are too great. There is work to do. The Lord gives to every man his task, and with the task sufficient strength. Why have we come to Henderson? Let us make up our minds that we have come to work. Yea, rather, let us report that we have worked!

Man is by nature a "doer." From the time the little child begins to toddle about the house to the time that he departs this life, the life span is marked by activity. But why are we so slow in the work of the Lord? Why do we not do with zeal the work of the Lord as we zealously labor for material things? Yes, from the garden of Eden to the Paradise of God, man will be busy for the Lord. Heaven will not be a place of inactivity. The lazy man will not be found in glory. All the saints will be busy for Rev. 22:3 states, ". . . and his servants shall serve him:" I am glad it is stated in that way for each of our imaginations can supply the tasks of glory. Let us then, make our days ". . . as the days of heaven upon the earth," Deut. 11:21b. Let us pray, "Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." Let us serve the Lord, for that is heaven's occupation. Thus we have come from the far-flung fields of Montana to the lake-dotted land of Minnesota, to work and to fellowship in the things of the Lord. The reason is adequate, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work."

Voluntary Service at Home

As a boy, I frequently considered my father old-fashioned because he was a minister and received practically no remuneration whatsoever. He was a minister as long as I can remember. He served on various boards and there was always the question, should he take the time and expenses for the board meetings? To him it was voluntary service; but it probably didn't have the term "Voluntary Service." Beyond that, this was nothing unusual; this was simply the way things were done.

Today I am very happy for the words "voluntary service," and for the institution, Voluntary Service. I am happy for the place and recognition it receives today. I get a great deal of satisfaction from knowing that many of our people are serving various periods of time of their own free will in the name of Christ.

However, with this new, wholesome emphasis on Voluntary Service, we have neglected the home front. I was dirty and hot, and was just going into the local cafe for a cup of coffee when I met my father, a retired minister. He noticed my appearance and wondered just what my activities included. I explained to him that today I was doing voluntary service. This having been said in a jocular vein, he asked for more details. I explained to him that I had been cleaning up trash in my yard with the truck, and as I was doing so, I noticed that my neighbors who happened to be widows also had a considerable amount of trash. So I spent the day cleaning up their trash as well as mine. He commended me and we both went about our business again.

Several weeks later at a casual meeting he mentioned with youthful satisfaction that today he had been doing voluntary service. Remembering the former incident, I jokingly asked him under which board he had served. He said:

"Today I served independently!"

A neighbor had told him of a widow in town who had complained that no one visited her and that she needed fuel and didn't know exactly how to go about getting it. Father had rented a trailer and followed a corn-sheller out of town to gather up a load of cobs for this widow. Having delivered the cobs, he stayed on to pay her a social call. And, he added, "I did it in the name of Christ."

These are homely illustrations, but they are true

Western Influence on Arab Culture

The following articles were taken from the Jordan Relief Notes, April and May, 1955.

Writers frequently call the Middle East a land of contrast. It is still the crossroads of three continents, although with improvements in air and sea transportation it no longer possesses the strategic importance of previous centuries. Here the most modern cultures are found dispersed in the culture of Abraham. One may travel down the asphalt road in a new 1955 Ford taxi and meet a bearded man clad in a long robe, staff in hand, his donkey at his side, on his way to the market place. Fields are cultivated with the same type of plows, the same ground axes, the same kind of donkeys and oxen as were used thousands of years ago. But in the Jordan Valley are caterpillar tractors leveling land and diesel-powered pumps pouring thousands of gallons of water onto the salty earth to make it produce abundantly.

Western society had made great inroads on the solidarity of the Arab culture. No longer is the typical Arab one who lives in tents and has herds of sheep, goats, and camels. It is more correct to say that there is no "average" today. Many of them are very well educated, live in modern homes, and have all the appearances of Western businessmen. Some are still the roving Bedouin with all the marks of their age-old culture. Between these two extremes are the bulk of the people, varying in the amount of education and progress they have made. The average Arab youth now has had an elementary school education; many have had secondary school. He has learned some of the English language. He is much better educated than was his father. He usually does not wear the same type of clothes as does his father, preferring the shirt and trousers to the flowing robe and the ankle length skirt. One criticism of education sometimes made by conservative Arabs is that once they send their children to school they no longer want to dress as their forefathers did.

The Western influence in Jordan is largely a result of the British Mandate of Palestine. Since the establishment of Israel and its resulting turbulence many other outside influences have appeared. Foremost is the United Nations, and now Point Four. Also are many private relief agencies which though small in scale are very influential. These groups have brought in an abundance of Western goods and methods to try to cope with the disturbances. In refugee camps schools have been set up in which up to 75-80 per cent of the children can attend, whereas before somewhere around 25 per cent could attend.

Westerners are found in nearly every area of Jordan. Fifteen years ago many areas had rarely seen Western culture. This is true particularly of East Jordan, formerly Trans-Jordan. Western culture now exists mostly in the cities. In the small villages life still goes on much as it has for centuries. But even the villagers have seen the other parts of their land where there is Western influence. They have seen Western dress, Western cars, Western airplanes, and cinerama, probably the most talked about display at the last Damascus World Fair. At present they are too poor to appreciate any of this culture for themselves. But with UNRWA and the private agencies at work they are getting new types of trees and new seed for their crops. Public health clinics make available modern medicines for their diseases and are now working on proper water supplies.

The outcome of this trend will be seen in the coming years. With the education of the masses and the increasing independence of the Arab peoples they are becoming more nationalistic. While certain aspects of their age-old culture are on the way out, others are becoming more predominant. The Arab is beginning to shift his loyalty for the family to a loyalty for the nation. Now that they have adopted Western techniques they no longer want the Western people themselves to be their leaders. Consequently there is this anti-Western attitude now present which is directed not at Western culture itself, but to Westerners themselves.

The Moslem faith is the greatest single factor in the perpetuation of Arab culture. These people were Arabs before they were Moslems, but since they came under the influence of Moslem thought they have perpetuated their culture without much change. The Koran is the standard of life in the Arab world.

What effect will Western culture have on the Moslem faith? Here we are not equating the term "Western culture" with Christianity. Is Western culture a threat to the Moslem faith? Will Moslem beliefs be thrown aside by this new culture? There are indications that such may be the case. But there are other indications that the Moslems can embrace Western culture in their religion and that it will only strengthen them in their faith. At the present there seems to be an increasing tendency to exclude non-Moslems from their society. As their nationalism is increasing, so is also the strength of their religion. This may be a transient phenomenon, and perhaps Western thought is incompatable with the Moslem faith.

Bible Truths Live Again

"And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him: . . . for they know not the voice of strangers," John 10:4-5.

One of the prettiest sights in all of Jordan is to see a shepherd leading his sheep down a hillside, through a valley, or along the main highway. The shepherd leads the way and he seems always to have the flock in perfect control. In crossing or following a busy highway, a shepherd's word will send the sheep to the side of the road or stop their crossing until the car is past. They seem so docile and obedient that I began to wonder if they were different from American sheep until one evening I had my answer.

Gladys and I were driving along one of the back streets of Jericho. As we rounded a sharp curve, our way was completely blocked by a flock of sheep. The shepherd was nowhere in sight so I blew the horn and tried to slowly move the car through the flock. They seemed very frightened and milled around all over the street from wall to wall. Not wishing to frighten them unnecessarily I stopped the car and waited. A policeman came to my rescue and tried to herd them to one side so I could pass, but the sheep continued to dart from one side of the street to the other. Soon a whole crowd of school children appeared and formed a line to clear a little lane beside the pushing, crowding flock so that I could get through, but they were no more successful than the policeman had been. Finally one little fellow used his head for he dashed into a nearby compound and returned with the shepherd who had evidently neglected his flock for a little Arab hospitality. The shepherd walked quietly up to his frightened flock and spoke one word or made a sound, I wasn't sure which, and immediately the whole flock moved to one side and stood perfectly still; as calm and unconcerned as though nothing at all had happened.

I drew a long breath of amazement and drove past. Gladys smiled and said: "Whose own the sheep are not"—Bible truths live again.

Life in an Arab School

There goes the alarm and it is already six in the morning and the sun is high above the eastern hill. So out of bed you jump, wake up the boy on duty and he in turn rings the bell to rouse sixty-five sleepy boys in the boarding house. This is the beginning of a typical day in our school, and the beginning of another day of living with and teaching Arab boys.

After they have washed there is another bell and it is breakfast time where all fall into line and then proceed into a large dining room. Here hungry young stomachs are satisfied with the native food, which often seems quite heavy for a person brought up on American food. They have all the zest and speed in eating that our life has become accustomed to in this rapid age. Breakfast is over and school doesn't begin till 7:45 so you have a chance to look over that final lesson plan for the day.

But barely have you looked and there goes the school bell. Gradually all the boys assemble from the playing fields and march into their classrooms by twos to have the roll called. Now the group of sixty-five boarders has increased to about 320 with the presence of the day boys. Each class has about thirty boys. There are six classes in the elementary school and five in the secondary.

All the Christian boys assemble in the hall for morning prayers and after this the work of the day begins and the 17 teachers are kept busy by eager students.

Let's look into this first class. Here is a boy working a geometry problem on the blackboard as the other students check his work. Yes, he worked it correctly and as a rule these boys are quite proficient at mathematics. This is the part of the world where mathematics began and they still have a pride in being able to solve problems in this universal language.

But we must go on to another class. Let's make it a science class. Here the teacher is asking why this chemical reaction took place. The boy questioned looks puzzled and stands up to quote a statement from the book. No that is not the answer. "Reason this out and find the logic in the happening" says the teacher. But this is one of the diffculties of the Eastern mind. Everything is still put to memory and not actually understood. Here the American differs, wanting to be practical; not wanting merely to memorize something. Slowly they realize what the question is and give the proper answer.

So we go from class to class seeing that this is much like any British school and being amazed at the good English the boys speak. Most of the classes in the secondary school are taught in English although in the primary section the pupils use Arabic.

At three o'clock classes are over and intramural games begin. This is the first year that this is put into practice here and the boys are only beginning to learn good sportsmanship. It seems as though they have never heard of it and it may take several years for them to understand what good sportsmanship means. The games they play are soccer, volleyball, basketball, ping pong, badminton, and the smaller ones play marbles.

Five o'clock rolls around and the boys go home. The boarding boys all head for the study period which lasts until 6:30. Then they take time out to eat typical Arab food with a surplus of mutton and olive oil. Back to study till 8:15 when it is time for evening prayers and then to bed with lights out by 9:15. Yes, another day has rolled by, but the teacher's job is not finished. While the boys are dreaming about the work for tomorrow the teacher is busy planning and organizing.

So pass the happy moments and the sad. As one reflects he sees that experience is still the best teacher.

ones. We have young people serving the needy from coast to coast and around the world. This is wonderful and it should be so. But while doing so, often our church officers and our community officials work very hard to find people who will do the same little things at home. Many small town officials would simply be thrilled if a retired minister, teacher, or farmer would say:

"I have lived the good life, have done well, and whenever I may be of some service to our town, please feel free to call on me."

Many church officers or ministers would feel greatly relieved if some young person would say:

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

A highlight of the week of May 22 was the last choir tour of the year. On Sunday morning the college choir of forty-four students, Mr. G. Wiebe, the director and Mrs. Wiebe, the accompanist, presented the oratorio, "St. Paul," in the Homewood Church. From there the group traveled to Gertna to attend the Mennonite Collegiate Institute graduation exercises. In the evening the choir gave its second rendition of the oratorio in the Springstein Church. Rev. G. Lohrentz, a college instructor, accompanied the group on tour. The college has had several visitors during the past week. Rev. H. Funk, a graduate of the college, and at present pastor of St. Vital Mission Church, gave the students a message in chapel service on Thursday. The following morning Rev. B. Ewert spoke to the students.

On Tuesday, May 24, Rev. J. J. Thiessen, who had come to attend the college board meetings, gave the students a message based on Heb. 13:9. After the message Rev. Friesen congratulated him in the name of the college, on the receipt of his honorary doctor's degree, given to him by Bethany Biblical Seminary in Chicago, Illinois.

The College Board met in the morning and afternoon. The main item on the agenda was to decide whether or not to start the building of the new college. Those present were: Rev. J. J. Thiessen, Rev. I. I. Friesen, Rev. Wm. Enns, Rev. G. G. Neufeld and Rev. D. D. Klassen. Meeting with the board were Rev. H. Wall, Rev. J. Toews and Mr. Schellenberg, the contractor.

After the board meeting, Rev. Thiessen told the assembled students of the board's decision to begin the construction of the new college building in the very near future and of the plans for the dedication of the grounds on June 12.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Granger Westberg, well-known chaplain of the University of Chicago Clinics, is slated to teach the course in Pastoral Care at the summer session of Mennonite Biblical Seminary of Chicago, June 14 to 22. Westberg's course is scheduled in the second term of this six-weeks graduate-level summer school featuring courses taught by Dean Harold S. Bender of Goshen College Biblical Seminary, Erland Waltner of Bethel College, and Don. E. Smucker of Mennonite Biblical Seminary, and others. Anyone still completing his seminary work will find it possible to gain as much as eight quarter hours of recognized credit.

Bender on the Anabaptists

Anabaptist Research taught by Dean Bender will be a highlight of the first term, June 14 to July 1. The Epistle to the Ephesians will be taught by Erland Waltner, widely known pastor and Mennonite leader teaching at Bethel College, North Newton, Kansas. S. F. Pannabecker, former missionary to China and president of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary will teach Missions throughout both terms. Preaching from the Bible, the other offering in the first term, will be taught by Jacob J. Enz, Hopkins-trained Old Testament instructor of Mennonite Biblical Seminary.

Smucker on Communism

Don. E. Smucker, well-known ethics professor of Mennonite Biblical Seminary will direct a course in Christianity and Communism during the second term, July 4 to 22. The Gospel of John will be taught by Howard Charles, Edinburgh-trained New Testament professor at Goshen College Biblical Seminary. Taking especial note of recent sensational finds by archaeologists, the course in Archaeology will be taught by Jacob J. Enz.

For further information write President S. F. Pannabecker, Mennonite Biblical Seminary, 4614 Woodlawn Avenue, Chicago 15, Illinois.

"I have not the money and can't well afford the time to go into Voluntary Service. Perhaps I could take charge of your youth program during the summer months. Perhaps I could relieve one of your Sunday school teachers during the summer. Or if you see a need in the local community during this summer for this one year, I should like to make that my project."

Maybe someone could furnish the music for the summer, for the year, or for several years.

We are rapidly becoming a professional nation. Many of the services that we used to perform for each other as a matter of duty we now have done for us professionally, for which we remunerate. This undermines our economy and weakens our witness as we go out away from home to serve in the name of Christ. If we will be faithful in these little things within our own circles, we will be much more effective in our total program.

MCC news & notes

CORNELIUS WALL TO VISIT AMERICAN CHURCHES

Cornelius Wall will visit Mennonite communities in the United States and Canada during August, September, and October to acquaint them with the growing work of the European Mennonite Bible School in Basel, Switzerland, of which he is the principal.

Arrangements for these speaking engagements are currently being made and will be announced when final. Purpose of Brother Wall's deputation is to provide American churches with a first-hand account of this new school which is playing an increasingly-important role in the training of European Mennonite youth as church workers.

Brother and Sister Wall, whose home is in Mountain Lake, Minn., will arrive in the United States early in August and return to Europe late in October in time for the 1955-56 school term. The Walls are now in their second term of MCC service in Europe. In addition to work with the Bible school, they minister to various German Mennonite groups in Bible conferences, youth retreats, and personal visitations.

The Walls are well known in North America because of their church connections and extensive ministry among the churches. Brother Wall has been superintendent of the Mountain Lake Bible School and a faculty member of the Mennonite Brethren Bible College, Winnipeg, Man.

JORDAN SUFFERS FROM DROUGHT

Ada and Ida Stoltzfus of Morgantown, Pa., write that Jordan has received some late rains providing moisture for summer crops and badly-needed water for cisterns. They report, however, that in some of the frontier villages around Hebron where the fresh water spring is across the line in Jewish territory, water is becoming very scarce. "We shall need to buy and haul water if we wish to keep our milk-feeding centers open where dry skim milk powder is mixed daily for children," they write. MCC personnel and other American voluntary agencies have been spending considerable time and effort working with Jordan government officials planning the proper distribution of U.S. government food surplus to persons in need as a result of very limited rainfall during the winter.

SENATE COMMITTEE CONDUCTS DRAFT EXTENSION HEARINGS

The Armed Services Committee of the U.S. Senate was planning to conduct hearings on the extension of the regular draft and the doctors' draft on June 9 and 10. The MCC Peace Section testimony expressing opposition to the draft extension was scheduled for the afternoon of June 9.

The Senate Armed Services Committee was not scheduling hearings on reserve and UMT legislation in connection with hearings on the draft extension. At this time it does not appear that the reserve and UMT legislation will receive further consideration in this session of Congress. The House of Representatives found it necessary to table this legislation because of the controversial issues attached to it.

PRAIRIE VIEW VOTED INTO NATIONAL ASSOCIATION

Prairie View Hospital, Newton, Kan., has been voted into membership in the National Association of Private Psychiatric Hospitals. The other two MCC mental hospitals—Brook Lane Farm and King's View Homes—have previously been admitted.

IRAQ 1-W MAN ILL WITH POLIO

Albert L. Holloway, a Quaker youth whose 1-W assignment under International Voluntary Service in Iraq was facilitated by MCC, is ill with polio in the American University of Beirut Hospital. He has been in an iron lung since arrival in Beirut May 13. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Emry Holloway, Route 1, Hanoverton, Ohio. Your prayers in behalf of his recovery are solicited.

The proceeds this year will be divided for missions, relief, and education and publication. The Friendly Circle of the church entertained their daughters at a "Mother-Daughter" banquet. The mothers provided a tasty carry-in supper, afterwards the daughters had an entertaining program for the mothers. About 80 attended.—Corr.

—Beatrice Church, Beatrice, Neb.: Arthur Regier, a student at Bethel College this past year, has very ably served from time to time in the absence of a regular pastor. Other ministers have also served, thus helping us until our new pastor, Rev. and Mrs. Ralph Weber, will take up the work. They plan to arrive the beginning of July. Our weekly Bible study and prayer meetings have met as usual, led by various members of the church. The Freeman College choir gave a concert here on Good Friday. May 8, J. Laurel Mullet met with us to discuss plans for a new church building. He has been chosen as the architect. Daily vacation Bible school began May 30 to continue for two weeks. We have had a fine response in past years.—Mrs. Elmer Frantz, Corr.

—Meadow Church, Mingo, Kan.: "I have set the Lord always before me; because He is at my right hand, I shall not be moved," Psalm 16:8. We praise the Lord for the beautiful rain we received recently. The wheat looks promising. The men worked on the church yard, leveling it and planting trees. Nine young people of our church graduated from six different high schools and academies this year. Our Mission Society had a food sale in Colby April 30. The proceeds will go toward purchasing a new electric sewing machine. May 12 a group of our ladies had services in several homes for shut-ins in Colby to give them a little cheer. It was a blessing to us. A group from the Berean Bible Academy, Elbing, Kan., gave us a program in song and word, May 25. Sunday, May 29, our group went to Garden City, Kan., for a Singing Festival, which includes all the western Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas Mennonite churches. J. Christian Weiss from Lincoln, Neb., was the speaker. We began our DVBS May 31. We have nine teachers, four of these are assistants.—Corr.

—Lorraine Ave. Church, Wichita, Kan.: Funeral services for William Mierau, one of our charter members who passed away March 24, were held in his home community of Halstead. During Holy Week our pastor led in a series of services in the Goessel Church. April 17 a panel of General Conference speakers, Erland Waltner, Elmer Ediger, C. J. Dyck, discussed various aspects of the Mennonite Church. April 19 Cornelius Krahn of Bethel College spoke, and music for the evening was presented by the college "Madrigalians" under the direction of David Suderman. April 24 the Bethel College a cappella choir presented a musical service under the direction of Walter Hohmann. Many of our men, including the pastor, attended the Mennonite Men's Retreat on April 24. Our pulpit was filled that morning by Miss Kathryn Millsap, who is chaplain at Wesley Hospital in our city. Mr. and Mrs. Elvin Buller announce the name of their son, born March 5, has been changed to Douglas Bruce Buller.—Mrs. Emry A. Ruth, Corr.

short sermon by our pastor were enjoyed for our Easter evening service. April 13 and 14 brother and sister Harder attended the workshop at Turpin, Okla. A number of others attended some of the sessions. We enjoyed having with us Dan Dalke of Whitewater, Kan., for a week of evangelistic services, May 8-13. Mrs. Allison Unruh and Lucine Harder were received into the membership of our church May 15. John Harder and family went to Hutchinson, Kan., for the farewell service of his sister Agnes, who is a missionary to Africa, May 8. Several special numbers were given in memory of Mother on Mother's Day.—Mrs. J. B. Friesen, Corr.

—Eigenheim Church, Rosthern, Sask.: The benches which our church had ordered from Steinbach, Man., arrived May 19. Having had very fine weather here the past week the farmers are busy getting their crops in. H. B. Jantzen and his daughter Sara Ann from Beatrice, Neb., visited their relatives and friends here for a week. We are looking forward to the mission conference which is to be held in Saskatoon, Sask., June 3-5. Andrew Shelly, Helen Kornelson from India, and Peter Dyck from Moundridge, Kan., are the speakers. Most of the young people turned out for the first party and wiener roast of the season, May 22, which was sponsored by the Y. F. It was an enjoyable evening for everyone.—Rudy Klaassen, Corr.

—Bethesda Church, Marion, S. D.: On Mother's Day we observed our annual children's consecration when eight babies were consecrated. Twelve individuals were baptized on Pentecost. Our daily Bible school is in session and will conclude with a closing program. We are collecting Christmas Bundles and are planning a dedication service on June 5. Our minister has begun the "Way of Life" class for the young people. The brick blocks and rafters have arrived for our new church building. Work will begin again when the bricklayers can come. Several of our members gathered at the parsonage one evening recently to celebrate Pastor T. A. van der Smissen's birthday.—Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Our pastor, James Reusser has been giving a series of talks on Mennonite History on Sunday evenings following C. E. Eight of our young people are graduating from high school this month. They are: Colleen Nussbaum, Elizabeth Lehman, Rose Marie Gerber, Marlene Moser, John Earl Sprunger, Ronald Raber, and Tom Brown. Baccalaureate services were held at the Dalton High School building on Sunday afternoon, May 15, with our pastor bringing the message. Born to Mr. and Mrs. Ward Hofstetter a son, named James Ward, on May 19. Our young people are planting a plot by the parsonage in field corn and another in wheat, the proceeds to be used for a mission project.—Mrs. Earl Hofstetter, Corr.

Weather Reports Shake Confidence

Uganda's government radio station is dropping its broadcasts of weather forecasts; because native African listeners considered the prediction for the day a definite government promise.

If the weather during the day did not match the morning forecast, the officials said the natives held that it proved all government announcements made on that day were "a pack of lies."

It is humanly impossible for a forecaster to perfectly predict the weather daily, hence the Uganda government is acting wisely in dropping its broadcasts of weather reports. It cannot afford to lose the confidence of its subjects in its promises.

All that the Lord predicted for the past has been literally fulfilled; and all His predictions regarding present day conditions are being literally fulfilled, hence there is no justification for losing confidence in His promises, which are "exceeding great and precious" (2 Peter 1:4).

All the promises of God are affirmed by His "I will," and they are sealed by His "Amen"; and so God is glorified through our faith in His promises.

"Standing on the promises that cannot fail,
When the howling storms of doubt and fear assail,
By the living Word of God I shall prevail,
Standing on the promises of God."

time? Or, better yet, could not the churches, after figuring their share of the financial load of these church institutions, place this amount in their budget so that no special solicitation would be necessary? In fact some churches are doing just that. Perhaps the Board of Trustees and Finance can help churches to inaugurate such a worthy plan. "Let everything be done in decency and in order."

Into the Beyond

JONAS SOLDNER, of Fresno, California, and member of the Mennonite Community Church, Fresno, was born Nov. 12, 1861, and died May 21, 1955. He had been a schoolteacher for 45 years. He was the oldest charter member of the church.

Film Review

FIRE UPON THE EARTH, color, 16 mm. sound, 26 minutes. Available from Association Films; in Canada, from General Films Limited, 810 Confederation Bldg., Winnipeg, Manitoba. Rental $10.00.

This film was produced by the Presbyterian Church to be used with the church school curriculum during the year the church is the theme. It was later made available to all denominations through the various film rental agencies.

The film portrays the history of the Christian Church from the time of Jesus to the present. It does this in an interesting and reverent manner.

It can be used for inspirational purposes to portray the glorious history of the church as well as its significance and permanence. It can also be used effectively to introduce the history of the church in a summer conference or in a youth group.

The film does not contain any particular denominational emphasis so would be equally helpful for all Protestant denominations.

There are no actual living characters in the film. The story is told by using still art pictures. The effect of motion is secured to some extent throughout the picture. Living characters would probably be more effective and yet the film will be meaningful for ages from junior high on up.

WHAT GOD WANTS

"In the beginning was the Word," so we read in the Gospel of John about our Lord Jesus Christ. "And the Word was with God" tells us something about God. In the lonely time before Creation, God was not alone. There was someone with Him, for God did not want to be alone. He wanted someone to keep Him company. For that reason Christ was with Him—"And the Word was with God."

What God wants for himself, He wants for man, too. He doesn't want man to be lonely. He wants him to have fellowship.

For that reason Christ came. He went to those lengths to die and shed His blood that we might have fellowship with God and God could have fellowship with us.

Christ redeems us from loneliness. Christ brings us fellowship. The saved person finds fellowship in the Church and real friendship. Thus he finds fellowship within the world. He finds communion with God; thus he finds fellowship beyond the world. And God finds a person, perhaps the most important thing. For God wants people to be His friends.

TORNADO

One Friday night eighteen men patrolled the approaches to the city of Newton, Kansas, scanning the clouds in the sky anxiously while gusts of wind blew with increasing vigor. They watched for the approach of the ominous and threatening funnel-shaped cloud of the tornado. For just two nights before fierce winds blew through Blackwell, Oklahoma, and Udall, Kansas, destroying the town, killing scores of people and injuring many more.

Tornadoes are not uncommon in the spring and early summer in the Mississippi basin. The winds swirl overhead and only rarely touch the earth. And when they do, they only cut a narrow swath across the land. But this recent tornado killed 114 in four plain states and injured 700 more. In the small town of Udall, 170 homes were completely wrecked by the winds of the twister whose velocity causes the barometric pressure to drop so sharply that buildings in its path blow apart from the air pressure within. Of the remaining 19 homes 18 were so badly damaged that they will need to be completely rebuilt. Only one house in the whole town remained untouched.

Little wonder then that all policemen and firemen were on duty on that Friday evening when further tornado warnings were issued for Kansas. And with good reason people listened attentively to radio weather reports, and many others took their frightened children to the basements, just in case.

In a world where men can control much of their environment, men have felt secure in their own strength. A generation feels that it is master of the universe because it moves mountains, turns mighty rivers from their courses, tames a wilderness, and releases a year's supply of electrical energy from a handful of uranium. But when the tornadoes slice through the plain states, they are called to remember. There are greater forces in the land. They are not their own masters and their own saviors.

MENNONITE APOSTLE IN A FISH BOWL

We just had an addition to our household. One of our neighbors gave us a black goldfish. As I write this he is circling around in front of me in his glass bowl.

This floating fillet with bones is called "Midnight" (a name, which in my opinion, fails to express his true personality as the happy, radiant fellow he really is). He belongs to a species called the "Black Moor." His bulging eyeballs are bigger than his head, with his mouth the smallest part of his body.

Seeing him float around in his globe of water, I say "I sure am glad I'm not a fish living in a fish bowl."

For behold, what this guppy's world is made of. There is one quart of water, a piece of "seaweed," a plaster treasure chest, and a handful of colored marbles that our son donated to our finny-friend. That's it; these four and no more. And all he does is swim around in a circle six inches in diameter. Sometimes he just parks himself on the two inch level and twitches his six fins.

But I search his face for a little trace of boredom. "How is it, fellow," I say to him, "you have only four things in all the world to call your own, and you even look happy about it? You flutter around your little treasure chest as though it had all the world's money in it and you count your marbles with an adventuresome delight."

Perhaps this small black fish is a Mennonite apostle come to tell us about the simple life. I guess a fish will have to do it, because scarcely a soul mentions it. If we could get "Midnight" to push his head above water for a few minutes, he might tell us how to take the three or four things we have in life and make an adventure out of them. Perhaps he could give us a new point of view. Perhaps he could show us that worldly things are not nearly as important as faith in Christ.

Well, no, I don't think this little gill-breather can give us such a potent message. But someone needs to call on us to act our faith, so that we can live as though our lives depended on God and not on the things of this world.

The War-Flower

SIDNEY LANIER

The following selection, written during Civil War times, shows the attitude toward war by one of America's poets. It is from the work "Tiger Lilies," and is used by permission of the publishers, Charles Scribner's Sons.

> Thou shalt not kill.
> Love your enemies.
> Father, forgive them: they know not what they do.
> —Christ

The early spring of 1861 brought to bloom, besides innumerable violets and jessamines, a strange, enormous, and terrible flower.

This was the blood-red flower of war, which grows amid thunders; a flower whose freshening dews are blood and hot tears, whose shadow chills a land, whose odors strangle a people, whose giant petals droop downward, and whose roots are in hell.

It is a species of the great genus, sin-flower, which is so conspicuous in the flora of all ages and all countries, and whose multifarious leafage and fruitage so far overgrow a land that the violet, or love-genus, has often small chance to show its quiet blue. The cultivation of this plant is an expensive business, and it is a wonder, from this fact alone, that there should be so many fanciers of it. A most profuse and perpetual manuring with human bones is absolutely necessary to keep it alive, and it is well to have these powdered, which can be easily done by hoofs of cavalry-horses and artillery-wheels, not to speak of the usual method of mashing with cannon-balls. It will not grow, either, except in some wet place near a stream of human blood; and you must be active in collecting your widows' tears and orphans' tears and mothers' tears to freshen the petals within the mornings.

It requires assiduous working; and your labor-hire will be a large item in the expense, not to speak of the amount disbursed in preserving the human bones alive until such time as they may be needed, for, I forgot to mention, they must be fresh, and young, and newly-killed.

It is, however, a hardy plant, and may be grown in any climate, from snowy Moscow to hot India.

It blooms usually in the spring, continuing to flower all summer until the winter rains set in: yet in some instances it has been known to remain in full bloom during a whole inclement winter, as was shown in a fine specimen which I saw the other day, grown in North America by two wealthy landed proprietors, who combined all their resources of money, of blood, of bones, of tears, of sulphur and what not, to make this the grandest specimen of modern horticulture, and whose success was evidenced by the pertinacious blossoms which the plant sent forth even amid the hostile rigors of snow and ice and furious storms. It is supposed by some that seed of this American specimen (now dead) yet remain in the land; but as for this author (who, with many friends, suffered from the unhealthy odors of the plant), he could find it in his heart to wish fervently that these seed, if there be verily any, might perish in the germ, utterly out of sight and life and memory and out of the remote hope of resurrection, forever and ever, no matter in whose granary they are cherished!

But, to return.

It is a spreading plant, like the bunyan, and continues to insert new branch-roots into the ground, so as sometimes to overspread a whole continent. Its black-shadowed jungles afford fine cover for such wild beasts as fraud and corruptions and thefts to make their lair in; from which, often, these issue with ravening teeth and prey upon the very folk that have planted and tended and raised their flowery homes!

Now, from time to time, there have appeared certain individuals (wishing, it may be, to disseminate and make profit upon other descriptions of plants) who have protested against the use of this war-flower.

Its users, many of whom are surely excellent men, contend that they grow it to protect themselves from oppressive hailstorms, which destroy their houses and crops.

But some say the plant itself is worse than any hailstorm; that its shades are damp and its odors unhealthy, and that it spreads so rapidly as to kill out and uproot all corn and wheat and cotton crops. Which the plant-users admit; but rejoin that it is cowardly to allow hailstorms to fall with impunity, and that manhood demands a struggle against them of some sort.

But the others reply, fortitude is more manly than bravery, for noble and long endurance wins the shining love of God; whereas brilliant bravery is momentary, is easy to the enthusiastic, and only dazzles the admiration of the weak-eyed since it is as often shown on one side as the other.

But then, lastly, the good war-flower cultivators say, our preachers recommend the use of this plant, and help us mightily to raise it in resistance to the hailstorms.

And reply, lastly, the interested other-flower men, that the preachers should preach Christ; that Christ was worse hailed upon than anybody, before or since; that He always refused to protect himself, though fully able to do it, by any war-banyan; and that he did not inveigh against it more earnestly than any thing else, as the highest and heaviest crime against Love—the Father of Adam, Christ, and all of us.

Friends and horticulturists, cry these men, stickling for the last word, if war was ever right, then Christ was always wrong; and war-flowers and the vine of Christ grow different ways, insomuch that no man may grow with both! . . .

Four Inches of Wedding Gown

MRS. JAMES W. BIXEL

In a recent newspaper appeared a column of printed matter eleven inches long reporting a typical wedding. More than one-third of the total article was concerned with the gown of the bride, describing it in minute detail. Almost as much space was given to the names and dresses of the maid-of-honor, the four bridesmaids, and the flower girl. Also listed were the names of the best man and five ushers, a description of the bride's going-away costume, the flowers used, the particulars of the reception, the educational background of the couple, and their plans for the future.

This does not sound like a Christian wedding but a fashion review. The only clue that it was of a religious nature was that Rev. So-and-so performed the ceremony and that it took place in a church.

A wedding is a festive occasion, and it is not suggested that a special dress or efforts to provide an attractive setting is out of place. Nor is the inclusion of one's close friends in the service undesirable. It is the emphasis on the externals, the excesses, which cause concern.

The wedding should also be a worship service, and as such, remind the couple and the guests that marriage is a state instituted by God, and is not to be entered into lightly. This might be more easily achieved if the service followed an order of worship similar to a Sunday morning service—which may look like this:

Prelude and/or processional by the organist
Hymn by the congregation
Invocation by the minister
Lord's Prayer by the congregation
Hymn by the congregation
Scripture reading and sermon
Special music
Marriage ceremony
Prayer and blessing
Hymn by the congregation
Recessional by the organist.

When considering organ music for the ceremony, the traditional wedding music should be examined. Frequently most of that played is taken from a non-religious context. The two wedding marches most used come from theatrical settings: one tragic (Lohengrin) and the other nonsensical (Mendelssohn). In place of these secular pieces one could play the "Air for the G String" by Bach, arranged for organ, and found in many collections, the "Trumpet Tune in D" by Purcell[1] or the "Processional" from Judas Maccabeus by Handel.[1] Preceding these, as prelude music, two chorale preludes, "Lord Jesus Christ, Be Present Now" by Johann Gottfried Walter[2] and "Let Us Ever Walk With Jesus" by Walter E. Buszin[2] are fitting selections. Also available in many editions of organ music and appropriate as preludes are "Arioso in A Major," "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring" and "Sheep May Safely Graze," all by Bach. A "Prelude in C Major" by Bach[3] can be used either as a processional or recessional (as can many of the other pieces named) or Handel's "Postlude in G Major"[3] as a recessional. (See footnote for names of collections). A hymn or series of hymns which are played well and chosen wisely may also be used effectively. Or one may use hymns sung by the congregation as processional and recessional and omit the organ music entirely.

In choosing hymns for congregational singing one finds many in our Mennonite Hymary which may be used for weddings. The editorial in The Mennonite, May 17, mentions "Joyful, Joyful, We Adore Thee." Another might be one of the greatest hymns in the English language, "O God, Our Help in Ages Past." There are other hymns of praise also fitting.

Suggestions for a second hymn might be the following: one written especially as a wedding hymn, "O Perfect Love"; a hymn picked from the section in the Hymnary on the Christian Home, "Lord of Life and King of Glory"; the metrical version of Psalm Twenty-Three (p. 579); or "Take Thou My Hand, O Father." A hymn of benediction for the closing may be "Jesus, Our Savior Grant Us Thy Peace," or of dedication, "We Give Thee But Thine Own," or others carefully chosen.

When selecting songs for a soloist or small group, care should be taken not to use secular music. Perhaps by using the definition of a hymn as accepted by the Hymn Society of America and substituting the word 'song' for 'hymn' one could develop a guide to the selection of music for the "special music" part of the service. The definition would read thus: "A Christian (song) is a lyric poem, reverently and devotedly conceived, which is designed to be sung and which expresses the worshiper's attitude toward God, or God's purposes in human life." This would eliminate songs such as "The Bells of St. Mary's," "Because," "Always," "Through the Years," "Entreat Me Not to Leave Thee," and songs which have a religious text but music of a secularistic type, such as "The Lord's Prayer" by Malotte. Rather one might use "Jesus Shepherd, Be Thou Near Me," Bach,[4] "O Father All Creating" by Buxtehude,[4] or "The Lord Bless You" by Bach.[4] These are from collections (see footnote) that are not beyond the capabilities of anyone who can learn "Because."

After such participation in hymns, Scripture, prayer, and religious song, the congregation should be in a worshipful mood, ready to hear and meditate upon, the words of the marriage ceremony itself. Such a worship experience, with the congregation taking part in the establishment of a new home, should be one of beauty and one which would be remembered by all.

How to Make Sure You Are Saved

Some claim one cannot be sure of salvation in this life, but one must wait until after death to find out whether he will get to heaven or not. According to the Word of God you can know now. First several sensible things must be done.

1. REPENT. Repentance is turning from sin to God. There is no use to deny our sinfulness or to try to cover it up. There is no hope for any of us to be saved unless we are willing to give up sin. Luke 13:3.

2. "BELIEVE on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," Acts 16:31. Believe what God said. He sent His Son to save us from our sins. Jesus died for our sins, rose again a victorious, everliving Savior; now able to save to the uttermost all that come to God by Him. Don't trust yourself, your own goodness, your church or religious leader, or even your best friend—Depend on Jesus as your Savior, believe in Him as God's appointed and anointed means of forgiveness.

3. ASK Jesus to forgive your sin and save your soul. "Call on the name of the Lord." Do not glory in your goodness as did the man who went up to the temple to pray, but like the publican, cry humbly to God for mercy. Only the Lord Jesus can save you; ask Him personally to do it for you. "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved," Romans 10:13.

4. OBEY JESUS IN EVERYTHING. If Jesus is to be your eternal Savior, and if you are going to own Him as such before men, you will have to act accordingly. Let people know that you have decided to trust and follow Him. Be sincere. If you want Him to save you, let Him lead you always. Don't call Him Lord, unless you are willing to obey Him in every respect. If He is not Lord of all, He is not Lord at all. Jesus is your example as well as your Savior.

The repenting, believing, asking, and obeying sinner is now a saint, a born again one; a justified, sanctified person. 1 Cor. 1:2. You are not such by any good work of your own, but because you have accepted and met the conditions that are necessary in the divine birth of a soul. Salvation is a contract between God and man. It is a present possession. "He that believeth on the Son HATH everlasting life," John 3:36; 5:24; 6:47.

How Can You Know That You Are Saved?

By God's Word. The blood of Jesus Christ shed for your sins makes you safe, and the Word makes you sure. "These things have I written unto you . . . that ye may know that ye have eternal life," 1 John 5:13. Not that ye may hope or guess or think, but "that ye may KNOW."

You don't need feelings to know, but knowledge of what God says. "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved," Romans 10:13. Have you asked? Then where are you? He says, He saves such who ask. Then you must be saved. Also "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out," John 6:37. Have you come? Then where are you, out or in? He says He won't cast you out. Then He must have taken you in. Also it is written, "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God," John 1:12. Did you receive Him? Then what are you? You are His child, are you not?

You see, it depends on God's Word. Your feelings will change every day. Today you may "feel" saved; tomorrow, lost. But don't go by your feelings. Go by His Word. Believe what God says. Believe what is written. God's Word never changes. It is when you dare to believe that the Holy Spirit bears witness with your spirit that you are God's child. Thus you are sure of your salvation.

How Do You Remain Saved?

1. KEEP BELIEVING ON JESUS. Depend upon Him to keep your soul. 1 Peter 4:19; 2 Tim. 1:12. Don't ever start depending on your goodness for salvation. Keep looking to Jesus. "The just shall live by faith," not just get a pardon by faith, and then struggle on in the energy of self.

How to Become a Strong Happy Christian

1. "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," 2 Peter 3:18. You must grow if you want to please God. Put your roots in deeper every day if you want to survive the storms of life that will bear down on you as you grow older. Use all the divinely appointed means for spiritual growth: 1. Read God's Word with zest. 2. Pray daily. Ask God for what you want. Tell Him the truth about yourself, however bad it makes you. Ask Him, to forgive you and to make you what you ought to be. 3. Keep up church and Sunday school attendance. Warm Christian fellowship will prove a constant spiritual stimulus for every believer. Heb. 10:25.

2. LET GOD'S SPIRIT ALONE LEAD YOU. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Avoid letting the spirit of the world dominate you. Give yourself, body and soul, to God. Take no cues from human society, but let God's Spirit transform you by renewing your mind. Human society is largely sinful, and its ideals and morals grossly perverted. 1 John 2:15, 16.

Hear my prayer, O Lord, give ear to my supplications: in thy faithfulness answer me, and in thy righteousness. And enter not into judgment with thy servant: for in thy sight shall no man living be justified. Psalm 143:1, 2.

Working in the Church, Home, and Community

Meeting in Newton, Kansas, on May 25 and 26, the Committee on Education in the Church, Home, and Community of the Board of Education and Publication made plans to develop special educational materials for young and old.

Under the direction of Mrs. H. J. Andres, Newton, Kansas, a member of the committee, four program booklets were produced last year for children's groups. Added to the units already available, "Through the Year," "We Would See Jesus," "Light Comes to the Congo," and "Adventures for Christ in Colombia," will be three other units to be published during 1955. These are adaptable for use with junior age or intermediate (junior high school) age young people in Christian Endeavor or other similar meetings.

The committee assigned a number of topics to individuals for study, so that a series of tracts could be prepared. This series will cover such subjects as baptism, divorce, secret societies, and temperance.

Jacob T. Friesen, Beatrice, Nebraska, presented to the committee a statement of the purposes, procedures, and resources of leadership education which will be published as a leaflet in fall. Mrs. Harry Yoder, Washington, Illinois, was asked to develop a similar production in the field of family worship.

Erland Waltner, North Newton, Kansas, chairman of the committee, was given the task of revising the pamphlet, "What is the General Conference," by developing this into a series of seven tractlets which will cover this field of information about the General Conference Mennonite Church.

Being responsible for youth and children's work, the committee heard reports from the Young People's Union and the Mennonite Boys' League. Menno Schrag, Newton, Kansas, reported for the Mennonite Men on the project of developing the Mennonite Boys' League. A report on retreat work in the General Conference was given and plans made for coordinating the retreat work of the districts with possible district work conferences for retreat committees and workers. A similar project for the Sunday schools was also proposed and endorsed.

The committee appointed three of its members—Erland Waltner, Jacob Friesen and Henry Poettcker—to serve on the Findings Committee for the Study Conference on the Believers' Church which will be held in Chicago, August 23-25. The committee serves in this capacity since matters of doctrine are referred to them for study.

I will worship toward thy holy temple, and praise thy name for thy lovingkindness and for thy truth: for thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name. Psalm 138:2.

Flashes of Thought

The Unheeded Plea

Walter Gering

They were only children; after all, one could hardly expect them to understand. Yet it seemed so out of place. There was the speaker on the platform pouring out his heart in an earnest plea. He was in dead earnest; his plea was in behalf of the crucial need of the hour. And there were those children.

It was Memorial Day; a day dedicated to the memory of those who have gone to their eternal rest. The setting was perfect. Early in the morning the weatherman had announced that the wind velocity was zero. So it was; hardly a leaf moved. The recent showers had refreshed the land and the city park was flooded with the radiance of the summer day. What setting could be more inspiring, more in keeping with the thought of the day. The very spirit of peace and rest seemed to permeate the place.

Even the speaker had caught the spirit of the day. How often the Memorial speaker is but a tool in the hands of those who would glorify war and its devastating destruction; all in the name of patriotism. Not so the speaker of the morning. With keen insight into the meaning of the day and the need of the hour he struck boldly to the root of the matter. His plea was for active, aggressive measures to be taken in the interests of love, goodwill and understanding between the races and nations of the world. With deep feeling and conviction he made his plea for peace.

And in the midst of that passionate plea came the sound of the children's voices laughing and shouting in their pleasure. Holding on for dear life they were whirling round and round in circles on the merry-go-round. Up and down they kept sliding on the playground equipment.

No—I understood that they were only children. It was not that I begrudged them the enjoyment of the day. Why not be happy and full of glee? They were just children; the memory of those who had died could hardly make any impression upon them.

But I kept seeing the vision of those children as it changed form; it seemed to me that I could see a world shouting and laughing in its pleasures at a time when a passionate plea for steps toward peace was being made. All over this land of ours men were crying for sober thinking, pleading for love, understanding and goodwill among all men while it is yet time. And the people—whirling about in circles, sliding up and down in thoughtless glee were lifting their voices above the plea of the day. They had no time, were not interested in sober thinking.

The Scriptural

From a paper read at the April Hillsboro, Kansas, conference on the "Christians in Business."

"Here am I, for you called me," 1 Samuel 3:6.

In discussing the phenomenal spread of early Christianity, Edward Gibbon gives as prime cause the fact that "it became the most sacred duty of a new convert to diffuse among his friends and relations the inestimable blessing which he had received.' So tremendous was their witness that Gibbon believed it to be a definite factor leading to the decline and fall of the Roman Empire. That this rapid growth of the community of believers was indeed true is abundantly verified by Scripture.

There is a yearning today on the part of many Christians to recapture that early intensity of devotion and outreach. The early Christians exemplified what every believer is still commissioned to do—to confront men everywhere with the claims of Christ upon their lives and lead them to commitment, (Matt. 28:19). Theirs must have been a strong inner compulsion to cause them to act so dynamically. The problems they faced were probably as critical as those we face today. There was poverty, and persecution, and Roman domination; there was the skeptical mind of the Greek, the legalistic mind of the Jew, and the shallow indifference of the masses. And yet they were tremendously successful. Something had happened to them and they knew it.

A young man of conservative parentage decided to leave his home for employment in a distant mine. His parents feared that the rough fellowship of a mining camp might be detrimental to his spiritual life, but he reassured them and left. A year later he returned. After they had eaten and were settled down to visit the father asked, "Well son, wasn't it hard to be a Christian in that rough mining camp?" to which the son replied, "No, father, not at all. They never found out I was a Christian." This story would be humorous if it did not fall so close to home.

Today religion seems to have become increasingly unreal, or at least unfamiliar and irrelevant to the problems of daily living. There is a wide gulf between the church and the workaday world. In an effort to find a bond of understanding some churches have resorted to endless emphasis upon labor unions, upon racial problems, upon minimum wage legislation, and still cannot meet the needs of the people, for peace of mind does not come through faith in labor unions. On the other hand, many Christians show an almost complete indifference toward the social problems among which they live. They are not interested in man as a worker; they are interested in him only insofar as an immortal soul which must be saved. They state glibly that "Christ is the answer" without stopping to spell out what this means in terms of daily living.

The result is a typical twentieth century community which can be found almost anywhere in this nation. It will contain many religious people, but they will be religious in an indefinite way. In such a community the word "vocation" will have been made synonymous with "occupation" or "job." The meaning of any given job may not go beyond the pay check there, and life itself may seem an endless routine of dull monotony, broken occasionally by libertine flings, or for the religiously minded by periodic emotional releases at camp meetings. If the worker cannot find emotional satisfaction in his work he will seek it elsewhere; in a car clocking 98½ miles per hour, or in sensate amusements, or in unrealistic religious demonstrations. A great spiritual need of our day may well be the result of the frustrations and meaninglessness of daily work.

It is into this setting that the Christian concept of vocation can enter with force. On the purely secular level the word "vocation" has little meaning, but for the Christian it embodies the central purpose of his life. A vocation for him is a calling; it implies that there is someone who calls; and it believes that it is God himself who does the calling. It means that man has the glorious privilege of working for God and together with God (1 Cor. 3:9).

We find in the Scriptures much guidance for our thinking on vocation. True, the Bible does not present a listing of vocations permissible to Christians, nor does it discuss the problem of modern industrial life; yet we do find in it much guidance on the meaning of work, on the purpose of work, on the attitude Christians ought to take to work, and on the Will of God for the individual.

I. Work a part of the plan of God for man: It is clear that work was a part of God's plan for the human family. Contrary to a belief frequently held, work is not the result of The Fall (Gen. 2:15). The Fall merely put the "sting" into work. The original ordinance of God was that man by nature and creation was not meant for idleness but for responsible work.

In looking into Hebrew history we see readily that they did not look upon work as a curse but rather as a blessing. Some of the most bitter denunciations of the prophets are reserved for the idle rich (Amos 6:3-6). The ordinary Hebrew word for "servant' ('ebed) means "worker." The great Old Testament men of God are frequently depicted as working Noah building the ark, Saul ploughing, David herd ing his sheep.

That man was created with the intention that h should work is also clearly evident from the New Testament. The disciples were laboring men. Luk was a physician, Paul had a trade, and went eve further, stating that "if anyone will not work, le him not eat," (2 Thess. 3:7-12). Jesus himself als worked and honored work by using it in comparison to highest ideals—the quest of souls was compared to the work of fishermen or harvesters; the gospel was as seed strewn on the ground; the kingdom itself was as a baker's yeast. Far from being a hindrance to Christian living, work is considered a necessary ingredient of it according to the New Testament.

II. God has a plan for every man: This is a central biblical truth. From the pages of Scripture we see that the lives of nations and of individuals have remained largely meaningless until they found God's plan for their life and identified themselves with it. God had a plan for His people Israel and their happiness depended upon their obedience to and co-operation with this plan of God. This was equally true of individuals. God had a plan for Abraham, for Joseph, for Moses, for Samuel, Jonah, Isaiah, Jeremiah. In the New Testament, particularly among Christ's own teachings we find everywhere the assumption that God has a plan for each individual. He has as many plans as there are people. Jesus told His disciples how the Father cared for the sparrows and the lilies, and so much more for man (Matt. 6). Even the hairs of their head were numbered. The parable of the talents too illustrated the fact that God had a definite purpose and work for each individual. God did not create man for the fun of it like a child makes mud cakes; God created man for a purpose. Happiness comes when man finds that purpose and responds.

III. God calls His people to service: It is one of the tragedies of our time that many people are going about their daily routine without any sense of call. Some 70 per cent of all Americans have already chosen their occupation by the age of fifteen. Most of the choices, according to John O. Nelson, are made on the basis of "the first chance I got," or a casual response to a want ad in the paper, or the following out of a family destiny, or some equally capricious cause. (We Have This Ministry, p. 3). The results are disastrous for it is only in the light of the calling of God that the work of an individual achieves real significance. A sense of call gives meaning to the most menial task; it abolishes classification of work into more important and less important, for in the sight of God all men are equal. The street cleaner can be as much in harmony with the will of God as can the missionary. God calls, man responds.

In this connection a common problem is how to know the call as of God. God calls in many ways; through the seeing of a great unmet need, through the influence of circumstances or events, through our fellow men, or through the still small voice. His call does not necessarily come as a bolt out of the blue or in some deeply mysterious way, yet he who is fully dedicated to follow obediently need not fear that he will miss the call.

In thinking of our calling there is a danger of limiting this to daily occupational activities. It would seem, however, that calling in the biblical sense, is meant to embrace everything that a Christian is and does. This includes his occupational activity, but goes much farther; it encircles his total life. Whatever he does day in and day out must contribute in some way to the kingdom of God. This approach will soon eliminate the artificial distinction between "sacred" and "secular" work. Every New Testament believer is summoned to full time Christian work, while a few are called to church vocations.

IV. Men are called to serve with a diversity of gifts: No one has been called of God because of previous ability or merit; all alike are the recipients of grace and love. Therefore none can boast. To each believer the Holy Spirit will give tasks appropriate to his calling and the necessary capacities to fulfill his mission will also be given (Minear, Work and Vocation, 71). Out of this attitude comes the conviction that no work done in the Name of the Lord is done in vain (1 Cor. 15:58; Rev. 14:13).

There is an unfortunate tendency today to measure the prestige of work and the worker by wage and salary rates, but a large bank account is no guarantee of treasure in heaven. We must be liberated from the bondage which such attitudes create. The Christian is willing to exchange the judgment of the world for the ultimate judgment of God concerning his success or failure (1 Cor. 7:29-31). There are diversities of gifts, but one Lord whom we all serve (1 Cor. 12:5). It is sobering too to remember that God, who gave us gifts, may alter or revoke them at any time.

We know, therefore, that every worker receives some gift and is enabled in some manner to work with God in His great plan for the redemption of mankind. That is the Christian's vocation. As a part of this calling he does his daily work. Any work can become a holy calling when it is done in Christian obedience and consecration. Luther once said that when a mother washes dirty diapers she ought to remind herself that the love of God overcomes dirty sin in much the same way. Many occupations look dreary indeed, until they are seen from the Christian perspective.

God calls all men to serve Him, but many do not respond.

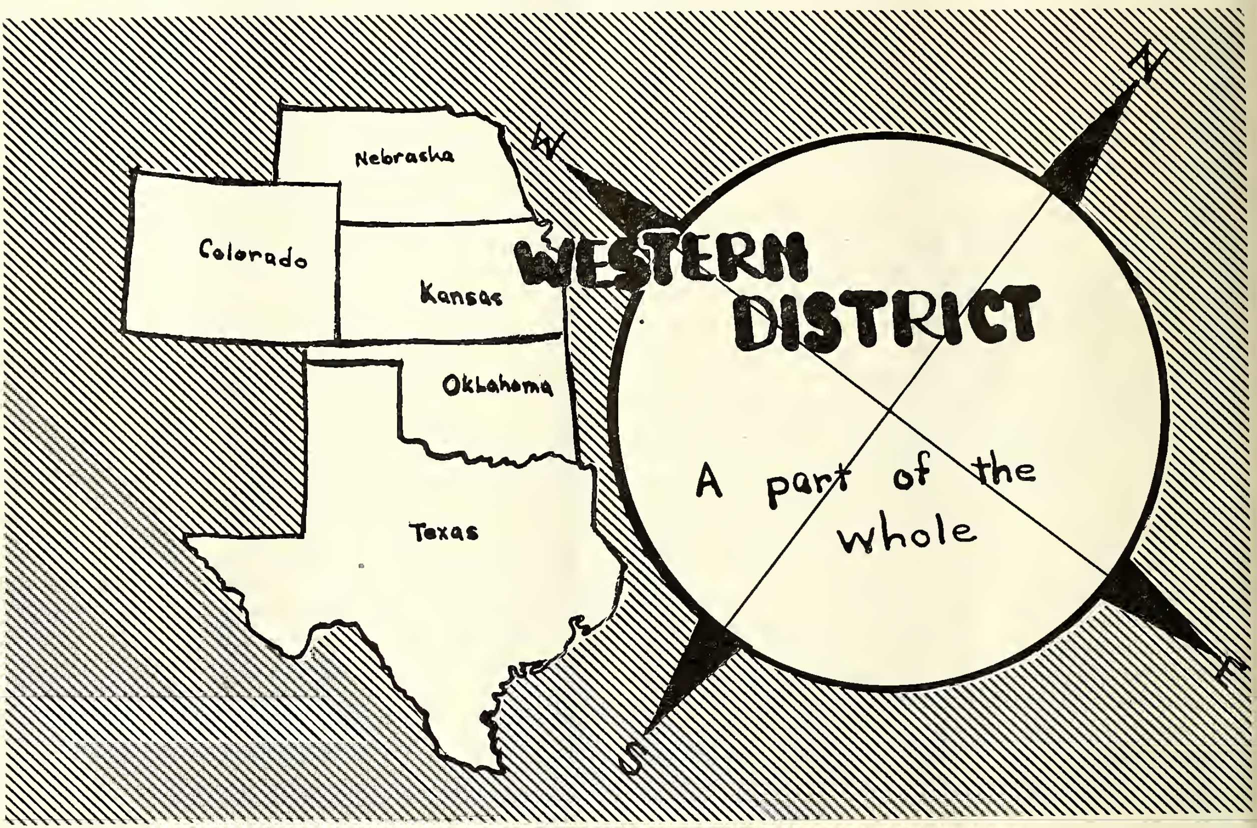
Yet, thank God—not all. Standing out at the cemetery service the one standing at my side, deeply moved, said: "I can't forget that message." Yes, the world will go on in its thoughtless shouting and cry. But God has spoken: "My Word shall not return unto me void. It shall accomplish that where unto I have sent it." Confident in this assurance men will continue to make their God-inspired plea.

Mennonite Youth

Sponsored by the Young People's Union of the General Conference, Editor, Lois Duerksen, North Newton, Kansas



Thoughts on Young People's Work

Are we realizing the YPU's objective of a "United Mennonite Youth in Christ"? How many young people are there in the Western District Conference? Is a budget of $7500, of which approximately $1800 is for the YPU a reasonable one? Should there be an organization for young married couples? These and many other questions were answered by fifty-two churches through a questionnaire submitted to the Western District Conference Churches.

Forty-seven churches reported that the number of young people between the ages of 12 and 14 is 532; between 15 and 18 is 643; and between 19 and 30 is 1063. Twenty-four out of the fifty-one churches responding to the question "Do you feel you are reaching in your young people's organization those above high school age and single?" or 47 per cent said that they were reaching half or less. Thirty-nine churches responded to a similar question dealing with young married couples, with 46 per cent saying they were reaching few of their young married couples and 25 per cent saying that they were reaching about half of this group. Twenty-six churches favored a separate young people's organization for young married couples and fourteen said "No" and three churches were undecided. Some of the churches who were undecided and others who cast a negative ballot felt that there were too few couples in the church for an effective organization. Apparently there is a marginal size church and when the membership falls below this line, the work of the kingdom becomes more difficult. Perhaps we need more of the vision of the young pastor who stated that he thought there should be an organization for young married couples and then added that he and his wife were the only young couple in the church.

What is the future of the Christian Endeavor? Thirty-one of the Western District Churches reported that they had one or more C. E. organizations, often reaching nearly everyone in the church. Eleven churches had a young people's organization for those of high school age. Their average attendance was 157 and their enrollment 217. Twenty-one churches had a young people's organization that included high school students and above with an average attendance of 455. Six churches had special organizations for young married couples with an average attendance of 134. These organizations have a combined average attendance of 746. Fifteen churches had a

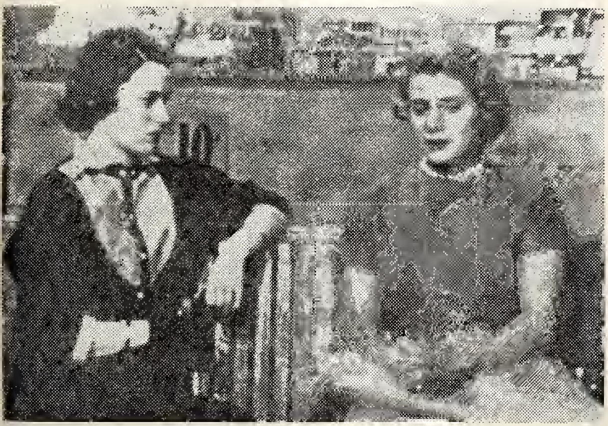
The Film FOUR TO GO

One for the money,

When you hear preachers encourage us to witness for Christ, have you ever wondered how you might do this? Many devout young Christians would be glad to witness if they were sure they knew how to do it and what to say. Others may feel that witnessing is just not "in their field." Some may even recoil from the thought of getting up in a meeting to "give a testimony" and display before the public their most sacred experiences of life. There is need to help young people understand more clearly just what Jesus had in mind when He told us to be His witnesses.

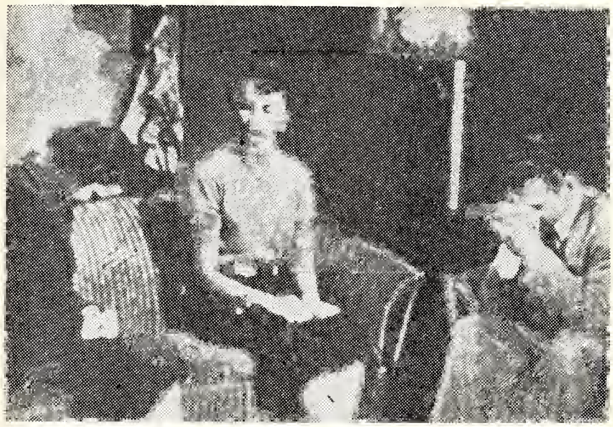


Two for the show,

A new moving picture on youth evangelism entitled, "Four To Go," could help us to get the "feel" of what witnessing is. The film makes us aware of the people who need our witness, and it strengthens us in our conviction that Christ really is the answer to the needs of people. It somehow succeeds in warming our hearts to the point where we would like to make our lives count by showing others the way of salvation through faith, and fellowship with Christ. It gives us a concept of witnessing to which young people will give glad and wholehearted assent.

The film, "Four To Go," is a direct and frank story of how young people set out to do something about winning the unchurched in their community to Christ and the Church. Marty, a winsome, earnest young Christian, feels that she is not cut out to do evangelistic work, but she has a very warm heart for some young friends who have gotten themselves into trouble. She was surprised to discover that what she had been saying to her friends to help them was witnessing for Christ.

The film provides an excellent basis for a discussion on how young people can meet their responsibilities. It is a fact of life that we can make our best witness to those of our own group. That is why young people can make their best contribution by helping other young people who need Christ in their lives. This the film points up for us.



Three to make ready,

The officers of the Western District Young People's Fellowship are planning to call regional meetings of C. E. officers to discuss how this film might be used to encourage the young people of our churches to meet the responsibilities and opportunities of their respective communities. The Western District Home Mission and Education Committees have bought this film for the young people. The officers of the WDYPF and the Field Worker will jointly work with the local C. E. societies to help them meet their local opportunities.

W. F. Unruh

And FOUR TO GO.

Why Youth Fellowships?

Why do we have youth fellowships? What do we expect from these meetings? With what kind of attitude do we approach this phase of our church life? At a meeting last March which a number of the officers of our youth groups attended, some of these questions were discussed. Not all young people have the same attitudes, naturally; and some undoubtedly have higher ideals than others. Nevertheless, we shall consider some of the attitudes expressed at the March meeting.

Older people sometimes forget our exuberance. Some of those youthful dreams and aspirations, and the energy to see them fulfilled, have fallen by the wayside. They can't understand why we are dissatisfied with things as they are. They don't realize that our new ways of doing things are a result of a search for something higher and nobler. Perhaps our youthful exuberance and surplus energy do take us off the "beaten path" at times. Is that bad? Don't we all make mistakes? After all "A mistake is evidence that somebody has tried to do something."

All of us are familiar with the expressions: "What's this generation coming to?" or "The present generation is going to the dogs." Many things we see, and read, and hear, lead us to think there may be something to these remarks. Then we recall that they are repeated every generation, and have been for many generations. And if we really look into the subject, we become aware that the escapades, the disrespectful manners, the devil-may-care attitudes do not apply to all young people. We find many serious minded individuals; many who hide deep thoughts behind seemingly carefree appearances; many who are concerned about more than just fun; many who are willing and able to shoulder responsibility.

Is the youth fellowship merely a social organization—a place to which the young people can come to play and visit or be entertained? Some of us may think that is the primary aim of the organization. But listen to what some of our officers say.

"We want a place for Christian fellowship." Christian fellowship—just fellowship is not enough. It must be "Christian." We are not satisfied with just any kind of group; although we sometimes join other groups because we can find no Christian group. But we want Christian fellowship.

"We want a place in which we can serve Christ." Yes, we want to have fun, but we also want to serve. We want to serve Christ. We want our youth fellowship to provide us with opportunities for serving Christ in our own small way. We have been "saved to serve." Give us opportunities.

Look not always at the headlines portraying the seamy side of youth. Look not always at the dark and hopeless picture of our contemporaries. Look rather at those with loftier ideals and nobler aspirations. Look rather at those who have looked to God and are earnestly striving to follow His leading and make Him known, "For in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

THOUGHTS ON YOUTH WORK

junior C. E. with an average attendance of 342.

What do these figures mean? The questionnaire revealed that the decline in birth rate has reached our churches and that the percentage of old people is growing. If this is true, perhaps the time has come for the older people to help finance the program of the YPU more extensively! Also, many of the smaller churches feel that they cannot carry on a successful young people's program because of the small number of young people. That this obstacle can be overcome was demonstrated by the church that had four young people—a president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer, and had a very active young people's organization.

There is some confusion as to who is a young person? Is he a person 12 to 14? 15 to 18? 19 to 25? 25 to 30? Since mortality statistics indicate that we are becoming older, does this mean that we tend to lengthen the concept of young people to include those 21 to 30? Perhaps the time has come to subdivide the work of the young people's organization into more definite categories, such as juniors—ages 11 to 14; high school young people—ages 15 to 18; above high school—ages 19 to 24; and married young people—ages up to 30 or slightly above.

There is some confusion with reference to Christian Endeavors. In some churches this is the young people's organization. In others, it is largely in the hands of the old people, with the young people looking in and coveting positions of responsibility. There is also some question as to whether the C. E. programs, which consist largely of themes and special music, are sufficiently flexible to meet the needs of young people?

Our young people's work is not an appendix, but rather an integral part of our church. Young people contribute enthusiasm, idealism, energy, and an enormous aspiration to be of service and to be useful. They need opportunities, encouragement, fellowship among themselves and with adults, and guidance. Everyone and every age group is a vital link in God's program for mankind, and particularly our young people, so give them a hand of encouragement. They need the interest, prayers, and financial support of adults to carry out God's work as they see it.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The Mennonite Singers left the Bethel College campus June 6 on a chartered bus for Montreal, Canada, where they embarked for Europe on June 9.

The group of 24 singers had spent a week at Bethel in intensive practices under Dr. W. H. Hohmann, conductor and leader of the group. Parents and friends came to the campus to see the singers off. After gathering on the steps of the administration building a host of camera shutters clicked after which Pres. D. C. Wedel led in a brief devotional service.

The itinerary for the Mennonite Singers calls for concerts and broadcasts in Germany, Holland, Switzerland, and France. On August 16 they are scheduled to embark at Rotterdam for their return trip to the States.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Senior class officers for next year were elected recently by the junior class. These include: Sam Diller, Bluffton, president; John Rogers, Manchester, Conn., vice-president; Marjorie Ferguson, White Pigeon, Mich., secretary; and Dick Cripe of Goshen, treasurer.

Elected as next year's junior class officers were: George Bailey, Lima, Ohio, president; Jim Gundy, Graymont, Ill., vice-president; Joanne Slotter, Souderton, Pa., secretary; and Jerry Yost, Barto, Pa., treasurer.

Freshmen elected Don Pannabecker of Peoria, Ill., as sophomore president; Dorothy Bishop, Souderton, Pa., vice-president; Nancy Hostetler, Smithville. Ohio, secretary; and LaVerne Schirch of Chenoa, Ill., treasurer.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

A banquet, sponsored by the second-year students in honor of the eleven graduates, was held in the school chapel on Friday night. Their motto, "I have set thee a watchman," was very fittingly illustrated by the decorations of the room and tables. The mistress of ceremonies was Cornelia Lehn; while Mr. Frank Epp from Altona, a former graduate of the college, presented the message of the evening.

Several other graduates and ex-students and others visited the college during the past week. Among these were: Mr. and Mrs. Paul Dyck, who are preparing for missionary service in India, Rev. and Mrs. David Schroeder and Miss Mary Ann Hooge, who has spent the past winter at Bethel College. The C.M.B.C. closing program was presented June 11, in the First Mennonite Church. The following morning the Baccalaureate Service for the graduates was held in the Bethel Mission Church. The graduation exercies took place Sunday afternoon in the First Mennonite Church. A sod breaking service in connection with the building of the new college took place on the new college site immediately after the graduation exercises.

MCC news & notes

PREPARE LINEN KITS FOR UDALL TORNADO VICTIMS

At the suggestion of the Kansas All Mennonite Women's Committee, local women's groups have prepared linen kits for victims of the recent tornado disaster at Udall, Kan.

The decision to provide this assistance was reached when it was determined that the Red Cross would be making clothing available but not linens. The kits included a bar of soap, wash cloth, bath towel, sheet, pillow slip, and tea towel—all new items and wrapped in the towel.

Bundles were to be at the MCC Clothing Center in North Newton by June 15. Blankets were also being received for the people of Udall. It was hoped that Mennonite women would be able to help distribute the kits and thereby personalize these gifts and express Christian sympathy to the recipients.

AILSA CRAIG OPENING POSTPONED

Dedication and opening of Ailsa Craig Boys Farm previously anticipated for June has been postponed. At a meeting of the advisory council, a committee of three was appointed to plan the contribution of necessary funds during the summer months. It is hoped the results of this effort will make it possible for the Farm to be opened and dedicated in late summer or early fall. Ailsa Craig Boys Farm in Ontario is being developed as a Christian home and training school for about 20 adolescent boys who are emotionally-disturbed, pre-delinquent, or delinquent.

AIDING MENNONITES IN BERLIN

The welfare of Mennonites in Germany's East Zone is an increasing concern of European Mennonites and MCC. It is estimated there are about a thousand Mennonites living in the East Zone who have little contact with each other and who are like a flock without a shepherd because they cannot have normal church life.

A means of aiding them is by their visiting Menno-Heim—the MCC center and home of the Mennonite congregation in Berlin. At present a small number of East Zone Mennonites are invited each month to spend a week end of fellowship at Menno-Heim. Coming on Friday evening, they spend the week end in Bible study, worship, and fellowship. When they leave on Monday morning, they are given clothing and food and thus have received material and spiritual aid.

In an effort to enable East Zone Mennonites to take advantage of these opportunities, European Mennonite groups and MCC are planning to make funds available for them to travel to Berlin for occasional visits as can be arranged by the leadership of the Berlin congregation and MCC workers.

Dutch Mennonites have been showing their concern for their brethren by sending clothing to Berlin which is made available to the Berlin congregation and Mennonite East Zoners together with clothing and food from MCC.

A Kansas Mennonite, vitally interested in the welfare of 1-W men and their Christian witness, is purchasing a house near the University of Kansas Medical Center for this purpose. This house will serve as a center as well as residence for one or two couples and eight to 10 single 1-W men.

Reinhart Peters of Henderson, Neb., has been appointed as a 1-W leader in Kansas City by MCC. He will work with the men in effecting a 1-W organization for Christian fellowship and service. This organization is working with the unit of 1-W men in the Voluntary Service project in Kansas City General Hospital administered by the Mennonite Relief and Service Committee, Elkhart, Ind.

Other institutions in the Kansas City area in which 1-W's work are the Mennonite Children's Home and the University of Kansas Medical Center. Approximately 50 Mennonite CO's are employed in Greater Kansas City.
